"Special Travel Programs" is the title by which Edward McCray, manager of the Lyric theatre at Oskaloosa, Iowa, is drawing patronage to his theatre. These programs are given each Thursday and generally consist of two Paramount travel pictures, a Pictograph and a Cartoon Comedy. The price is the same as for feature productions and the attendance is always as large.

A matinee at four o'clock each Thursday afternoon, to which the school children of one of the schools of Oskaloosa are admitted free is one of the features of the program. It can easily be seen that this does not lessen the importance of the Lyric in the eyes of the school kids—or their parents, for that matter. In advertising these programs Mr. McCray's copy is headed "Easy Chair Journeys."

In the body of the advertisement is found some good live reading matter—matter that holds the attention until the end is reached. One of his recent lines is: "Not at railroad rates, but at five and ten cents."

HE COULD'T KEEP THE WOMEN AWAY —$75,000 FASHION SHOW

R. R. Russell, manager the Strand theatre, Evansville, Indiana, gave a five-day Fashion Show recently.

It was one of the most successful Fashion Shows ever staged by a Paramount exhibitor. Five of the large stores co-operated with Mr. Russell, who played to 17,-139 paid admissions during the five days.

Seventy-five thousand dollars worth of gowns, jewelry, shoes and furniture were shown by 142 different young ladies, posing as models, and over 300 different gowns, suits and other apparel were shown.

This is to be a permanent affair at the Strand, both Spring and Fall.

RUNS TWO SERIALS AT ONCE

A good piece of publicity work was inaugurated by Jake Miloslowsky of the Palace theatre, Des Moines, when his Billie Burke serial ran out. Mr. Miloslowsky got another serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery." In order to keep the interest of the Billie Burke crowd, Mr. Miloslowsky ran the last two episodes of this picture the same day he ran the first two of "The Crimson Stain" picture. Although there is a lot of difference in the two serials, Mr. Miloslowsky is of the firm opinion that this method will keep his serial lovers with him during "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

MARY MILES MINTER WILL BE KNOWN AS "THE GOLD AND WHITE" GIRL

Gold and white have been chosen as Mary Miles Minter's own colors.

Colleges and schools are known by their colors. So the Mutual has decided to give Mary Miles Minter, its dainty little fourteen-year-old star, the same mark of distinction. Hereafter, Miss Minter will be known as "the gold and white" girl.

Any number of attractive lobby displays have been devised for Mary Miles Minter Gold and White days, and may be obtained at the branch offices of the Mutual.

"Old Folks at Home" Given Appropriate Staging by Manager Von Herberg at the Liberty in Seattle

"THE Old Folks at Home" the Fine Arts release taken from the Rupert Hughes story, starring Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, was the screen classic that admirably lent itself to the unusual lighting and musical effects that are the "hobbies" of J. G. von Herberg of the Liberty Theatre, Seattle Wash. On each side of the Liberty screen are boxes in which were employed the lighting effects. The theatre was completely darkened as the familiar strains of "Home Sweet Home" were heard on the unit orchestra. At the end of the first bar, the left hand box was lighted up revealing on old homestead in the soft glow of the sunset. This quickly deepened to twilight when the windows of the house were illuminated. From twilight the scene darkened to night, the stars coming out one by one, the moon, a crescent, casting its beams down the walk faintly revealing the quaint picket fence in the foreground. At this point a dim red light was noticeable in the right hand box made to resemble an old fashioned sixteen framed window. This strengthened gradually showing "the old folks at home" seated before the fire-place, the glow of which faintly suggested the outlines of the room.

It takes much longer to tell of the staging than it did to operate, for all this was done while the organist played "Home, Sweet Home." The effect produced on the audience was dramatic in the extreme and the applause was instantaneous and prolonged. The title strip of the picture was flashed on the velvet curtain which was raised in time to frame the author's announcement. The cookie stealing episode produced a hearty laugh, proving a very satisfactory safety valve for the emotions of the audience stirred up by the music and staging.

Unusual business greeted this picture and so many comments and compliments were received on it, that Mr. Wallace, the organist, held over the effect another day for his Sunday noon concert, and played a request number of "Home, Sweet Home" with the above mentioned lighting effects.

NOVEL STUNT USED TO EXPLOIT "SHOES"

When Sisk & James of the American, Cherokee, Ia., showed "Shoes," they got the shoe stores in their city to decorate the windows and a display window in the theatre. The night of the picture a child picked out a pair of woman's shoes. The first woman they fitted won them. The winner had to go upon the stage in front of the screen, along with the other applicants, and try them on.

LIVE WIRE THAT HAD A KICK-BACK

The experiment was tried recently of "money back" to all patrons who could resist the lure of the final thrill in the "Crimson Stain Mystery" by a Minneapolis "live wire." The theory was good, all right, and the refunds were not asked for, until some of the "wise ones" among the patronage discovered they could stay through the show twice, for nothing. This was a live wire stunt that "kicked back."

BABIES IN AUDIENCE ARE PHOTOGRAPHED FOR OMAHA FIRM

Taking the pictures of every baby brought to the theatre at a certain set time, photographing the audience in the theatre, and pictures of Omaha places, all to form an Omaha-made picture, "A Twentieth Century Courtship," is the idea of Manager Thomas of the Strand theatre for boosting his attendance. Every relative of every baby—and there were scores of them—every relative of people in the theatre crowds, and there were hundreds of them, went to see the picture, to become acquainted with the comforts and beauties of the Strand, and, many of them, to become steady patrons.

"It paid as an advertising stunt," said Manager Thomas.

A Theatre That Packs Its House by Live Wire Methods

THEATRE MAKES GOOD WITH UNICORN PROGRAM

The Eureka theatre at Hoboken, New Jersey, is conducting a series of special Unicorn showings. At these performances, Manager Campo reports that he places an exhibition of Unicorn features, dramas, comedies, and western screen dramas, the result being a very material increase in the box office of this theatre.

Mr. Campo's house is one of the largest and most elaborately equipped in New Jersey, and he states that he was induced to install Unicorn features, owing to the demand of the patrons for this program. Mr. Campo intends to make a special display and advertising campaign, when he plays the "Billy West" comedies, which are the latest features to be released upon the Unicorn program.

On "Unicorn nights," Mr. Campo states that not only does he play to capacity, but that he has a long waiting list which in many cases he is unable to accommodate. Mr. Campo is planning in the near future, an extensive and aggressive advertising campaign, in connection with his featuring of the Unicorn program.

NEW MIDNIGHT THEATRE FOR CLEVELAND

Cleveland is to have a midnight photoplay theatre according to announcement made Friday by Louis Becht, manager of the Mall theatre now under construction two doors east of the present playhouse on Superior avenue N. E.

According to present arrangements, the performances will be given on Saturday nights beginning at 11:30 and finishing at 12:25.

The Mall is one of the few duplex theatres in the world, and the only one with one auditorium above the other, each with an entrance on a different street. The entrance to the lower auditorium will be from Superior avenue, while the upper one will be accessible from Euclid avenue, which is fifteen feet higher than Superior.

"ANY SHOES, ANY BOTTLES, ANY RAGS TODAY"

An Elyria picture theatre manager advertised recently that he would accept old shoes in lieu of admission tickets from children while he was exhibiting Mary MacLaren's picture, "Shoes." He collected 150 pairs and gave them to charity. Not to be outdone an Urbana proprietor advertised that he would accept an egg or two potatoes at the children matinee. He reports that he got too many eggs and potatoes to count and gave them all to charity, except one egg which broke and was discovered bad.

VIOLINIST GIVES RECITAL AT REGENT, BUFFALO, NEW YORK

The first Musical Evening at the Regent theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., last week, proved to be a popular innovation. Arthur C. Snelgrove, well-known Buffalo violinist, appeared in a repertoire of popuar and classical numbers. Miss Pearl Smith, contralto soloist, will give a recital this Friday evening. This music feature is given in addition to the regular program.

Placards Worded Like Patent Medicine Advertisement Make Effective Publicity for Kolb and Dill Film

ATLANTIC CITY, Iowa, awoke the other morning to find itself placarded from end to end with posters of all shapes, colors and sizes, urging the inhabitants, in huge letters, to buy a certain sort of pill warranted to cure all human ills.

This is how the posters reads:

MIKE'S AND LOUIE'S PANACEA.
FOR ALL ILLS.
TAKE A PILL EVERY HOUR.
PRAY AND HAVE FAITH.

Immediately the drug stores were overrun with demands for Mike's and Louie's pills. Inquiries began early and lasted all day. The next morning there were still more posters. Mike and Louie seemed to be spending money like water to advertise their panacea.

But the drug stores didn't know a thing about these pills. They had none on sale and didn't know where to get them. It was a mystery, so the interest continued to grow.

Then the newspapers took the matter up editorially. They pointed out that if Mike and Louie were conducting a hoax it must be an expensive one, and that probably there would be a solution of the problem ere long. They advised the public to await developments.

Suddenly the announcement was blazoned forth that Mike and Louie would appear until further notice at the Garden theatre in the new Kolb and Dill Mutual success, "A Million for Mary."

Then the town went wild. Not alone the town, for farmers and their families came from five miles out in all directions. Manager Frost had his hands full as well as his house. It was the biggest drive the Garden theatre has ever registered. The "S. R. O." sign is part of the regular front-door furniture. Here is an example of intelligent advertising initiative. Mr. Frost is to be congratulated on his success in his new departure.

Cut-Out Photographs of Triangle Stars Form Novel Window Display of Los Angeles Jewelry Store

IN the most important and exclusive jewelry store of Los Angeles, there has been recently a unique and effective display of the Triangle stars. These charming little figures shown in the accompanying photograph were cut from heavily mounted photographs colored in oils, and with a little strip of cardboard arranged easel fashion in the back so they would stand upright.

This sample of skillful and attractive window dressing was maintained for two weeks by Feagans and Company, and attracted a great deal of attention as it is the first of its kind that has been seen on the coast.

Conspicuous on the left will be noted in the upper row the figure of Louise Glaum in her remarkable peacock dress composed entirely of shimmering taffeta and real peacock feathers for head-dress and train. Below her is Bessie Barriscale as she appeared in "Home." Other Triangle stars can be readily recognized, Mabel Normand, Fay Tincher, Clara Williams, Dorcas Matthews, and the whole list of screen favorites.

The second photograph shows how these figures were cut out with a sharp knife following the edges of the photograph, and how it was mounted so as to stand upright. The delicate effects of the oils and tinting and colors unfortunately is lost in the reproduction.

VALUE OF ACCURATE CLOCK IN THEATRE

An accurate clock in a motion picture theatre, once busy patrons know it is there will prove as good or better drawing card than a lobby attraction. The New Garden theatre, Minneapolis, playing Universal films exclusively has proven it. The theatre maintains a stereoptical clock with time changes every two minutes. It is just at the right of the screen. The busy man who wouldn't fumble with a watch will go to this theatre because the clock will get him out on time. The clock has made the New Garden a men's theatre. A man who wants to be entertained half an hour or more while waiting for a car or an appointment doesn't care for the admission fee but he does want convenience. Jewelers' ads and others pay the extra expense of maintaining the clock and a little more, so everybody is happy, the operator, the manager and the patron.

RECIPROCITY ADVERTISING METHODS NO. 1

Many of the Paramount exhibitors in the Middle West have adopted a plan of advertising their local newspapers, that has made the editors and publishers a lot more willing to advertise the moving picture houses. The editors have been running pages of matter about the attractions, and many had got the notion that they were doing it all for the exhibitor. Now the exhibitors are running slides showing reproductions of the moving picture pages of the newspapers, on which is a card suggesting the interest in these pages, and the value of advertising in the newspapers. The plan works fine—and the editors are responding.

FREE ADMISSION COUPON IN NEWSPAPER ADVERTISEMENT

Manager L. J. Quagliotti of the Variety theatre, Vancouver, has just started the Universal serial, "Liberty," at that house, and in his newspaper advertising before the opening of the picture printed in the advertisements a free admission coupon, entitling the holder to admission on any day on which the first installment was run.

"FRIDAY THE 13TH" SHOWN ON FRIDAY THE 13TH

W. Roney, manager of the Berkeley theatre, Berkeley, Cal., believes in giving his patrons the right thing at the right time. When he booked the World feature, "Friday, the 13th," with Robert Warwick, a short time ago he took care to see that he had it on the proper date and showed it on Friday, October 13. The production was advertised well in advance, and many were attracted by the coincidence.

TIMELY ADVERTISING AT GARDEN IN DES MOINES

Timely advertising is what the action of the Garden theatre in Des Moines might be called. The Iowa State Association of Teachers recently held a three-days' meeting in the Iowa capital and each day during the gathering the following paragraph was run at the head of the Garden's advertisement: "Do not fail to include a visit to the Garden as a part of your stay here. It is Iowa's representative theatre devoted to the drama of the screen—in every respect it measures up to the highest ideals of environment, entertainment and music."

Whether this little note did it or not, a mighty good business is reported from that place during these three days.

Good Newspaper Advertising Stunt

ONE of the most successful advertising schemes ever made a reality in St. John, N. B., was successfully put through a short time ago by "Billy" Smith, manager of the Empress theater, West St. John. By special arrangement with the advertising manager of the St. John Evening Times, the most widely read evening paper in the city. Mr. Smith contracted for a full page ad for "The Grip of Evil," which he was opening that evening at the Empress. The understanding was that the first 1,000 copies turned off the press would be placed at his immediate disposal. As soon as the copies were received they were rushed to a West St. John printer's, where presses were inked and in readiness. In big, bold, red letters across the front page of each copy of the Times was the message. "See the Grip of Evil To-night at the Empress." These papers were quickly put on the streets by a crowd of willing youngsters and distributed free to the mill and factory hands as they came home from work. It might also be said that these papers were on the field as soon as those that came by the regular method from the Times office. Mr. Smith said the scheme proved a great success, and more than paid for itself in one evening.

EXHIBITORS LISTEN TO CRY OF POWDER PUFF

The powder puff is exerting a powerful influence on the film business in Minneapolis. It wins where criticism of film or music might never avail. The new theatres in Minneapolis all have women's dressing rooms and have the corridors lined with mirrors. Some of the older ones, originally intended for the spoken drama where the present good fellowship did not prevail were built without them. When the managers of the older theatres heard women say, "Let's go to Seventh street, they have a dressing room and mirrors there," they harkened. Mirrors are being put in and wherever possible dressing rooms are being equipped.

ANOTHER NOVEL EXPLOITATION IDEA

Fair Brothers, at Glenwood, Iowa, running the Rex theatre there, recently showed Charley Chaplin in "One O'clock." A whitewash artist painted clocks on the sidewalks all over the city—the hands invariably pointing to 1 o'clock. Interest in the novel idea was widely aroused. The mystery was cleared away when the local paper and myriads of handbills came out and in big type told what the picture was and when it was coming.

When William L. Meyers, of the Palace theatre at Waterloo, showed the Paramount release, "His Honorable Friend," featuring the Japanese actor, Sessue Hayakawa, he decorated his house with Japanese lanterns and fans. He topped this off by burning incense sticks. Then he advertised his show extensively and it ran for three days.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE, NEW TRIANGLE STAR, TO HAVE SPECIAL AQUATIC DRAMA

It is not generally known that Constance Talmadge, who has been elevated to stardom on the Triangle program, is so accomplished a swimmer and high diver that she had the opportunity of being an aquatic champion instead of a screen favorite.

Miss Talmadge is a Brooklyn girl and learned the intricacies of the "trudgeon crawl" and the "jack-knife flip" under the best professional auspices at Brighton Beach. One of the chief reasons why she now finds life as congenial in the Fine Arts colony, near Los Angeles, is that she is enabled to indulge in year-round bathing.

Although she has not yet celebrated her eighteenth birthday, Constance has appeared in motion pictures for the past two years. Her successful handling of the co-star part with Wilfred Lucas in "The Microscope Mystery" has justified the faith that the Fine Arts directors have held of her adaptability for the higher branches of screen acting.

It is even rumored in the scenario sanctum of the Triangle that a special story is now in process of evolution for Miss Talmadge that will offer her the opportunity to utilize her aquatic prowess before the camera.

PICTURES OF HUGHES AND WILSON VOTING FEATURES OF MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 98

An important and historical echo of Election Day is the filming of the two candidates for the presidency as they cast their ballots before Mutual cameras. The pictures of Mr. Hughes in New York, and Mr. Wilson in Princeton are excellent. The Republican candidate had two surprises in store for him when he visited his voting place. The first came when he was handed Ballot No. 13. The second came when Editor Pell Mitchell of the Mutual Weekly began to set off radium flares to light the small room in which Mr. Hughes voted. The picture was a success, but the election clerks and even the distinguished voter himself were choked by the dense smoke. The Hughes picture is a Mutual Weekly scoop.

Another set of pictures in this issue of the Mutual Weekly which are intensely interesting are views of the French town of Combles, showing the effect of the terrific artillery bombardment, and the prisoners taken by the French after their gallant capture of what once had been a smiling, happy community. Other war pictures show the Anzac troops quartered in Egypt to protect the Suez Canal.

The raising of the street car which plunged through a draw at Boston is also shown in this number. Other pictures include a new automatic mail tying machine.

HARRY RAVER DISPOSES OF FILM INTERESTS TEMPORARILY

Harry Raver, formerly in charge of the business of the Raver and Ocean Films has turned over the management of these companies to Films Lloyds in the Candler Building, New York City. His interests in the Itala Film Company of America, including the spectacle "Cabiria" are at present being attended to by D. J. McGowan at Rockville Center, N. Y. Mr. Raver has temporarily retired from the film business and is resting on his farm in Bound Brook, N. J. He plans to re-enter the field at a later date, but not as an independent producer.

NEW METRO SERIAL PROGRESSING RAPIDLY

Work is progressing rapidly on the great Metro-Quality serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the stars, and which is being directed by W. Christy Cabanné.

Five of the fourteen episodes in the serial have been finished. Mr. Bushman, Miss Bayne and Mr. Cabanné are enthusiastic over the work thus far completed. Mr. Cabanné, who did some of his greatest work with D. W. Griffith and has still greater plans under the Metro banner, says the serial has effects never heretofore attempted in motion pictures.

AITKEN ARRIVES IN LOS ANGELES

Harry E. Aitken, president of the Triangle, arrived in Los Angeles Monday for a stay of a week or more with Mack Sennett, Thomas H. Ince and Frank E. Woods of the three studios where subjects for this program are made.

Famous Players-Lasky Engages Lorimore To Go Abroad

He Will Sail for Sydney, Australia, About December 1—He Will Have Complete Survey of New Zealand and Tasmania as Well as the Island Continent

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has engaged Alec Lorimore as its special representative to Australia and he will sail for Sydney about the first of December.

Mr. Lorimore is one of the best known figures in the motion picture industry and is recognized as one of the ablest of the younger men in the field. His prodigious efforts in behalf of "Civilization" are still fresh in the minds of all in the trade.

The selection of Mr. Lorimore for this important work is especially happy because of his English origin, which will permit him to meet the Australian film men with an understanding of which the average American is totally incapable.

The sending of Mr. Lorimore to Australia by no means marks the introduction of Famous Players and Lasky subjects to the Antipodes, as they have long held high rank in the amusement field in the island continent, being distributed by the Australian Film Company, Ltd., under joint arrangement entered into by the producers for the distribution of their features everywhere except in the United States, where they are handled exclusively by the Paramount Pictures Corporation.

Though the present system of distribution has proven highly successful, it is felt by the producers that the sending of a special representative to Australia will give a personal touch to the business relations of the producers and distributors which thousands of miles of intervening ocean have rendered impossible.

Under the auspices of the Australian company, Mr. Lorimore will make a complete survey of Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania, meeting as many exhibitors as possible and carrying to them the personal greeting of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, of which he is the first emissary to make the great journey to Australia since the formation of the company.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

"What Happened to Willie" Is a Paramount-Bray Cartoon Drawn by L. M. Glackens, Released by Paramount, November 30

ONE of the funniest animated cartoons that has ever been drawn by L. M. Glackens, the well-known cartoonist, will be released by Paramount, November 30, the title of which is "What Happened to Willie." The story of the cartoon tells of a witch who is sailing through the air, endeavoring to land on the shore, but instead falls into a pond, and is only saved when the water recedes, leaving her on dry land. Seeing a farmer approach, she turns herself into a tree and as he passes raps him on the head. He, thinking his son, who is following him, has hit him with one of the apples he is carrying, scolds him severely and proceeds on his way. The youngster watches his father for awhile then drops his bucket of apples, and after making motions and grimaces at the old man, begins to eat some apples. He takes a bite out of one and throws the apple back of him, which hits the tree.

The same thing happens with the second, enraging the witch to such an extent, that she turns the boy into a pig, and after giving him a kick, to send him on his way, picks up the bucket of apples and changing into a cat, goes home. By nightfall, the little pig reaches home, and after some time and difficulty, convinces the father that it is his son. The two now go out to seek the witch, who appears as they reach a lonely spot. She changes herself into a cow, and when the farmer starts to beat her, kicks him through the air.

At this time the little pig jumps at her, grabs her tail, and together they go sailing through the air. As they reach the moon, the pig gets caught and is forced to remain behind. The man in the moon who has been asleep up to this time, wakes up and by his anger, so frightens the pig, that the latter loses his balance and drops through the air right into the witch's house. The witch is sitting on a bench eating the apples, when the pig strikes the end of the bench, causing it to upset and flinging her into a large cauldron. The pig forces her to change him back into a boy in which guise, he changes her into a rat. Her pet crow, not recognizing his mistress, devours the rat and explodes by spontaneous combustion thus terminating the "change" system.

POLLARD TO PRODUCE BIRTH-CONTROL PICTURE

Henry Pollard, head of the Pollard Picture Plays Company, which was organized to produce photodramas starring Margarita Fischer for the Mutual Film Corporation, has purchased what he considers one of the greatest scenarios ever written on the theme of birth control, and will produce it with Miss Fischer in the leading role as soon as Henry Otto has finished the production of "The Butterfly Girl," the third of the Fischer-Mutual series on which he is now at work.

It will be remembered by the followers of the silent drama, that it was a Mutual picture starring Miss Fischer and produced by Harry Pollard which started the present run of birth-control pictures which has been sweeping the country the past year. The title of the picture which was released over a year ago and received a distinct ovation when it appeared was "The Miracle of Life."

The name of the new picture which Mr. Pollard will produce is "The Devil's Assistant." It was written by J. Edward Hungerford and is pronounced by Director Pollard as the most startling and most convincing plot he has ever read.

"The Devil's Assistant" will take the place of "The Light of Heaven" in the releasing schedule of the six Fischer pictures already announced and is dated for appearance in December.

FAIRBANKS FEATURE TO FOLLOW "THE MATRIMANIAC," TRIANGLE

The Douglas Fairbanks feature to follow the Triangle production of "The Matrimaniac," which is nearing completion, will be a screen version of Eugene P. Lyle's novel, "Blaze Derringer," to be done under the direction of John Emerson.

Miss Anita Loos and Mr. Emerson are now putting the finishing touches on the scenario of the story, which should make an unusually strong Fairbanks plot. It is said that "Doug" will be given full opportunity to utilize his well-known strength and agility amid remarkably picturesque settings.

The tale is that of a young American who goes to a Central American republic of imaginary location in the company of a couple of notorious jail-breakers to get the deposed president out of jail.

"Blaze" is the son of a wealthy father who has sent him out into the world with a certain allowance which he has succeeded in scattering on the four winds of irresponsibility—hence his eagerness to join forces with the jail-birds to get the reward of $100,000 which the incarcerated president has offered any one who will effect his release.

The manner in which this ambitious undertaking is carried out furnishes the novel thrills in what is said to be a sure-fire Fairbanks drama.

JEWEL CARMEN JOINS FOX

Jewel Carmen, one of the prettiest and most capable actresses in moving pictures, who has been playing opposite Douglas Fairbanks, has joined the William Fox forces.

Miss Carmen is probably remembered best for her excellent work in "Manhattan Madness," one of Mr. Fairbanks' most recent photoplays. She made her debut in the silent drama only four years ago, when she was still in her teens.

Miss Carmen is a native of Danville, Ky.—the State which has furnished so many of William Fox's best photoplayers. She will appear in Pacific Coast productions.

"GRANT" SERIES TO RUN INDEFINITELY, IS KALEM ANNOUNCEMENT

EXHIBITORS who have been inquiring as to the number of episodes that would be seen in the "Grant, Police Reporter" series are answered this week by the announcement of the Kalem Company that the dare-devil series featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby will be run indefinitely. This decision follows the complete tabulation of reports from all over the country on the first five episodes. These reports from exchange managers show that the one reel series is running neck and neck with "The Girl From Frisco" in the race for popularity and indicate an overwhelming success.

"We know that it is a revolutionary step to announce that a series will be released indefinitely," declared Mr. Wright of the Kalem Company, "but the record of bookings is so phenomenal and the reports from exhibitors showing the series so enthusiastic that it is the only move left to us. I would hesitate in the face of this success and set a limit on the life of 'Grant.' Much as we expected when we set out to get an author and stars of such importance for one reel series, we have been literally swept off our feet."

While the Kalem executives were announcing their plans for the indefinite continuance of the once-a-week series, dare-devil George Larkin, was busy making his own plans at the Jacksonville studio. In the second week of his work on the "Grant" series Larkin was injured in making a leap from a window to a speeding automobile and found it necessary to lay idle for several days while his ankles were recovering. On his return to the studio Larkin stated that he was out to make a record of not missing a day of work on the rest of the series.

"MASQUE OF LIFE" BRINGS BIG BUSINESS

"The Masque of Life," handled by Signet, has met with marked success at the Park theatre, New York, having just completed a four weeks' run there. J. L. Kempner, who procured the picture for the American market, declares that state right buyers have made attractive offers to the company for rights on the picture in their territories. Mr. Kempner realized at the start that most foreign made attractions fell below the American standard, but "The Masque of Life" being an exception differed little from the domestic picture, except that it was full of the unusual.

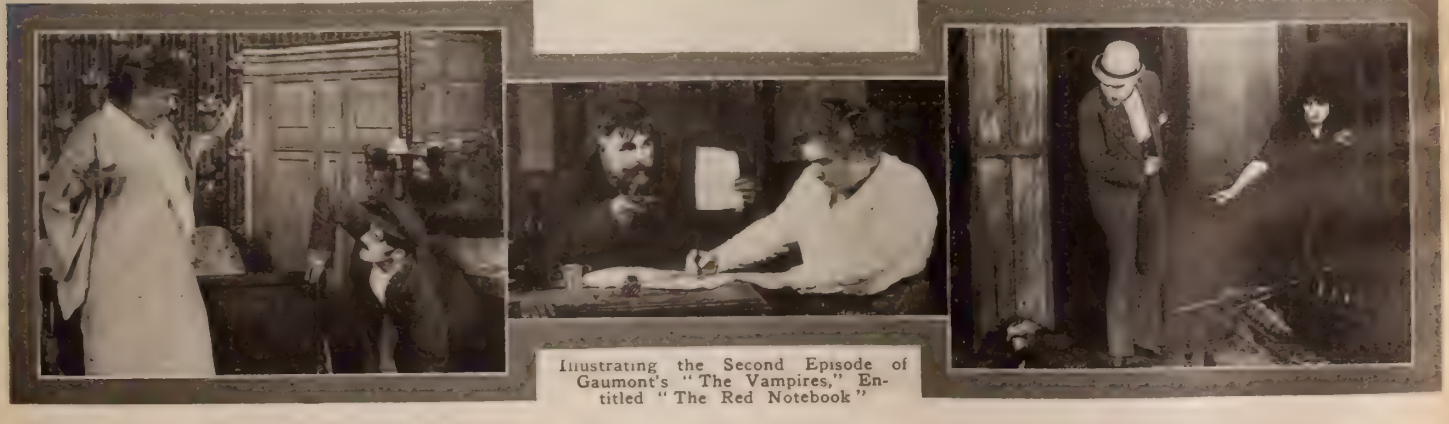
"The Sheriff's Blunder," from Selig, Leads General Program for November 20-25

"THE Sheriff's Blunder," a two-part drama produced in Selig's studios, featuring Tom Mix and Victoria Forde, will be the first picture screened on General Film Service program for the week November 20-25, inclusive. Tom Mix is the Simon pure cowboy actor, and "The Sheriff's Blunder," it is said, affords him an excellent vehicle for displaying his undoubted knowledge of Western life on the plains. This will be followed by a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, with Mary Anderson in the titular role, entitled "The Fasters." Selig-Tribune will then feature pictorially all the big news of the world, and the day's program will be brought to a close with "Fish," a one-act Biograph comedy, in which Bert Williams, widely known as a top liner in vaudeville, and also as a star of the Ziegfeld "Follies" is featured.



An Essanay two-part drama, "Unto the Least of These," with Mary McAlister and John Cossar in the titular roles will be the first picture shown Tuesday, November 25. This will be succeeded by "Rival Fakers," a Kalem one-act comedy, presenting "Ham," "Bud," Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. "Oil and Water," a two-part Biograph drama, in which Blanche Sweet and Henry Walthall are starred will be the final picture of that day.

Ben Turpin, Essanay's comedian, will be featured in the first picture shown Wednesday, November 22, a one-act comedy entitled "Some Bravery." Henry Myers and Rosemary Theby will get the limelight next in a Vim one-part comedy, "The Good Stenographer." Then will come the sixteenth episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," entitled "The Fight for Paradise Valley." Marin Sais and True Boardman are featured in this two-act drama.

Selig-Tribune and a Vim one-act comedy presenting Babe Hardy and Kate Price will be Thursday's offerings.

"Twin Souls," a Knickerbocker Star feature drama in three parts, will be the first picture shown Friday, November 24, with R. Henry Gray and Lillian West in the stellar roles. This will be followed by Kalem's "The House of Three Deuces," the sixth adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter," presenting George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby. Then will come a Vitagraph one-act comedy, "Justice à La Carte," with Huntly Gordon providing the fun. A Vim comedy in one-act, "Money Maid Men," featuring "Pokes" and "Jabbs."

An Essanay three-part drama, "The Border Line," presenting Nell Craig and Edward Arnold will be the first picture flashed on the screen Saturday, November 25. This will be followed by an episode of the "Hazards of Helen Series," "The Forgotten Train Order," in which Kalem's venturesome girl, Helen Gibson, supplies some daring feats. The week's program will be brought to a close with a Selig one-act drama, "Hedge of Heart's Desire," presenting Virginia Kirtley and Robyn Adair.

Valeska Suratt Will Appear on the Screen in "Jealousy" for Fox on November 20

VALESKA SURATT will be seen in "Jealousy," which William Fox will release on November 20.

Miss Suratt herself is authority for the statement that her costumes in this new photodrama exceed in number and in splendor, even the gorgeous creations which helped make notable "A Soul of Broadway" and "The Straight Way," her two previous Fox pictures.

There are many beautiful interior settings. The drawing-room in the home of Anna Baxter (Miss Suratt), which is fitted out with luxurious Oriental furnishings, and is done throughout in a rich black and white, cost several thousands of dollars to erect.

Other members of the supporting cast are: Charline Mayfield, Lincoln's grandniece; Curtis Benton, Joseph Granby, and George M. Adams. Seven years ago, Granby and Benton acted together in a sketch written by the latter.

Director Will S. Davis screened the photoplay, his eighth for Fox Films. Mr. Davis is also the author of the scenario.

Miss Suratt plays the role of Anna Baxter, a woman without heart or emotions, who wrecks the lives of two men. She marries Peter Martin (Walter Law), whom she does not love. Roland Carney (Curtis Benton), the man she really loves, could not support her in the luxury to which she was accustomed.

Carney marries Agnes Maynard (Charline Mayfield), and soon forgets his old sorrow. Anna, tired of her mock wedded life, attempts to make Roland jealous of his wife.

She induces Carney to visit the home of Randolph Parsons (Joseph Granby). There Roland finds his wife, but a sudden twist of affairs results in his discovering that Agnes is innocent.

Anna tries new tactics now. She knows that Carney has been losing steadily in the stock market, through her husband's efforts to ruin the man his wife loves. Anna finds a memorandum on Martin's desk; "Corner B. H. R. Stock." She gives this information to Carney.

He is overjoyed and grasps the tip eagerly. Martin, however, learns of what Anna has done, and reverses his tactics. The result is that Carney is ruined completely. In his rage he thinks that Anna has tricked him purposely, and he goes to her, furious. While he is there, she sees Martin returning.

She thinks she has an opportunity for revenge. She tears her clothing and lets down her hair. Then she turns out the lights and screams. Martin enters. Anna shrieks that Carney had been atacking her.

Martin smiles, and takes out the B. H. R. memorandum.

"I know your game," he says. "Go," he tells Carney, "you are ruined. You have been punished enough."

Martin bids his wife good-by, and informs her that he is going to leave her. Anna falls senseless to the floor.

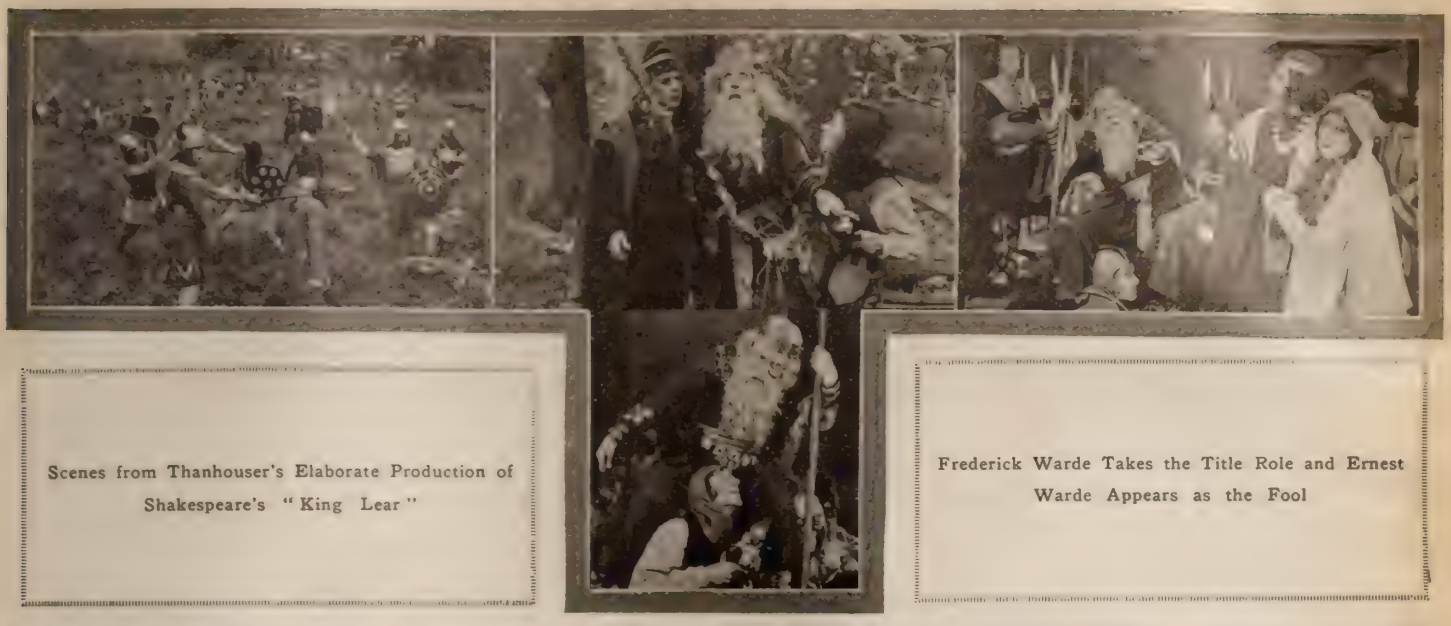
"A LASS OF THE LUMBERLANDS," CHAPTER V, READY NOVEMBER 13

Helen Holmes' new serial story "A Lass of the Lumberlands," being filmed by the Signal for distribution by the Mutual Film Corporation, in its fifth chapter, released November 13. As a background to the thrills is the picturesquely beautiful bigwoods forest and contrasting are scenes of rough Western life in a lumber camp town.



The Interstate Commerce Commission has declared "Dollar" Holmes' railroad a common carrier, and he has to transport his rival's logs to mill. He blows up the boilers of the mill to prevent the milling of his rival's timber, pulls off a crooked mayoralty election to make his plot good—and gets up against the daring and resource of Helen Holmes, whom he has tried to have murdered, when she calls in a troop of cavalry to stop a rifle and pistol battle.

The action of the lieutenant of the cavalry, after the battle has been stopped by his troopers, leaves the audience in suspense until Chapter VI as to whether Holmes or Helen and her friends have won out for the moment.

"A BATH TUB ELOPEMENT" THE NEXT TWEEDLEDUM RELEASE FROM UNITY

"A Bath Tub Elopement" is the title of the next Tweedledum release to come from the Unity Sales Corporation this week. In this amusing one-reel comedy Tweedledum decides to go on a lark with another man's wife, leaving his own to sit lonesomely at home. But like many another adventurer, who plans to stray away from his own fireside, Tweedledum proceeds to get into trouble.

The wife goes out on a still hunt for her erring partner and catches him with the third member of the triangle. Tweedledum and the woman naturally try to elude the pursuing wife and finally take refuge in a bath tub, which they find floating on the water, and the last we see of them, they are in mid-ocean. Just how long Tweedledum can dodge the wrath of the wife in this manner is left entirely to our imagination.

WEEK OF NOVEMBER 19 BRINGS FIRST EPISODE OF "THE VAMPIRES," AS WELL AS THE FOUR CUSTOMARY GAUMONT SINGLE-REELS

The outstanding announcement of the week of November 19 upon the Gaumont program of releases through Mutual is the first episode of "The Vampires, or The Arch Criminals of Paris." This is a complete story in itself, as are the eight which follow, entitled "The Detective's Head." Each episode is complete in three reels. The photo-novel is a high class example of the best style of French detective screen fiction.

"Reel Life" No. 29, released Nov. 19, has "Catching Fish for Market," taken on the Massachusetts coast. "How Zinc is Produced," pitcures of a great France-Belgian plant before the war, "Growing Tea in the United States," an infant industry of South Carolina, and "Up-to-date Fashions," illustrating how a gown is made by draping it upon a model in its successive stages of manufacture. This is a new screen departure.

"Tours Around the World" Number 3, released Nov. 21, takes spectators to the picturesque capital of Egypt, Cairo, and to Antwerp, the great port of Belgium, showing it as it looked before it came temporarily under German rule. The third picture is one crowded out of the previous issue, the Gorges of the Vesubie river, a mountain torrent of the Maritime Alps.

"See America First" No. 63, released Nov. 22, has beautiful pictures of the locks and rapids at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. Dividing the reel with it is an animated Gaumont Kartoon Komic, "What's a Home Without a Dog?" by Harry Palmer.

The fourth single-reel of the week is The Mutual Weekly.

UNITY SALES CORPORATION RELEASES TENTH EPISODE OF "THE YELLOW MENACE"

The Unity Sales Corporation will release this week the Tenth episode of "The Yellow Menace," under the title of "A Message from the Sky." In this episode we see introduced some very striking aviation scenes which add an impressive and pleasing novelty to the picture.

Sato, one of Ali Singh's Japanese helpers, applies for lessons in the Government aviation corps and, while presumably a novice, is really an expert in the handling of the machines. He manages to arrange a flight alone to prove the progress he is making in his lessons and succeeds in stealing a fine new monoplane. In his flight he passes over Errol Manning's garden and drops a message, stating that Margaret Bronson and May Manning have been captured and are held by Ali Singh. Their release from torture is promised if Manning will give himself up to Ali Singh.

In this episode also Hong Kong Harry is lashed almost to death for his disloyalty for interfering with the torture meted out to the beautiful Najla. As a balm to his tortured body and wounded spirits Najla again braves the wrath of the Arch-Demon and takes care of Hong Kong Harry, dressing his wounds and ministering to his comforts. These scenes depicting the torture of Hong Kong Harry are in striking contrast with the attractiveness of the aviation scenes and are so reeled as to surely make the audience forget that after all it is only a picture and not real life.

DORIS KENYON ENGAGED FOR "THE TRAVELING SALESMAN"

The Famous Players Film Company has engaged Doris Kenyon to play opposite Frank McIntyre in an adaptation of the latter's celebrated stage success, "The Traveling Salesman," which is scheduled for appearance on the Paramount Program on December 18.

Miss Kenyon is a native of Syracuse and was educated at Packer Collegiate Institute in Brooklyn, studying languages later at Columbia University. When studying vocal music she became acquainted with Victor Herbert who was so charmed by her personality that he obtained an important role for her in his opera "Princess Pat," in which she was very successful.

Since that time Miss Kenyon has been engaged before the motion picture camera at various studios, her work attracting the attention of the Famous Players and so impressing them that she was engaged for an important role in the McIntyre production despite her comparative inexperience.

Miss Kenyon has gained an enviable record as an amateur athlete and is a devotee of all outdoor sports.

William Russell in a Strong Story of Indian Life Heads Mutual Releases for Week of November 20

WILLIAM RUSSELL in a strong tale of Indian life on the Nebraska reservations heads the releases of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of November 20. The title of the five-reel Mutual Star production in which Russell is starred is "Lone Star." Russell plays the title role, that of an uncivilized Indian, who becomes one of the country's most celebrated surgeons.

This production gives Russell a great opportunity to do some excellent work and it is quite remote from any type ever portrayed by him heretofore. His transition from an uncouth, hot-tempered and uncivilized savage to the highly polished surgeon is steady and Russell is called upon to do some very clever work to show this transition.

The story of "Lone Star" is by Kenneth Clarke and this in itself speaks a lot for the success of the production. It was directed by Edward Sloman of the American Film Company.

In this story the white man's civilization appeals to Lone Star, who becomes part of it. He becomes an outcast of the Indians for seeking the white man's civilization and is scorned by the whites because he is an Indian. Russell feeling that this role was one of the best opportunities of his career and that the character of Lone Star was well suited to his type has made the most of it.

Charlotte Burton as the millionaire's daughter, Harry Von Meter, Alfred Ferguson and Ashton Dearholt support Russell in "Lone Star."

"The False Clew," a two-reel Mutual drama, will be released on November 20, 1916. Dorothy Davenport is starred in this production. It is the story of the murder of a girl's father being placed at the door of her lover, who was not approved of by the murdered man. The maid tells of a quarrel which had ensued between the two men and later the young man is arrested. He is cleared by the story told by the butler. The butler relates of how the girl had been brought up by him and his wife, after the death of her mother and they had been the only ones to know of the girl's secret marriage. He then tells who the real murderer was.

"The Detective's Head," the first chapter of the great Gaumont photonovel, "The Vampires," will be released on November 23. This is in three reels and contains thrills galore. "The Vampires," shown both in England and France, has been one of the most successful serials ever put out. It follows the "Fantomas" pictures and bids fair for eclipsing their wide popularity.

This first chapter tells of the murder of Detective Durtal by the "vampires," a band of criminals operating in Paris. Durtal had sworn to run down the crime trust and this was their answer. The head of the murdered man is missing. No one knows who the Vampires are but do know that they commit the most dastardly deeds. After the discovery of the dead man, Philip Guard, a young newspaper reporter starts out to find the clues which will lead to the arrest of the Vampires.

George Ovey, in a very clever one-reel comedy, "Jerry's Double Header," in which he not only captures a hold-up man, and gets a big reward but is made the hero of the hour and wins the girl of his dreams is released on November 24.

"An Artful Dodger," a one-reel comedy featuring Bill Parsons and containing a whole raft of laughs, is scheduled for November 25, in connection with a one-reel drama, title to be announced later.

For the 26th of November, Rube Miller and Lillian Hamilton, famous for their comic actions with the Vogue Company, will appear in "Up the Flue," a two-reel Vogue production. A laugh a minute in store for everyone seeing this comedy in which after many hair raising incidents, a bomb is thrown out of a window which lands on a big chimney, causing the chimney to fall to the earth. Everyone in the cast is rained upon with thousands of bricks.

There are also four one-reel scenics to be released this week.

SOCIOLOGICAL DRAMA FOR VIOLA DANA

Vivisection is one of the subjects dealt with in "Threads of Fate," the Metro-Columbia feature in which Viola Dana will next be seen on the Metro program. Eugene Nowland is directing this production.

The play has been adapted for the screen by June Mathis from the original story by Richard Barry. A cast of unusual strength has been selected to support Miss Dana. Robert Whittier plays Gregory, "the wanderer," father to the character played by the star.

Augustus Phillips, will be seen as Miss Dana's foster-father. Helen Strickland, Richard Tucker, Nellie Grant, and Fred Jones are in cast.

ESSANAY TO USE TITLE, "MUSTY SUFFER"

Special arrangements have been made between George Kleine and George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Mfg. Company by which the generic title "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" will continue to be used to cover a new series of Watson comedies to be made by Essanay. Mr. Kleine has given express permission to the Essanay Company to employ the name in connection with Essanay-Watson comedies.

Two series of "Musty Suffer" comedies, each consisting of ten one-reel productions, have already been released under the Kleine standard through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. It is understood that the new Essanay "Musty" films will also appear on the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Program. A number of side-splitting scenarios have been prepared for Mr. Watson's use, and a company of experienced laugh-makers assembled to support the star. Work on the first units of the forthcoming series has been begun.

"KITTY MACKAY" FROM VITAGRAPH

What promises to be one of the Vitagraph's best pictures is well under way at the Vitagraph Studio in Brooklyn, under the direction of Wilfrid North. "Kitty Mackay" is the name of the vehicle selected for Lillian Walker, who will wear the original costumes provided for Mollie McIntyre, who was the star of the stage production at the Comedy theatre. This amusing comedy drama ran for a whole season in New York as a stellar Broadway attraction, and exhibitors can count themselves fortunate that the play has been purchased by Vitagraph, and that Miss Walker is to enact the title role.

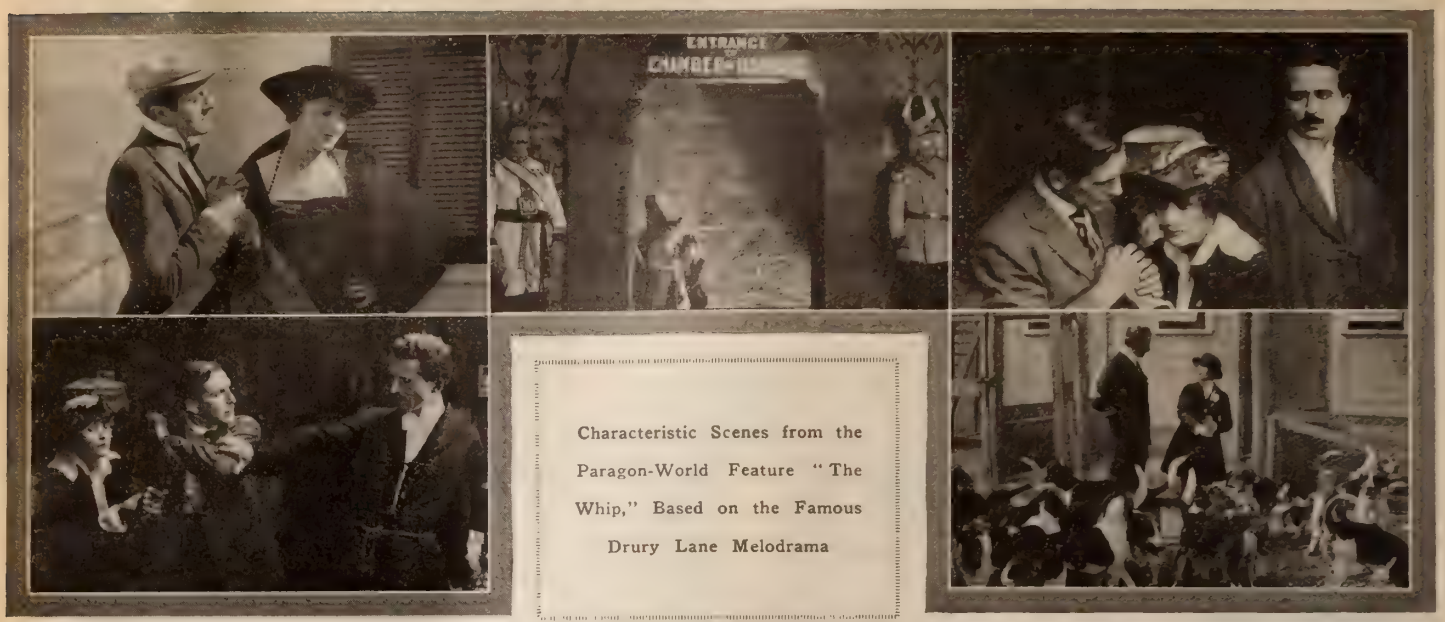
Included in the cast of this drama by Catherine Chisholm Cushing are William Shea, Nellie Anderson, Beatrice Anderson, William Ferguson, Jewell Hunt, Charles Kent, Mrs. Isabelle West and Thos. R. Mills.

Stars New to the Series Will Lead Bluebird Players in "The Sign of the Poppy" and "Price of Silence"

WHEN December is ended Bluebird will have about completed its first year, and in anticipation of that event an attractive array of features have been prepared for the "home stretch." Two stars new to the series will lead Bluebird players December 4 and December 11 in "The Sign of the Poppy" and "The Price of Silence," respectively.

Hobart Henley will play a dual role in "The Sign of the Poppy" with Gertrude Selby leading the supporting company. During the progress of the "double" Mr. Henley will be in evidence most of the time, playing contrasting roles that must have taxed his staying power while the five reels were being made. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the "mystery play" which Charles Swickard directed. The release date will be December 11.

Kathryn Adams (Thanhouser)



"The Price of Silence" appeared originally in popular story form, from the pen of W. Carey Wonderly, during the past summer. Ida May Park prepared the scenario and Joseph De Grasse, who brought out Louise Lovely, another Bluebird star, directed Dorothy Phillips in her present introduction to the series. Frank Whitson, Lon Chaney, and Jack Mulhall will be prominent in the supporting company. This release will be made December 11.

Cleo Madison will be featured in Rex Ingram's production of "Black Orchids," although the title of this feature may be changed. It was Mr. Ingram who directed Miss Madison when she recently became a Bluebird star in "The Chalice of Sorrow." He wrote and directed "Black Orchids." Frances McDonald and Wedgewood Nowell will be prominent in Miss Madison's supporting organization. Very likely this picture will be set for release December 18.

"The Eagle's Wings" is not to be considered a part of the Bluebird program as it will be issued early in December as a special release handled by Bluebird Exchanges throughout the country along state right lines, exactly as individual showmen promote a feature when they buy territory. This feature has been prepared at considerable expense with this method of marketing in view from the outset. Bluebird believes that their exchange managers are as good showmen as anybody else, and propose to prove it in presenting "The Eagle's Wings" to exhibitors.

RELEASE DATE SET FOR LA BADIE PLAY

December 3 has been set as the release date for "Divorce and the Daughter," Florence La Badie's next Thanhouser-made Gold Rooster play. The story is by Agnes C. Johnston. Frederic Sullivan is the director.

In the cast supporting Miss La Badie are J. H. Gilmour, Edwin Stanley, Sam Noblack, Kathryn Adams, Zenadie Williams, and two children, Ethelmary Oakland and Arthur Le Vien.

Miss La Badie's part is that of an impressionable girl who is suddenly shocked to find that her father has lost his love for her mother and is paying attention to a young widow.

The girl has two suitors, one worthy and the other a man of the world who preaches the new ideas of a free love marriage. He almost convinces her, using her parents as an example, that the old marriage forms are unsuited to this age and that happiness can only be found in a bondless union.

She is almost trapped by the unscrupulous man but escapes and finds that the old form of marriage, after all, is the best.

The photographic effects are especially beautiful and the story is one of wide appeal.

GAUMONT SPLIT REEL PROVING POPULAR FOR MATINEES

The Mutual branches report that film of Gaumont's split-reel, "See America First" and Gaumont Kartoon Komics, never lies upon the shelf after what is regarded as the natural life of the film. These reels are in great demand among the young because of the happy combination of American scenery and humor.

The advantage lies in the fact that the child's interest is aroused and its imagination stimulated by pictures of historic importance, and then comes Harry Palmer's animated cartooms with their naive and appealing sense of humor. Since adults are but children of a larger growth, the pictures enjoy the same popularity with them, and at the same time make an even greater appeal.

Change Made Necessary in January Vitagraph Schedule by Insertion of Sothern Release on January 8

OWING to circumstances over which it had no control, the executives of the Greater Vitagraph Company have found it necessary to make a slight revision in the releases for the month of January as previously announced.

On the second Monday, January 8, exhibitors will have an opportunity to book for first runs "The Man of Mystery," the third E. H. Sothern production in place of "Indiscretion," which is moved down for release on the 15th.

"The Man of Mystery," is an adaptation of the romantic situations evolved by Archibald Clavering Gunter in his popular book entitled "The City of Mystery." It represents a type of film drama totally different from the other two pictures in which Mr. Sothern has been starred by Vitagraph and it was purposely selected because it afforded this renowned master of dramatics an opportunity to reveal through the medium of motion pictures every bit of his technique and demonstrate his splendid versatility as an actor who is very much at home before the camera. Frederick Thomson who has directed Mr. Sothern in his film appearances for the Vitagraph, has secured some amazing realistic exterior locations for "The Man of Mystery." One in particular is a reproduction of a volcano in action which is so genuine as to pass unquestioned.

"Indiscretion" with Lillian Walker as its star, will be released January 15; "Her Right to Live," with Peggy Hyland and Antonio Moreno, will be released January 22. This production has also been renamed; it was formerly referred to as "The Little Brown Sparrow."

INDEFINITE RUN FOR "THE MASQUE OF LIFE"

"The Masque of Life" will be played for an indefinite run at the La Salle theatre, Chicago, starting on November 20, according to an announcement by A. B. Jones of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, who arrived in this city early Friday morning of last week and completed his contract with J. L. Kempner who is releasing the film before noon of the same day. Mr. Jones's firm is considered the leading buyers of states rights for the Middle West and their theatres in the Loop district of Chicago are greatly sought after. In order to book "The Masque of Life" Mr. Jones had to decline several other offers.

ELLIS AT WORK ON A KALEM

Director Robert Ellis, of the Kalem staff, is at work on a story that finds its basis in a page from the annals of the New York police department. Because of the number of crimes committed at a house on the East Side the street number of which was 222, it became known to the police reporters of the New York dailies and the detectives as "The House of Three Deuces." Robert Welles Ritchie has taken this title for an episode of "Grant, Police Reporter," which tells the story of one of the mysterious crimes occurring there.

George Larkin, the dare-devil star of the one-reel series, in "The House of Three Deuces" engages in a struggle with Robert Ellis on a rickety fire escape which suddenly collapses. Ollie Kirkby contributes a remarkable bit of acting as an Italian girl. The cast also includes Arthur Albertson, William McKet, G. Chira and Mary Taylor Ross.

"The House of Three Deuces" is scheduled for release by Kalem on the General Film program on Friday, November 24.

FINE CHARACTER WORK IN MUTUAL PICTURE

One of the most interesting little bits of character work which has recently been seen on the screen is that of Frank Thompson, the American Mutual actor, in the role of Abraham Lincoln in the coming Kolb and Dill Mutual Star Production, "A Peck O' Pickles," to be released the week of November 13. The quaint setting of the Civil War period, in which part of the picture is laid, is given startling realism by the appearance of the gaunt figure and homely features of "Honest Abe" as he rides through the crowds before the capitol. In his characterization of the Nation's most dearly loved president, Mr. Thompson has done a fine bit of work.

There are so many things to make "A Peck O' Pickles" unusual and interesting, that it is hard to designate them all. The meeting of the Suffragists demanding purity in politics, after the setting of second half of the picture had been changed to modern times, is extremely amusing, as is the ride on the back of a sporting whale, essayed by the inimitable Kolb and Dill, their scenes in camp life and all the rest.

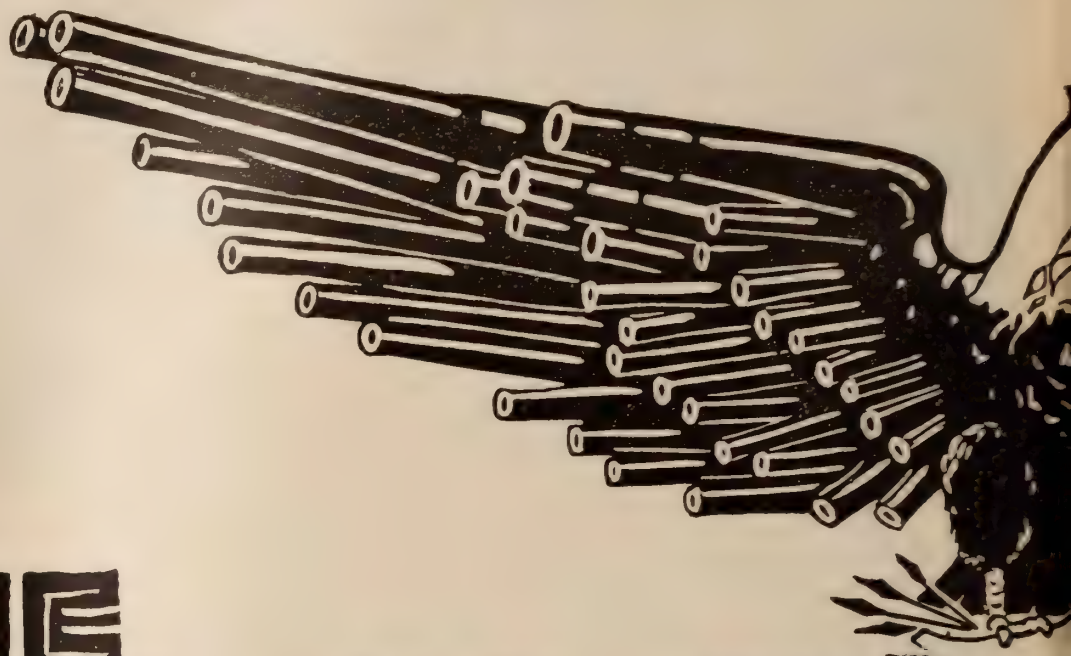
"Woman Redeemed" from Moss on December 1

THERE are few more popular stars than Marie Empress, and certainly she has appeared in no vehicle hitherto, in which her art has equalled in dramatic value and power "The Woman Redeemed," the work of Stanley Kent, which will be released on December 1, by B. S. Moss.

Briefly told, the story of "The Woman Redeemed" is as follows:

Far from the bustle of the city, the Reverend James Martin is the beloved pastor of a simple flock. Among his parishioners is Mary Brown, the daughter of a "shellback" deacon of Martin's church. Jack Rance, a wealthy and unscrupulous broker who is spending the summer in Martin's little community, becomes enamored of Mary, who finally yields to his importunities. Confessing to her father that she has been betrayed by Rance, she is cast off by the rigid pillar of the church, and ordered out into the world; ultimately she seeks oblivion in death. Outraged by the dogmatic religion which has driven the young girl to desperation the Reverend Martin decides to leave the narrow-minded village behind him.

In one of the rookeries which abound in the city which he has sought, lives Zelma, a beautiful daughter of the slums who is eagerly sought for her youthful charms by Paul Jerome, who is known as "the king of the underworld."



Tragedy enters Zelma's life when Wallace Stanton a young bank cashier, who has become infatuated with her, embezzles the funs of the institution in order to win her love. Driven to frenzy by her disdainful attitude, Stanton kills himself. This awakens Zelma to the true facts of her existence, and she wanders into the night determined to seek oblivion in the dark waters of the river, but the Reverend Martin, who is conducting a meeting near the spot at which she seeks to end her existence, saves her, and persuades her to become a worker in his mission. Zelma worships her savior, but Jerome seeks her out in her refuge and the ashes of the love that she once felt for "the king of the underworld" are fanned into a flame in Zelma's heart when she beholds him once more. Jerome in order to cut short what he believes is a love affair between the young minister and Zelma, resorts to desperate measure, and what follows leads up to a marvelous climax, in which the powers of good and evil grapple for the soul of the young girl.

"ENEMIES OF SOCIETY" IN WORK

"Enemies of Society," Florence La Badie's newest Thanhouser picture, a story of modern prison conditions, is being made at the Thanhouser studios for release on the Pathe program. Frederic Sullivan is the director and Charles W. Hoffman the camera man. Miss La Badie will be supported by H. E. Herbert, Ethyle Cooke, Harris Gordon, Sam Niblack, Arthur Bauer and Gene La Motte.

ROOSEVELT AND PARKHURST COMMEND "CHARITY?"

"Charity?" Linda A. Griffith's charity graft expose picture, has won the endorsement and approval of some of the foremost public men in America.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, famous New York divine, in a letter to Frank Powell, the producer of the picture, has written:

"I am profoundly gratified to learn that the picture drama 'Charity' is to become public property. The story which it tells and the lesson which it inculcates is of no merely local application. It is nation-wide in its relation to the children and its due effect will be to render the public more sensitive to child-suffering and more humane in its ministration to child needs.

Yours very sincerely,
C. H. PARKHURST.

Theodore Roosevelt, in a letter to Mr. Powell, discussing "Charity?" makes references to his words in an address at the conference on the care of dependent children called by the president at Washington, January 25, 1909, when Mr. Roosevelt said:

"I believe that we all of us have come to the conclusion that where possible the thing to be done for the orphan child is to provide a home for it; and that where that is not possible we should make the conditions as nearly as possible like those which the child would have in a home.

"In connection with the photo-play 'Charity?' you are entirely at liberty to use the quotation from my address.

"Very sincerely yours,
(signed) "THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

A pre-view of the picture was held by the Mutual at the Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago Friday morning (November 10) with a special musical program, and an introductory address by Bishop Samuel Fallows, one of the best known clergymen in America. The production is to be released November 27.

"The Argyle Case" Is First Vehicle for Robert Warwick

Picture Story Will Be Based on Stage Success in Which Robert Hilliard Starred Successfully —Ralph Ince Is Engaged by Selznick to Direct the Film

ROBERT WARWICK, the latest of the Selznick-Pictures stars, began work this week on the first of his productions under the new management, an adaptation of "The Argyle Case," the play by Harvey J. O'Higgins and Harriet Ford, in which Robert Hilliard starred so successfully in New York and throughout the country a few seasons ago.

Mr. Harry Rapf, president of the Robert Warwick Film Corporation, purchased the picture rights to "The Argyle Case" for Mr. Warwick by bidding far above the offers of several other corporations eager to secure this valuable material. The play was one of the most successful detective romances ever staged and unquestionably offers the athletic and talented Mr. Warwick the greatest opportunity of his screen career.

"The Argyle Case" is a detective story. The authors had the advantage of the services of no less an authority on the science of modern detection than William J. Burns, the internationally famous investigator. The story involves counterfeiters and the use of the dictagraph and has a strong love interest as well. As Asche Kayton, the role in which Mr. Hilliard appeared, Mr. Warwick will be called upon to perform many feats of daring and physical strength of the sort that has made Douglas Fairbanks such a successful film star, as well as to display an uncanny cleverness in outwitting the most skillful band of counterfeiters in America.

Ralph W. Ince, who recently severed his connection with the Vitagraph Co. has been engaged to direct the production of Mr. Warwick's first Selznick-Picture.

Vitagraph Picture Receives Support of Bankers

"The Dollar and the Law" Shown at Convention of American Bankers' Association at Kansas City

WHEN the "Dollar and the Law," Irvin Cobb's first photodrama produced by the Greater Vitagraph with Lillian Walker in the title role, it was shown to a crowd estimated at between 14,000 and 16,000 people, who packed Convention Hall, Kansas City, to capacity.

This important contribution to the Greater Vitagraph's Winter program will be released December 4 and the bankers of the United States are pledged solidly to its support; thus assuring its money-making qualities to every theatre that books it.

The occasion for the Kansas City showing was the annual convention of the American Bankers Association, and on this particular evening, Mr. M. W. Harrison, secretary of the Savings Bank Section of the National body, acted as master of ceremonies and called attention to the "Dollar and the Law" as one of the finest sermons on financial preparedness ever delivered.

The "Dollar and the Law" contains some intimate scenes taken in and around Washington, D. C., and there are several scenes where Miss Walker does some clever work with the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Wm. G. McAdoo, and the Hon. John Burke, Treasurer of the United States.

"THE MAINSPRING" TO BE RELEASED BY UNIVERSAL

The Universal has scheduled for release as a Red Feather for the week of November 27 "The Mainspring," a story by Charles Agnew McLean, directed by Jack Conway and featuring Ben Wilson with Francelia Billington.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

AT the Claridge on Monday, October 23, Pete Montebello entertained his friends in the American trade at an informal luncheon. For the benefit of those not in the know Pete is a chimpanzee, who drinks Montebello champagne, hence his name perhaps. Pete is said to be the first animal ever dined at the Claridge, and he feels very proud over the fact. Flushed from the success of his premier at the Park theatre in "The Masque of Life," he presided over a gay party at the Claridge. He had champagne straight and then soaked his bread in the wine to reap the benefit of the dregs. He took to it just like a regular actor. As his guests he had Daniel Frohman, Fannie Marinoff and the Count and Countess de Cippico, besides a few others of lesser repute.

Here's one told on Jack Muhall, Universal leading man who recently became a father. With friend wife he went a-shopping. The desired purchase was made, and the family started down the street. Every one they met laughed. Finally after traveling a block or more they came across a friend, and he laughed. When questioned as to the cause of the mirth, the friend pointed to a sign on the front of the newly purchased baby carriage which read: "Our own make, $22.50."

F. A. Kelsey is not using want ads to find what he has lost, for the loss was a desirable one by Kelsey. It consists of twenty-six pounds which disappeared in the past four weeks as the result of training suggested by Henry McRae. Director Kelsey now tips the beam at 230, but hopes to soon be a perfect forty-two.

The scenario department at the Fine Arts studio has one office which the average visitor would think was a playroom for the Fine Art kiddies. The furniture in this is of a diminutive size, as the sole occupant of the office is a wee mite who tips the scales at but eighty-seven pounds. (The name of Anita Loos would be mentioned here, but the little lady states she is ashamed of being known as a scenario writer.)

Afraid of Friday the Thirteenth, the Screamers put their semi-occasional dinner over one day, and made it a joyous event at the King George roof garden Venice, Saturday evening, October 14. This was director's night with the Screamers and their friends, and the guests of honor were Al. E. Christie and Horace Davey, directors of Christie Company; Lloyd Ingraham, director at Fine Arts, and J. C. Epping, business manager at Fine Arts studios.

In connection with the dinner, a kidding sheet named the Screamer was issued. This is said to be a pocket edition, the price of which is one boost. The "eight-reel" paperette contained sufficient advertising to make possible the distribution of a large number of copies gratis at all Los Angeles studios. All studio publicity men and trade paper representatives, as well as local newspaper writers who are members of the Scream Club, will contribute to this sheet, which is shortly to have a complete staff of officers.

The wild eyed fellows you met on Broadway at nine A. M. Thursday morning last were just returning from William Fox's beefsteak dinner held at Tom Healy's.

Well, still being able to punch our typewriter, we print another exclusive interview from that English paper. Just for your edification this one is about Helen Holmes.

"What gave you your start, girl?"
"I got in the Game."
"A success?"
"A 'Signal' success."
"Go out much?"
"No, we're stay-at-Holmes."
"Did you star in 'Hazards of Helen?'"
"We did Kalem (call 'em) that."
"Do you get a good salary?"
"If I didn't there'd be Helen to pay."

Rumors of a Universal-Bluebird combine were set adrift when Joe Brandt was seen going about arm in arm with M. H. Hoffman at the Bronx Exhibitors' ball.

Howard Estabrook, who has directed many secnes in features in which he has starred, has now gone in for direction in earnest and is temporarily absorbing Triangle technique assisting Charles Giblyn in his first eastern production, after which he plans to play the megaphone solo.

For the past several weeks plans for the organization of a Players Club have been in the process of formation, a number of the best known people of the colony being back of the movement. They have so far interested a number of Hollywood business men in the project, and already it is the belief of those at the head of the temporary organization that sufficient members may be secured at a seventy-five dollar initiation fee and twenty-five dollars annual dues to make possible the erection of a club house in the center of Hollywood.

The promoters have leased the Shrine Auditorium for Thanksgiving Eve., and will give a photoplayers' dance later. James Young, Lasky director, is temporary chairman, and others interested in the movement are Wallace Reid, H. P. Caulfield, Charles and Sid Chaplin, William and Dustin Farnum, Oscar Apfel, and many others.

EDITORIAL

The majority of trade reviewers are ex-newspapermen—most of them have once been reporters and perhaps that is why so much fun is poked at the motion picture reporter who enters a scene armed with a stenographer's note book. But the other day we talked with an architect who, of course, knows considerable about surveying, and he was complaining about motion picture surveyors. None of them knew how to handle a transit, he said. A minister found fault with the way church marriage scenes were conducted. A doctor laughed at his celluloid impersonator for the amateurish way he entered upon his work.

All of which goes to show that the motion picture director does not fully acquaint himself with the class of people he is handling in his picture. We say the director because he has charge of the players, and it is he who should see that his actor who is to do the doctor, the minister or the surveyor or the reporter be on a familiar footing with his role. It is quite a hard thing, of course, but the director must remember that the chances are a hundred to one that a member of some profession of which he deals in his picture will be present in the various audiences that witness the production.

Pathe's New Serial Ready for Release Dec. 3

"Pearl of the Army," Featuring Pearl White, Upholds the Doctrine of National Preparedness and Shows Great Danger to Country of Trying to Enforce Monroe Doctrine Without Adequate Facilities—Serial to Have Country Wide Newspaper Publicity of Unusual Nature

"PEARL OF THE ARMY," a military serial of love, adventure and mystery pointing to the dangers that confront this country as a result of the Monroe Doctrine and a policy of unpreparedness, will be released at an early date, according to an announcement just made by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange.

This serial featuring Pearl White in the role of an American Joan of Arc, is now being booked by all of Pathe's thirty exchanges. In "Pearl of the Army," Mr. Berst believes he has a serial with a greater popular appeal than any serial that has ever been made. "Pearl of the Army" deals tactfully with the question of preparedness which today is uppermost in the public mind, and maintains a strict neutrality.

There is a special introduction to the first episode giving the views of Woodrow Wilson, Charles E. Hughes and Theodore Roosevelt on this important question.

"Pearl of the Army" was produced by the Astra Film Corporation under the direction of Edward Jose who produced "The Iron Claw," "The Light That Failed," "The Beloved Vagabond" and other Gold Rooster successes.

The cast, in addition to Miss White includes Ralph Kellar, hero of "The Shielding Shadow" serial, Marie Wayne and Theodore Friebus.

Miss White is probably the most popular actress appearing in serials today. The three serials in which she has already appeared—"The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine" and "The Iron Claw"—were all such great successes that they were prolonged beyond the original number of episodes. Since the conclusion of "The Iron Claw" there has been an insistent demand by exhibitors for another serial featuring Miss White.

The success of "Neal of the Navy" more than a year ago was due in great measure to the patriotic appeal that these pictures made to the motion picture millions in the United States. Ever since that time Pathe has been on the lookout for a story of the army with a patriotic appeal, a strong love interest and a sustained element of mystery that would bring audiences back week after week. A contest was instituted in which many of the foremost authors of the day competed for the large cash prize offered by Pathe for an acceptable story. The winner was Guy McConnell, a popular magazine writer, who in conjunction with some of the leading military authorities of the United States, has devoted many years to a study of the preparedness question. Mr. McConnell's story is based on actual facts unearthed by him in his investigations. These facts have been presented in a manner that will be highly entertaining to motion picture audiences, as the following synopsis will show:

"Pearl of the Army" affords Miss White an opportunity to exercise her splendid abilities in a patriotic way. Her role is that of an American Joan of Arc, stimulated with resolve to prove the innocence of a high military crime for which an officer to whom she was attached was degraded, without posing as such a public benefactor.

In her adventures "Pearl of the Army" discovers that secret foes menace our national peace, and eventually she reveals who they are and why they are plotting to destroy our national independence by wrenching from our control the most highly prized gateway to the commerce of the world—the Panama Canal—thus awakening us to our dangers.

HERBERT, ENGLISH PLAYER, SIGNS WITH THANHOUSER

H. E. Herbert, one of the best known English leading men now in this country, has been signed by Edwin Thanhouser to play opposite Florence La Badie in Philip Lonergan's newest feature, "Enemies of Society."

Mr. Herbert has been in the United States for four years, coming to New York to support Billie Burke in "Mind the Paint." He was leading man with Grace George in Barrie's play, "Half an Hour," and remained with the company when Blanche Bates, and later Martha Hedman, played the leading feminine role.

Preliminary reports indicate that the cooperation of a greater number of newspapers than ever before will be secured. The campaign is being handled by C. R. Seelye, business manager of the Pathe Exchange, and G. A. Smith, serial publicity manager, working under Mr. Berst's direction.

"Pearl of the Army" has been adapted for the screen by George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw" and "The Shielding Shadow."

STEGER ANNOUNCES TERRITORIES FOR "LIBERTINE"

Julius Steger, president of the Triumph Film Corporation, announces the sale of the six-part photoplay entitled "The Libertine," with John Mason and Alma Hanlon to the Masterpiece Film Attractions and the All Star Features Distributors (Sol L. Lesser and Leon D. Netter, Mgrs.) for the following territories:

Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, Deleware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Illinois, California, Nevada, Arizona, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Montana.

Also to the Mammoth Film Coropration (F. E. Backer, Pres.) for the territories of New York, New Jersey and New England.

Also to the Favorite Feature Film Corporation (M. Gottlieb, Mgr.) for Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Iowa.

The southern territories and Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska will be exploited for the Triumph Film Corporation by N. R. Greathouse, which leaves only Michigan unsold. Negotiations are now pending for the last named territories as well as Canada and the foreign rights. The prices paid for the above mentioned territories have established records in the film trade.

New Laws and Court Decisions

This department is designed to keep the industry informed of all news concerning new or projected laws, Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the business, and all events involving any branch of the trade with the authorities in all sections of the country

RESEARCH BUREAU KNOCKS PICTURE HOUSES

Through the efforts of public spirited citizens, who felt that in many respects, the city government of San Francisco could be changed to advantage, an investigation of municipal ordinances and methods of raising and expending revenues was made a short time ago at a cost of $10,000, the work having been done by the New York Bureau of Municipal Research. To the surprise of theatre owners the report covering saloon licenses, vice conditions and similar matters also contains some advice regarding the management of local moving picture houses.

In connection with the recommendations for the abolishment of private booths and rooms in cafes and restaurants, where liquor is served is one affecting motion picture houses. The investigators profess to have been impressed with the need of separate sections in motion picture houses for the use of women and girls who might come to entertainments without an escort, and urged the passage of some measure that would compel theatre owners to keep their houses fairly well lighted. They declared that some motion picture houses were being kept almost totally dark, and that this state of conditions was being maintained for "commercial reasons." This report has not been widely circulated, but those among the trade who have seen it are loud in their disapproval, declaring that local houses are in the front rank among the theatres of the country.

"CIVILIZATION" PASSED BY OHIO CENSORS

"Civilization," the Ince spectacle, was unanimously passed by the Ohio State Board of Censors at its meeting on Wednesday, November 1st, without a single elimination. Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, in charge of the Board, tendered her congratulations to Producer Ince on the exceptionally good qualities of his picture.

This is the first big spectacle which has secured the unanimous commendation of the Ohio Board, which is noted for the severity of its methods in censorship. Mrs. Miller stated to Frank Walton, Mr. Ince's representative, that the Board was so accustomed to seeing the mediocre in photoplay productions that it was refreshing to have something as good as "Civilization" presented for inspection.

The approval of the Ohio State Board immensely enhances the value of the picture to the A. G. Fontana Productions, Inc., which controls the rights of the picture for Ohio, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, and West Virginia.

Mutual Has Set Aside Large Fund for Prosecution and Conviction of Thieves Stealing Chaplin Films

A CAMPAIGN of damage suits, and criminal prosecutions against film pirates operating with fake Chaplin pictures has been ordered by President John R. Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation.

A special protection fund of formidable proportions was set aside for the purpose when the Chaplin project was launched. A staff of detectives and legal aids has been organized for operations under the direction of Samuel M. Field, general counsel of the Mutual.

Attempts to steal Chaplin prints from a number of the Mutual's sixty-eight exchanges in the United States and Canada, have led to discoveries that will come to light in the form of raids and action in the criminal courts.

A recent raid in a southern city recovered several stolen Chaplin reels. Meanwhile indictment for grand larceny has been returned against three men, who will be taken into custody on warrant now in the hands of special detectives, if the fugitives can be overtaken.

"I suppose this thievery will continue," remarked Mr. Freuler, "until we put two or three of these fellows into prison. That we will most certainly do. The bold and astonishing daring of the thieves, crooks and grafters upon the fame of Chaplin is beyond belief. Exhibitors are being offered pictures of Chaplin made up of ancient junk, stolen, "duped" and assembled together by various devious and unlawful methods.

"Such pictures are of no value to the exhibitor and any showing of them is a damage to the reputation of Mr. Chaplin. The old Chaplin pictures are no more representative of the Chaplin art of to-day than the nickelodeon of 1905 is representative of the modern theatre. We are spending $670,000 for Mr. Chaplin's services, and a good many thousands more to put out the pictures. We have a good deal ready to spend in prosecutions to protect our investment, and our customers. This statement is not a threat—it is a sincere promise, and we earnestly hope it will be duly observed."

Minneapolis Exhibitors' Association Appoints Own Censorship Board to Work with City Authorities

UNLESS the next Minnesota Legislature passes a censor law, Minneapolis is free from its grip. Both Otto Langum and Thomas Van Lear, called to address the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Minneapolis on their attitude toward censorship, have declared that they will not work with the present unofficial board. Mr. Langum said he would either do the censoring personally through the aid of his police department or turn the work over to a board composed of motion picture men. Mr. Van Lear said he was opposed to censorship in principle and would have no board advisory or otherwise.

Mayor Wallace G. Nye, who created the present advisory board, has two months to serve. He gave the association until October 30 to offer a substitute for the present board.

They have offered to make up a board composed of a state's rights film manager, a feature exchange manager, a regular service exchange manager, an exhibitors' supply house manager, a local film producing manager, a motion picture trade journal manager, one representative appointed by the mayor and the nine executive officers of the association. Many were opposed to the formation of any kind of a board, but the motion offering this one was passed because the association had promised the mayor to name a substitute for the present board.

PURITY PASSES CENSORS IN PENNSYLVANIA

"Purity" has at last been declared fit to be viewed by the inhabitants of Pennsylvania. The Censor Board, of course, did some purifying of "Purity," but let her off lightly.

Another Censor Board, the Newark, N. J., one of police commissioners, has also put its official sanction on the "Purity" picture.

Exhibitors in Pennsylvania are eagerly sending inquiries about the release date of the film

"THE LIBERTINE" BOOKED FOR A WEEK'S RUN AT THE BURLAND

F. E. Backer, president of the Mammoth Film Corporation, which is handling "The Libertine" for New York, New Jersey and the New England States, has booked the picture for the Burland theatre, the Bronx, during the week of November 26. "The Libertine" was produced in six reels by Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden, and features John Mason and Alma Hanlon.

SUPREME COURT TIGHTENS TEXAS CENSORSHIP

The Supreme Court of the State of Texas has settled a long dispute between the Xydias Amusement Company, Houston, and the City of Houston in favor of the second party. A. J. Xydias, head of the amusement company, sent out a writ of error on November 4, 1915, to enjoin the City of Houston and the members of its censor board from prosecuting the plaintiffs for exhibiting motion pictures without first obtaining a permit from the local board of censors. The case was hard fought but was finally decided in favor of the board. This means that all exhibitors of Houston will hereinafter as before be obliged to obtain a permit from the board before showing their pictures, no matter whether the pictures are open to argument on the part of the board or not.

The case had been well discussed before exhibitors' meetings throughout the State of Texas and at one time was taken before the Board of Trade. The motion picture trade in general looked with interest on the case, for if the decision had swung the other way it would have brought about sweeping changes in the censorship policy now effective in the state.

Exhibitors of Texas believe that the Supreme Court decision will result in even a much more rigid censorship being maintained than was previously the case.

HARPER FILM CORPORATION OFTEN CONFUSED WITH HARPER PUBLISHING COMPANY

True greatness is sometimes slow in manifesting itself. Nobody had ever heard of the Harper Film Corporation a hundred days ago. Now it looms large in the eye of the motion picture business of the entire world.

For the Harper Film Corporation is the body controlling the great Ince million dollar spectacle "Civilization." Of this corporation, Thos. H. Ince is the president, and his associates are some of the best known men in the motion picture business.

"Harper" is Ince's middle name, it is the "H" of Thos. H. Ince. The reasons for its selection as the distinguishing title of the company controlling the primary rights and destinies of "Civilization" are therefore plain.

Confusion sometimes arises in the public mind between the names of the Harper Film Corporation, and the Harper Publishing Company, identified with the well-known and old time magazines, but of course there is no connection, business or otherwise between the two enterprises.

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR" RUNS TWO DAYS AT NEW YORK THEATRE

The two days' showing of Alice Brady in "Bought and Paid For" at the New York theatre, where one day for each photoplay is the rarely broken rule, was so successful that Mr. Loew is in treaty with the World-Brady interests for several repetitions of the experiment. It is quite possible that all the World releases hereafter may "double up" in this manner at the New York.

Objection to Public Showing of "Where Are My Children?" Overcome in New Jersey Town

IN a crusade against undesirable moving pictures, a committee of clergymen and laymen in Somerville, N. J., consisting of the Rev. Roy E. Vale, the Rev. Frederick Blazer, Dr. Francis McConaughy, Hugh D. Madole, E. J. Shaughnessy and P. C. Van Nuys, made application last week to Mayor William V. Steele to prohibit the exhibition of the photo play, "Where Are My Children?" advertised by a Somerville theatre. It was the contention of Mr. Shaughnessy of the committee that the picture was immoral. The management of the theatre met the objections of the committee by offering to give a special exhibition of the picture to be passed upon by the committee. The offer was accepted by the members of the committee.

After viewing the picture for an hour the clergymen unanimously decided that, while it had a few features that were objectionable to them, it carried with it a powerful moral lesson, and if it were shown at all, should be shown before each sex separately and to no one under the age of eighteen. The other members of the committee agreed with this view and permission has been granted to show "Where Are My Children?" in Somerville.

OHIO EXHIBITORS MAY APPEAL FROM CENSORS

The final entry of the supreme court in "The Birth of a Nation" film case, in Cleveland, makes no reference to the original statement given out when the case was decided that there was no law in Ohio under which the record in the case could be certified to the court for observation. The entry states, however, that the reason the court dismissed the appeal of the Epoch Producing Company from the decision of the board of censors was "because all the matters and things heard and exhibited to the censors was not certified in the record to the court, and that the court was therefore unable to determine whether the order of the board in barring the film from Ohio was reasonable or unreasonable."

The decision of the court, therefore, does not prevent exhibitors in the future from appealing to the court from the decision of the censors.

Ohio Censorship Law Subject to Appeal Decision of State Supreme Court in "Birth of a Nation" Case

ATTORNEY JOSEPH HEINTZMAN of Cincinnati scored a victory in his fight against the State Board of Censors, which barred "The Birth of a Nation" from the screens of Ohio, in the revised decision of the State Supreme Court last week, holding that the transcript of the proceedings before the censors does not contain "all things heard and exhibited." The original opinion of the high trbunal was that there was no appeal provided in the censorship law from the decision of the censors. Mr. Heintzman, who represents the Epoch Producing Company, thereupon announced that he was satisfied with the decision and would bring proceedings in Federal Court to have the law declared unconstitutional on the ground that it did not provide a judicial appeal.

The final decision of the State Supreme Court it is believed will mean that the film will be viewed by the judges in court and that they will be permitted to decide whether or not it should be permitted to go before the people of the state.

"We will be satisfied if the film is reviewed in court," said Mr. Heintzman. "We regard the decision as a victory over the censor board."

The court was divided five to two, on the decision. Judges Jones and Wanamaker dissented from the majority opinion of Judges Nichols, Newman, Donahue, Johnson and Matthias. The original barred film will be presented in court attached to the transcript of the hearings before the censors.

JOSEPH M. GAITES NEGOTIATING FOR RIGHTS TO "CIVILIZATION"

Joseph M. Gaites, managing director of the A. G. Fontana Productions, Inc., owners of the rights to Thos. H. Ince's "Civilization" in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware and West Virginia, is negotiating with J. Parker Read, Jr., for the rights to the solid South, including Texas. Mr. Gaites has planned a sweeping publicity campaign for the states his company controls, and expects to reap a veritable harvest with the great spectacle.

"THE CRISIS" SOLD FOR BIG BLOCK OF STATES

H. P. Wolfberg, of St. Louis, Mo., has completed the organization of the Masterpiece Film Corporation, St. Louis, Mo., for the purpose of exploiting the Selig photodrama, "The Crisis," in the territory of Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia. This is a big field—one of the richest in the country for the exploitation of motion pictures. The price paid is said to exceed six figures—exact amount not stated.

It is the intention of the president and general manager, Mr. Wolfberg, to exploit "The Crisis" in the "Sherman-Elliott way" in the larger theatres in one and two week stands. Mr. Wolfberg says he will have not less than twenty prints working by December 1.

The sales campaign of "The Crisis" established a record in the disposal of territorial rights.

CHARLOTTE WALKER BEGINS "MARY LAWSON'S SECRET"

Charlotte Walker, the new Thanhouser star, has started work on "Mary Lawson's Secret," Lloyd Lonergan's play, under the direction of John B. O'Brien. The picture will be photographed by H. B. Harris, who has been Mr. O'Brien's camera man for five years.

Among those in the cast supporting Miss Walker will be Robert Vaughn, J. H. Gilmour, and Harris Gordon.

"IT MAY BE YOUR DAUGHTER" GETS SHOWING AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA

Although it has only been offered for sale for the last three weeks "It May Be Your Daughter," Moral Uplift Society of America, has met with unusual success as a state right proposition.

Iowa and Nebraska have been purchased by the Western Film Company of Sioux City, Iowa. It gave the initial showing at the Scenic theatre, Sioux City, and has forwarded this telegram dated Oct. 31:

"'It May Be Your Daughter' opened at the Scenic theatre here yesterday to turn away business at twenty-five cents admission; everybody well pleased. Press gave wonderful criticism. Accept our congratulations. C. H. Hays."

Michigan has been taken over by G. W. Weeks of Detroit, Michigan. The Eagle Film Company of the Strand, Cleveland, has secured Ohio and Kentucky. R. Dick Feature Film Company, Minneapolis, has taken Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wisconsin and Montana.

"CIVILIZATION" BOOKS BIG IN NEW YORK

Nathan Hirsh, president and general manager of the "Civilization" Feature Company, buyers of the New York City rights of Thos. H. Ince's great spectacle, has just taken over the picture for the entire state. Already Greater New York has netted Mr. Hirsh nearly $40,000 in bookings. A. H. Woods, from whom Mr. Hirsh obtained the state rights, turned over an enormous bundle of contracts totaling many thousands of dollars in bookings throughout the state. President Hirsh is sanguine over the prospects of his company to make a big profit with Thos. H. Ince's "Civilization."

Norma Talmadge, Selznick Star, Marries Theatrical Man

Shortly After Announcement of the Engagement, Joseph M. Schenck, General Manager of the Marcus Loew Enterprises, Forms Company to Exploit Subjects Featuring Actress

NORMA TALMADGE, one of the youngest and most popular motion picture stars and the latest acquisition to Selznick-Pictures, became the bride last week of Joseph M. Schenck, General Manager of the Marcus Loew Enterprises.

It was an open secret that Mr. Schenck and Miss Talmadge were engaged, but the couple surprised their friends by slipping quietly away in a motor car to have the ceremony performed in Stamford, Conn.

Any idea of a wedding trip was postponed by the fact that Miss Talmadge had to return to New York immediately to begin work on her first Selznick-Pictures offering, a film version of the noted drama, "Panthea." Director Allan Dwan had everything in readiness for the star to begin work on the picture on her return to the city. It is expected that the production will be ready for release before the first of the year.

This production will be on the same lavish and magnificent scale as all other Selznick-Pictures. The original drama is from the pen of Monckton Hoff and was one of the greatest successes of the decade as played in the capitals of Europe and in America as a star vehicle for Mme. Olga Petrova.

The wedding was the culmination of a true motion picture romance. Mr. Schenck, who is Mr. Loew's general manager, has seen practically every motion picture production played at the Loew's houses, and he was first attracted to Miss Talmadge by watching her on the screen in the early days of her apprenticeship at the Vitagraph Company. At that time Miss Talmadge was a mere child, but as Mr. Schenck watched her progress to glorious young womanhood and from a position as one of the minor players of the company to that of a popular star, his admiration changed to a warmer feeling and he determined to discover whether or not his idea of Miss Talmadge would stand the test of actual acquaintance.

Shortly after the announcement of their engagement, Mr. Schenck organized the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation for the purpose of exploiting the popular young star in a series of exceptionally big productions to be marketed on the open booking plan.

By that time Lewis J. Selznick had launched his open booking campaign with Clara Kimball Young as the first of his stars and her production of "The Common Law" as the first of the new Selznick-Pictures. Mr. Selznick's success lead to a proposition from Mr. Schenck to take over the product of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation for distribution under the trade name, Selznick-Pictures. The deal was quickly consummated and Miss Talmadge will, for a period of years, be one of the leading Selznick-Picture stars appearing in about eight big productions a year.

MIDNIGHT MATINEES OF FOX'S "ROMEO AND JULIET"

William Fox's "Romeo and Juliet" was so enthusiastically received at the Empire theatre, New Orleans, that the management inaugurated "midnight matinees" to accommodate the extra crowds. The "matinees" began half an hour before midnight and lasted until one in the morning.

ROGSON BUYS "WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN?" FOR NEW YORK

Rogson Film Company, Inc., with offices at 15 West Swan street, Buffalo, New York, and Gaiety Theatre Building, 1547 Broadway, New York City, have bought exclusive rights for "Where Are My Children?" for New York State, exclusive of Greater New York.

They also closed contracts for "Prima Donna's Husband" with Holbrook Blinn, and "Around the World in 80 Days," Jules Verne's great novel.

They control "One Day," "Salamander," "Birth of Character," "Birth of Man," "Heart of New York," "End of the World," "Mutt and Jeff Series," "Hans and Fritz" for New York State, exclusive of Greater New York.

The Buffalo office is managed by Charles R. Rogers, and the road representatives are: Sherman S. Webster and Edward Sonin. The Rogson Film Company, Inc., are open to contract for motion pictures for the State of New York.

The company is very well organized and have the confidence of the exhibitors of New York State.

"MAZAMAS" IS RELEASED BY EDUCATIONAL

"Mazamas and the Three Sisters," a two-reel film, produced by Robert C. Bruce, is released by the Educational Films Corporation, New York.

The Mazamas, a club of mountaineers, were organized on the summit of Mt. Hood, Oregon, July 19, 1894, 193 persons reaching the top that day. Any person who has climbed to the summit of a snow peak on which there is at least one living glacier is eligible to membership.

The Club held their annual encampment on August, 1916, in the Three Sisters Country in the Cascade Mountains of Oregon at an elevation of 6200 feet.

The word "Mazama" is derived from the Mexican name of the mountain goat which makes its home high up among the pinnacles and glaciers of Western America.

WESTERN RIGHTS SOLD FOR "MASQUE OF LIFE"

D. J. Grauman of San Francisco, the Coast buyer of big features is at the Hotel Astor and announces that he has secured the rights to J. L. Kempner's big spectaculer film, "The Masque of Life" for the states of California, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada, Wyoming, Utah, Montana, Oregon, Washington and Idaho. He came all the way from San Francisco to see the film and says that he feels that it will make a real hit in the territories which he controls.

SPECIAL ADVERTISING FOR FOX'S "HONOR SYSTEM"

The William Fox publicity department has issued a comprehensive advertising booklet for the special ten-reel release "The Honor System" which deals with prison reform. The book is in twenty-four pages and includes a synopsis of the story and various views expressed on the honor system by men of importance. It is attractively printed and contains illustrations from the picture.

Exhibitors Rate "The Return of Eve" High

Essanay Entering on Busiest Period in Its History—Studio Facilities Increased—Henry Walthall's Next Feature, "The Truant Soul," Nearly Ready—"Prince of Graustark" Booked Solid

WITH its first features under the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay banner being received with acclaim, Essanay is entertaining the busiest era in its history.

"The Return of Eve" has opened to crowds wherever shown and the Chicago exhibitors have given it a rating of 90—unusually high for any feature—as a box-office attraction.

"The Prince of Graustark," not only has been booked solid for first runs, but return bookings have been simultaneously recorded. Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton are featured.

Inquiries constantly flow in concerning Henry B. Walthall's next feature, "The Truant Soul," and this will be assured of a solid opening in every large city of the country. Mr. Walthall is at work on the last two hundred of the six hundred scenes and it will be ready early in December. Mary Charleson supports Mr. Walthall.

The studio facilities are being increased, a thoroughly modern lighting equipment installed in the newest large studio, which alone is the largest artificially lighted expanse in the industry. This will permit of as many as three directors with their varied sets working in this one building.

One studio is entirely occupied by "The Truant Soul." The third studio is constantly occupied by companies at work day and night.

"The Chaperon" and "The Breaker" will respectively follow "The Prince of Graustark" and be issued before "The Truant Soul." Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien appear in the principal parts in the former, while Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig take the leads in the latter. President George K. Spoor of Essanay has viewed both productions and is satisfied that in them he has two pictures well in keeping with the standard he is determined to maintain.

STANDARD TO HANDLE MOSS PICTURES

The Standard Film Service Company, the largest independent exchange operating in the States of Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, has contracted with the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation whereby they will become exclusive distributors in their territory of the Moss program.

"The Salamander," the adaptation of the famous novel of the same name by Owen Johnson, which has never been exploited in Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky, will inaugurate the advent of the Moss program in this territory, and will be followed in Ohio and Kentucky by "The Power of Evil" and "Boots and Saddles." In Michigan "One Day" has never showed at any theatre, and will be released simultaneously with "The Salamander," and then will be followed by the regular program of one feature each month.

ARGOSY FILMS, INC., NEARLY READY TO RELEASE "WHERE D'YE GET THAT STUFF?"

Argosy Films, Inc., will shortly release a five-reel comedy-burlesque, entitled "Where D'ye Get That Stuff? or, Sallie's Blighted Career," featuring Edna Aug in the title role.

The Argosy Films, Inc., was recently formed for the purpose of making and releasing on a state rights basis comedies and dramas. H. J. Sheppard has been appointed general manager of the company, with executive offices at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

The producers have introduced many innovations into the film. By trick photography they have forced the most important personages in this country into the picture, including Roosevelt, Taft, Hughes, Bryan, Bernhardt, Cavalieri and others.

STERN REPORTS GOOD BUSINESS ON "WHERE ARE MY CHILDREN?"

M. M. Stern, representative for the Rogson Film Compaany, Inc., reports that he is securing a number of contracts for "Where Are My Children?" from the theatres who have not played this feature. He is also meeting with wonderful success in booking repeats in the houses that have already played the same.

He finds that the interest in this picture is still very great. The Plaza theatre, Buffalo, played it November 7, 8 and 9 to capacity business at every performance.

"THE CRISIS" WILL GET SHOWING BEFORE NOTABLES

The Master Photo Play Attractions of Newark, N. J., who recently acquired the New Jersey rights for the Sherman-Elliott photodrama, "The Crisis," have arranged through E. J. O'Donnell of the Sherman-Elliott, Inc., to give a private presentation of "The Crisis" on November 21 at East Orange, New Jersey, to an audience consisting of Governor Fielder, his staff and state officials, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Edison.

GRIFFITH LEAVES FOR THE EAST

D. W. Griffith is to leave Los Angeles for the East within the next few days, where he will complete arrangements for the showing of "Intolerance" at Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston. It is not definitely known which city will next see the producer's latest wonder.

Strong Supporting Cast for Pathe's New Serial

Cast of "Pearl of the Army," Besides Pearl White in Stellar Role, Will Have Ralph Kellard, Theodore Friebus, Marie Wayne and W. T. Carleton

AN all-star cast will support Pearl White in Pathe's great military-mystery serial, "Pearl of the Army" announced for release December 3. "The Shielding Shadow" marked the coming of the all-star cast to the serial motion picture. Its success has been demonstrated, and an even stronger cast has been gathered for "Pearl of the Army," which is expected to outdo all of Miss White's former vehicles.

Before "The Shielding Shadow" was released, the Pathe Company announced that it was the greatest serial produced to date. This claim has been proven correct in every section of the country and Pathe now tells the hundreds of exhibitors who have made money with its serial hits, that "Pearl of the Army" will be an even bigger box-office attraction than "The Shielding Shadow."

Pearl White is without any doubt the greatest serial star in the world. The cast supporting her in "Pearl of the Army" includes Ralph Kellard, Theodore Friebus, Marie Wayne, and W. T. Carleton.

Best Role of Career

Her role of Pearl Dare, the daughter of Colonel Dare, in "Pearl of the Army," is the best she has ever had. It gives her an opportunity to act as never before, and also to do the thrilling "stunts" that made her famous.

Throughout the serial there is a strange mysterious character, called the Silent Menace. The strong love interest is furnished by the court-martialing of the man to whom she has given her heart, for a crime of which she is determined to prove his innocence, and the coming into her life of a stranger who seems in some way connected with the events of the past.

Guy W. McConnell, author of the original story from which "Pearl of the Army" has been scenarioized by George B. Seitz, has devoted years to the study of the subject in hand. In addition to this, he is a well-known writer of fiction. He and Mr. Seitz have made a splendid script full of love, mystery, adventure and thrills, which has been entrusted for production to Edward Jose, producer of "The Iron Claw."

With Pearl White as the star, this splendid cast has been assembled to give "Pearl of the Army" the interpretation it deserves, and to make it as great a money-maker for exhibitors as it must be to outdraw the other hits which have made Pathe famous for one serial success after another.

Stars Cheered at Showing of "Romeo and Juliet"

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne Receive Enthusiastic Welcome from Crowd at Initial Showing of Picture at Cumberland Theatre, Brooklyn

AN enthusiastic audience greeted Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, noted Metro stars, at the Cumberland theatre in Brooklyn, when they appeared in person at the showing of the Metro production, "Romeo and Juliet," in which they play the title roles. The management had advertised a "Bushman-Bayne night," and great crowds gathered to see the two stars.

When Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne arrived at the theatre, accompanied by Helen Dunbar, who appears as Lady Capulet in the picturization of Shakespeare's immortal love story, a huge throng in front of the house set up a cheer that could be heard for blocks and which lasted for several minutes.

At the completion of the picture Mr. Bushman, Miss Bayne and Miss Dunbar were presented to the audience and made brief speeches of thanks for the ovation tendered them. The applause was deafening, and Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne were forced to bow appreciation.

"Romeo and Juliet" has broken all attendance records at the Cumberland, despite the fact that the admission fee was raised for this feature. Francis A. Mangan, manager of the Cumberland, had the house appropriately decorated for the occasion and increased his orchestra to sixteen pieces to play the beautiful score arranged especially for the great production, by Iréné Bergé and Samuel M. Berg. Soloists sang the duet from the balcony scene in the famous Gounod opera.

Mr. Mangan's wide-awake policy added much to the success of the picture, which he says he intends booking for a return engagement at the earliest possible date.

THE BLUEBIRD Photoplay "The Eagle's Wings" is one of those rare productions that cannot be adequately described. It is too big; based on too great a theme; its hundreds of scenes cover too wide a range and its appeal to the emotions is too strong to be presented understandingly in words alone. The story is based on the idea of National Defence. No tawdry costume play is this; no trick photography or mimic warfare. For the so-called spectacular, there has been substituted a gripping realism that is universal in its appeal. "The Eagle's Wings" is not on the BLUEBIRD Program. It is a special release, and but for the fact that BLUEBIRD (Inc.) paid a huge sum for it, it would have been State Righted. It presents an unique and wonderful opportunity to all Exhibitors.

Since the first announcement of that marvelous drama of patriotism "The Bugle of Algiers," hundreds of thousands of copies of the story have been distributed to soldiers in the trenches, because regardless of nationality, it is one of the world's greatest stories of patriotism. The same qualities which have given the book a phenomenal sale are the strong points in this unusual play. The many announcements made in the Saturday Evening Post have created a demand for this superb picture which means capacity houses to you. Book now through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

ANNUAL BALL OF BRONX EXHIBITORS IS A SUCCESS

THE Cinema Exhibitors' Association, Bronx County, New York, held its fourth annual movie entertainment and ball, Monday evening, November 6, at Hunts' Point Palace, the Bronx. The association represents the second Bronx local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The ball was well attended and officials of the organization believe that the receipts will surpass even those of last year which were quite large. During the early part of the evening several motion picture stars appeared and entertained the crowd and later dancing took place.

Henry Cole, vice-president of the association, introduced the various stars in phrases of 1,000-adjective power. The manner in which he lauded them made several of the press agents present green with envy. And here and there a New York State or Bronx County candidate for some office was sandwiched in between the stars. William Calder, who successfully ran for United States Senator from New York, led off the list. Em Gorman, the clever little girl who appeared in "The Soul of a Child," rendered a monologue and brought down the house. Dainty Ruth, another child actress who is a Bronx native and who did some clever work for Thanhouser, gave a song and dance act.

Lucille Lee Stewart sang, Huntley Gordon spoke and after that Violet Mersereau entered the room following a brass band.

Maurice Costello, hero of a dozen odd "Crimson Stains" recited a sob story, Rose Tapley said that Vitagraph was going to be even greater and Wally Van walked out to so much applause that he left his speech in the wings. Carlyle Blackwell of World said it wasn't his place to speak and left the stage to Tom Howard of the national orzanization. Howard said that every star in America would be present at the exhibitors' ball at Madison Square Garden and no one denied him.

The boxes ranged around the mezzanine floor were held by various film companies and officials including Edison, McKinley Square theatre, General, Mutual, Thanhouser, Vitagraph, World, Carlyle Blackwell, President John Wittman of the Bronx League, Henry Cole, Violet Mersereau, Universal, Kalem, Screen Club, A. Bauernfreund, chairman of the Entertainment committee, Reception Committee and Bronx County Officials.

"THE LAND JUST OVER YONDER," THE RECENT RELEASE OF THE UNITY SALES CORPORATION, IS PROVING POPULAR

"The Land Just Over Yonder," the six-reel feature produced by the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company, from the Saturday Evening Post story of the same name by Peter B. Kyne, is being released to exhibitors through the Unity Sales Corporation's exchanges.

This picture is an appealing story of the devotion of an old man for a boy and gives us a touching picture of life in the great mining centers of the West. The scenes are especially good when depicting mining camp life in its varied phases and are also especially well staged.

Cobe, Unity, Reports Good Coast Business

"I'm Delighted with the Progress Made by the United Film Service with 'The Yellow Menace' in the Western Territory," Says Vice-President of the Company

ANDREW J. COBE, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, who is at the present time on the West Coast visiting the exchanges and exhibitors, reports that very flattering progress is being made in the distribution of "The Yellow Menace" and the other Unity releases.

Mr. Cobe writes the home office as follows: "I am delighted with the progress which the Unity Film Service is making with 'The Yellow Menace' through the Western territory. It was natural to suppose that 'The Yellow Menace' would attract people of the Western country, because in this section there is more discussion of questions that concern China and Japan and the other Eastern countries than anywhere else in the United States.

"Naturally, too, just at this time when the questions of preparedness on the foreign policy of our government are being so widely discussed by the political parties, any picture is decidedly more attractive which treats of any of these subjects. Exhibitors and exchangemen in the West who have seen 'The Yellow Menace' do not hesitate to congratulate us on the manner in which the question of preparedness has been handled in our serial. We do not for a moment exhibit in this picture any national animosity toward the Chinese or Japanese races, but we do exhibit to the people the dangerous situation in which an unprepared America might find itself should this country happen not to steer its foreign policies along careful lines.

"I have just closed a deal with the De Luxe Film-Lasky Corporation, whereby this enterprising organization will handle our feature program in California, Nevada and Arizona. Mark Lasky has built up for himself a very fine business on the Coast.

A YEAR ELAPSES SINCE BESSIE LOVE ENTERED PICTURES

It marked almost a year in the brief screen history of Bessie Love, when she began rehearsals for her new vehicle, "The Heiress at Coffee Dan's," in which she will make her next appearance as a Triangle-Fine Arts star.

Bessie's first featured part was that of a Swedish servant girl in "The Flying Torpedo," with John Emerson. Previous to that she was an unknown "extra," working after school hours for pocket money. One day, while Director Emerson was looking for "types," at the Fine Arts studio, prior to the filming of "The Flying Torpedo," he was struck by the bright appearance of a little girl waiting among the crowd of supernumeraries. Calling her over, Emerson proceeded to engage her for the part of the Swedish girl in the story.

In rapid succession she has been featured with W. S. Hart in "The Aryan," with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Good Bad-Man," and with Wilfred Lucas in "Hell-to-Pay Austin."

Last month she registered a decided success when making her debut in stardom as "A Sister of Six."

Heavy War Tax on Australian Picture Theatres

Paris, Oct. 20.

THE bill which has been designed by the Commonwealth Ministry to impose the tax on entertainments, has been introduced into the House of Representatives by the Treasurer (Mr. Higgs) and read a first time. The extent of the proposed tax is ½ on each 3d ticket, 1d on a 6d ticket and 1d for each succeeding 6d or part thereof. An entertainment for the purpose of the act includes any exhibition, performance, lecture, amusement, game or sport, for admission to which payment is made. The tax will take effect from November 1st, 1916.

It is proposed in the bill that tickets issued at places of entertainment shall be stamped with the amount of tax due on them. In special cases, however, persons may be admitted through a barrier, which automatically registers their number and the proportionate tax will be collected from the proprietor of the entertainment on the basis of that registration.

If any person is admitted to any place of entertainment without paying a tax he will be liable to a penalty of £5, and the proprietor of the entertainment will be liable to the extent of £50. Penalties ranging from imprisonment for one year to fourteen years are provided in the case of any person guilty of a fraudulent act in connection with the provisions of this measure, such as the forging of stamps.

War-time profits will be allowed for the year 1916-17 up to seven and eight per cent, with £200 exemption, the Government to take all war profits over this amount.

An impression seems to have gained ground in local quarters that the picture theatres will not be materially affected by this new tax, for the reason that the prices are low and with a slight increase to meet the new impost, will still be within the reach of the poorest patron. It would be good news for many who have money in this class of investment if the experience of the "Old-Country" bore out the prediction. Unfortunately this is not the case. After the tax was applied in England a sporting and dramatic paper had a list compiled of the number of picture theatres doing business at the outbreak of war and those with open doors three months after the imposition of the tax. It seems almost incredible but during that comparatively short space of time no fewer than 700 of these places of entertainment in and around London were compelled to close their doors. It was contended by many who threw up the sponge that the prices in vogue at the time of the application of the tax represented the maximum amount the poorer classes could pay, and that once they withdrew their patronage there was nothing for the management but to accept the inevitable, and temporarily at least, go out of business. The Government hopes to raise the sum of £2,000,000 (10 million dollars) by this new tax.

A deputation representing all the theatrical interests in Australia, including 900 picture theatres, called upon the Commonwealth Treasurer in connection with the proposed tax. It was introduced by Mr. H. D. McIntosh (Representing Tivoli Theatres Limited). Among those present were Harold Ashton (J. C. Williamson, Limited), W. Barrington Miller, H. Gee, W. A. Gibson (Union Theatres, Limited), Julius Grant (Kings Theatre), Ben J. Fuller (Fuller's Vaudeville), Bert Bailey, H. F. Phillips (Victoria Exhibitors' Association), R. Stephens (Queensland Cinematograph Assoc.), F. L. Thomson, W. J. Howe (Amusement Managers' Association), F. W. Thring (Williamson-Waddington, Limited).

The object of the deputation was to secure a modification, if possible, or a reduction by half, of the proposed tax on amusements. The leader of the deputation emphatically protested against the tax as being an utterly unfair class tax in the sense that it penalized one special industry far and away beyond the degree which all other commercial enterprises had to bear.

While the deputation felt that it would be useless to ask for the withdrawal of the tax in its entirety they earnestly appealed to have the scale modified by at least 50 per cent, bringing it into line with the tax in England. Mr. Thring (Williamson-Waddington's), said that if the proposed tax did not produce utter extinction of the picture industry, it would mean that 90 out of every 100 would have to close. The present duty on films at the rate of 2d per foot was even now a burden on the industry, and brought into the revenue £100,000.

In reply, Mr. Higgs quoted the effect of the tax on the English people and how they had accepted it without murmuring in the least and he did not see that it would have any more serious effect here. In conclusion he said that if after six months the deputation were still suffering from the effects of the tax he would bring the position before the Cabinet.

The Minister for Internal Affairs has declined requests that women should be represented on the appeal board under the Kinematograph Censorship Act. He says that the whole object of the Act is to encourage proprietors to obtain films that need no censoring. The censorship began on October 1st and the fees charged should cover the cost of administration.

George Barnes of Melbourne, Victoria, has produced a multiple reel feature entitled "The Life of Adam Lindsay Gordon," which, as the name implies, is the life story of Australia's famous poet. Hugh McCrae, who has gained considerable distinction locally as a poet and actor, portrays the role of Adam Lindsay Gordon very effectively. Barnes, who has been in the theatrical field for a considerable time, only recently arrived back from the United States.

Melbourne will shortly have three more new theatres—that is if the new tax does not frighten the proprietors away—which are said to represent a total actual cost of £30,000. Bourke Street, Melbourne, at the present time may be considered the Australian Broadway or Gay White Way, whichever you will, for within a two hundred yards radius of this thoroughfare there are no fewer than eight picture theatres, viz., Hoyts, Paramount, Melba, Brittania, Gaiety, Victoria, Empire and the newly-opened Star. And there are rumors of several more near the above houses. In addition to these picture theatres there are the following legitimate houses in the same radius: The Tivoli, Bijou, Kings, Royal, with Her Majesty's around the corner. With the usual electric signs on each of the above the City Council need not worry about anyone getting lost on this popular thoroughfare.

A rumor is at present being circulated among the local picture centers that a new film exchange is about to start in Sydney with a class of features that have not yet been shown in this country. Considering that Metro, Triangle, World, Paramount, Fox, General, V-L-S-E, Mutual and Universal (Bluebird and Red Feather), are all well represented here it is rather a questionable report of "Dame Rumor's."

Waddington's Pictures, Limited, have been voluntarily wound up and the new combine known as Williamson-Waddingtons, Limited, has been registered. The first move of this new organization is the purchasing of Australian rights to the "Mysteries of Myra," which will make their initial appearance here next week. Other features have been secured but as yet have not been announced.

The Gem theatre, Sydney, has been opened and is noted for the fact that the Biograph operator is the only male employee in the theatre, the orchestra, ushers (and even the managers), are all women.

Fraser Films, now having a good supply on hand of their popular features, will release a Blue Bird and a Red Feather feature weekly instead of only one as heretofore.

Winfield R. Sheehan of the Fox Film Corporation, arrived last week after an extended tour of the British Isles. Mr. Sheehan was accompanied by his wife, formerly Miss Laurell of Ziegfeld Follies.

Jack Gavin, who is now working on a multiple reel film, "The Birth of Australia," is credited with being the first man to produce a four-reel picture in Australia. This which was an adaption of a popular bushranging story—"Thunderbolt"—enjoyed great popularity at the time of its release. Gavin himself played the lead. At that time the average length of a dramatic film shown here was from 800 to 900 feet, while that of a comedy was about 200 feet. Everyone believed that Gavin was on the wrong track but he persisted that features were wanted and followed up with some very creditable productions entitled—"Keane of Kalgoorlie," "Assigned to His Wife," "The White Hope," etc. When the business grew he found that to look after the hiring and producing end of the new industry was getting too much for one person, and he then formed the Australian Photoplay Company. This firm turned out about 150 photoplays of more or less feature length and some of its stars were Stanley Walpole, Ethel Phillips and Louise Lovely or Louise Carbasse as she was then known. Gaston Mervale was also producing for this firm. Alfred Rolfe, Raymond Longford and a number of others who are now prominent figures here were members of the Australian Photoplay Company. In a sense it represented to Australian picture people what the old Biograph Company was to the Americans—the cradle of the stars. Sometime later Gavin severed his connection with that firm and begun with C. Post Mason with the Australian Famous Feature Company and the first release was "The Martyrdom of Nurse Cavell."

Melbourne people evidently want long programs, here is one that was shown at the "Palais de Danse," St. Kilda. Marguerite Clark in the "Prince and the Pauper," Charlie Chaplin in "The Floorwalker," Mary Pickford in "Esmeralda," Fatty and Mabel in "He Did and He Didn't," and a two-reel episode from "The Diamond from the Sky," representing a total of approximately 16 reels.

HAL H. CARLETON.

"Honor System" Commended by Prison Commissioner

William Hunt, in Charge of Buffalo Prisons, Speaks Highly of William Fox's Ten-Reeler—Many Scenes Filmed in Arizona with Consent of Governor Hunt

"THE Honor System," William Fox's special ten-reel production produced by R. A. Walsh, is said to combine prison reform propaganda with drama in such an expert way that the former element is not allowed to obtrude on the latter. Human interest and engaging humor are present and the intense love theme that runs throughout the story holds the various bits of propaganda together in interesting style.

The subject was recently shown before the American Prison Association in Buffalo, New York and created quite a sensation. Some claimed that the film accurately portrayed prison conditions, others said that brutalities similar to those shown in "The Honor System" had not been practised for twenty years. Honorable William Hunt, Commissioner of Charities for Erie County, New York, who has charge of all penal institutions near Buffalo, gave the following written opinion of the picture:

"I have seen 'The Honor System' and consider it to represent actual prison conditions, as they have existed in some parts of this country. The brutalities shown in the William Fox film correspond to things which I have known to exist. 'The Honor System' demonstrates that violence begets violence, and that the kind treatment of prisoners always pays. I think 'The Honor System" will attract public attention to one of the most vital issues of the day."

Many of the scenes for this picture were filmed in Arizona and with the consent of Governor Hunt. Mr. Walsh used a number of real convicts in his jail delivery scenes. When these were exhibited to the inmates at Sing Sing prison, New York, the Mutual Welfare Leaguers went wild with enthusiasm—not at the outbreak, but the realistic way in which it was done.

"The Whip," from Paragon, to Contain Wealth of Racing and Society Scenes

"THE WHIP," a screen version in eight reels of the celebrated Drury Lane melodrama, is nearing completion at the Paragon Studio under the direction of Maurice Tourneur. Playgoers who have seen the legitimate drama of this name, have expressed a great deal of interest in the production, which under Mr. Tourneur's capable direction, will prove one of the most attarctive features of the winter season.

Realizing the technical difficulties in the way of making English race course scenes on this side, the bold course has been adopted of Americanizing the play. The characters, while not on this occasion consisting of lords, ladies, earls and countesses, are placed in the wealthy racing and hunting set of Long Island, and Mr. Tourneur has taken every advantage of the opportunities afforded by the play in order to present in an intimate manner, the spectacular side of high social life.

The fox hunting scenes have been introduced in the picture. Those who saw the play will remember the race course scenes in the last act and to screen this, special permit was given by the Saratoga racing authorities for Mr. Tourneur to utilize the Saratoga track and race grounds during the last week in August.

In order to secure further accuracy, sepcial visits were made to different training stables in New Jersey and Long Island, and also to the race track at Havre de Grace. The cast of "The Whip," has already been announced and the exact date of release will be published shortly.

DEMAND FOR PRESIDENT WILSON TRAILER TO "CIVILIZATION"

State right owners of Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" are manifesting keen interest in the President Wilson supplement to the great film spectacle.

The newest purchasers of rights, the Amalgamated Theatre Corporation, with ten prints for Cook County (Chicago), Ill., insisted on being supplied with the Presidential addition.

Over fifty prints of "Civilization" are now working throughout the United States and at least 80 per cent. of them carry President Wilson's endorsement, his likeness, and end with the American flag.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"THE LIBERTINE"

(Triumph—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY HENRY STANHOPE

THIS is an excellent picture from every conceivable point of view, it is something entirely different from the average picture we are accustomed to see. Here is a real story clearly told and having skilful direction, fine settings and superb acting. All concerned in this picture are to be heartily congratulated on the success which they have made of it. This picture is a worthy achievement for both Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden, who are responsible for the technical details and direction.

John Mason, the "Libertine," gives an impressive interpretation of John Mills. This role requires very careful handling, but at no time is the impersonation revolting; in fact, the whole way through, Mr. Mason shows the touch of the finished artist. Alma Hanlon, who realizes to the full the dramatic possibilities of her role, affords excellent support. Others in the cast are Marie Alexander, Walter Hitchcock, Edward Langford, Jean Stuart and Doris Sawyer, all of whom deserve the highest praise. Some of the scenes are just a little long, but with careful elimination here and there the action will be considerably improved. Probably these slight alterations will be made before this offering, which is one of the best of its kind ever screened, goes to the public. This is an ideal State Rights picture which should create something of a furore amongst buyers as it is not often that they have the opportunity to secure such a picture as the "Libertine." This is a subject such as the exhibitor has long desired and one which cannot fail to please the most critical audience. There is a moral which is well driven home and a film of this calibre will pack a house not only for a day, but for a week.

The "Libertine" is a story of modern life, strong and gripping. It brings home with grim realism the great lesson that "once in every man or woman's life comes the moment to decide in the strife for truth or falsehood, for the good or evil side.

The heroine, a young girl, pure and lovely, who is the main support of her widowed mother, is engaged to marry a clean, wholesome young man, who has been her childhood sweetheart.

Her path is crossed by the modern libertine, the man who "can afford to play the game." A thoroughly depraved society is always ready to make a favorite of the libertine, who defiles pure womanhood, while his victims bear the burden of shame—alone!

A surprise finish comes like a breath of June roses, and the story ends bringing close to the hearts of the audience the powerful and timely moral of a great old play—forever new.

"THE MEDIATOR"

(Fox—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

IF you like Western melodrama with fights, and more fights, always interesting fights and never overdone to the extent of being tiresome, here it is. "The Mediator" certainly catches the spirit of a whimsical idea, of a man who would rather fight than eat (literally, as staged in this play) in the cause of peace. Lish Henley can draw a gun quicker than any man in town, and after he has subdued even Bill Higgins, the bad man of the vicinity, he removes to "Peaceful Hill." George Walsh as "Lish" finds only one equal in Maggie (Juanita Hansen).

The play is a sort of history of the life of Lish, who as "mediator" mediates on all occasions, with fists, and gun, and a strong right arm. Never have we seen such effective mediation. He disposes of as many as choose to doubt his autocratic rights, with a very brief ceremony. And we want to say there are five full reels and it is all good, rapid-fire action that has seldom been equaled in Western drama. The director (Otis Turner), and the film editor who trimmed the action down to a sixteenth of a second can congratulate themselves on having produced a very remarkable picture.

There is no feeling by the audience viewing this picture that the director said "camera" and then the fight began. It is a real fight and when the view is given it is in full blast. We might say there are several fights and they are real fights. We don't believe any of the participants got off without real bruises and a feeling that that day's pay was well earned. There is no gentle handling of the antagonist, no chance for hidden soft spots to fall, for when George Walsh takes hold of his opponent and throws him he really throws him, and we are sure this will be rated a great picture by those who like Western life pictured.

The story is good, too. The man gets in practice for the grand climax when he rescues the girl from the gang. The finding of gold is done a little better than we have ever seen it before—the old man pans the gold without seeming to stand in front of the camera for that special purpose, as is customarily done. In other ways this picture is natural and effective. The escaping "Mediator," chased by the baseball fans, is cleverly assembled—just a detail, but these carefully handled details have made an unusually good picture of a fanciful story that would drag badly if such care had not been taken to keep the interest going every second.

"CROSBY'S REST CURE"

(Metro-Drew—One Reel)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

SYDNEY DREW'S new vehicle in comedy is surely one that will carry him safely and quickly into popular favor, for the theme is a home theme, the conditions surrounding it are homelike to a turn, and the climax is just what one would expect after watching developments.

The wife is sick, doctor orders complete, absolute rest which the patient declares impossible, owing to her many social engagements, so the man of the combination decides to take an extended sea trip in Southern waters. They are to sail "next Thursday" and a few days prior to the date of their departure Crosby and wife of Crosbyville visit their club and incidentally announce their intentions. The wife in an overburst of politeness wishes they all could accompany them. This is taken seriously and next day several accept the invitation, so Crosby, seeing how matters are running, improves them considerably—to his own mind—by inviting everybody in the town, the result being that all Crosbyville is bound for South America.

On the eventful day, however, after the horde has left for the wharf, Crosby bribes his chauffeur to have as many breakdowns and delays as are necessary to make him late for the boat.

Result—All Crosbyville take the sea trip and Mrs. Crosby takes her rest cure.

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is a whole lot of drama in a quart of champagne as George Broadhurst proved when he wrote the highly successful play "Bought and Paid For." Therein was a tremendously powerful scene between the millionaire and his wife. The millionaire came home under the influence of liquor, told his wife he had bought and paid for her and that she was his for keeps. She fled from him—locked the door behind her, but a handy piece of brass in the millionaire's hands broke the door down and the husband had his chattel.

This scene is also the big one of the picture and without stretching the point it is immensely strong. It runs unusually long and is broken very often by a dozen odd inserts—containing lines taken from the play. It is altogether likely that this scene and the title of the picture will be responsible for a good bit of cash at the box office. More than the customary amount we should judge. Because "Bought and Paid For" as a title has stood for something definite in the world of the theatre for some years—and as a drama it has stood for something more. It is worth much in dollars and cents and its presence adds much to the value of the picture.

As produced in film form, the subject although exceedingly well knit and dramatically powerful lays itself open to criticism by the manner in which it has been adapted for screen use. The inserts are so profuse that one gets the impression of having read the play instead of having seen it. The producers might, we believe, have left something more to the players to convey—to suggest, than alloting the greater share of the real work to the subtitles. But at that they are good subtitles—much better than the conventional sort. Each one of them means something which is more than can be said of the ordinary run of printed matter one sees in the majority of films.

After the big scene, husband and wife separate, because of his bibulous habits. They are united again, however, through the efforts of her brother-in-law, who effects a reunion. The last part of the picture fails a bit to convince. The main story, that of the husband and wife, is to quote the beginner's lines "intensely dramatic." There are, though, many genuine scenes of humorous value in which the brother-in-law and his wife are the central figures. They go a long way toward making "Bought and Paid For" well worth while.

And ultimately it is well worth while. It is well acted with Alice Brady and Montagu Love in the principal roles who do sterling work. The other important characters, the brother-in-law and his wife are played by Frank Conlan and Josephine Drake. Harley Knowles directed. The camera work in the print shown for review was a bit poor in some of the office scenes but otherwise very satisfactory.

"SEVENTEEN"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

JACK PICKFORD, Louise Huff, Little Madge Evans, Winifred Allen and Dick Lee, with a competent supporting cast of Famous Players, very acceptably register the individual characters which made "Seventeen" the talked of book of the year in the Famous Players-Paramount production of that name just released.

From a box-office standpoint we know this picture will be a big drawing card, and the Famous Players Company should be highly congratulated on not yielding to the temptation which makes every exhibitor from Maine to California use vitriolic language—and some Paramount companies have been the worst offenders in this—to change the story to give the director a chance to spoil it for those who have read it in book form and can tell you all about it and how it is supposed to end. There has been no attempt to "dress up" Booth Tarkington's book. If in the opinion of the scenario writer, Mr. Tarkington has left something out, he has not attempted to supply it.

To show the peculiar phenomena of "puppy love" in a boy of "Seventeen" in a five-reel picture, would we imagine stump almost any director who wanted to make reputation on the result. It is a hard job. And we are going to leave it to the public to decide whether it "got over." This picture was produced chiefly because of the popularity of the book, and will we believe satisfy those who know the characters and what they stand for in the story. We don't believe the average picture fan who has not read the book will get the spirit of the story which Mr. Tarkington so wonderfully wrought out of the psychology of the normal boy at the abnormal age when "puppy love" controls all actions at times.

The theme of the story proper is the arrival of the fickle girl from town, who just to get rid of Sylvanus agrees to elope with him. Wil-l-ee-e, which is Sylvanus' first and commoner name, takes himself so seriously he tries even to commit suicide when he finds the girl has fooled him. There you have the big thrills in it, dramatically (only, of course, it's comedy to the audience, though really serious to the boy), and this is not much like the usual feature play. However, as stated, the book is really wonderful and widely read, and the presentation given is about as good as could be given with the material offered, under present-day standards. A good box-office attraction—but advertise it as "the picturization of 'Seventeen,' and let it go at that."

"SINS OF HER PARENT"

(Fox—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY HENRY STANHOPE

THIS is a typical Fox picture, containing all the qualities of its predecessors. It offers an elemental story which is highly dramatic and forceful, moving rapidly along to the climax in the last reel.

Gladys Brockwell, who plays the dual role of the sinning mother and the daughter who bears the punishment for her parents' sins, proves very ably her versatility as a screen actress.

Miss Brockwell's interpretation of Adrian is a pleasing contrast to the powerful characterization of Valerie.

The settings and locations are good, while the direction, which is in the hands of Frank Lloyd, is all that could be desired. The supporting cast including William Clifford, George Webb, Varl Von Schilles, Herschel Mayall and Jim Farley are all very capable.

Adrian Courtney falls in love with Richard Carver, but cannot marry him because of the objections of Richard's father.

Robert Carver objects to an alliance with a woman of uncertain birth. The result is that Richard starts a quest for Adrian's mother and eventually finds her.

She is Valerie Marchmont, a frequenter of Alaskan dance halls. Just after he has learned who she is, Richard is injured in a brawl, with the result that a friend of his cables to Adrian and to Robert Carver to come at once.

When old Carver arrives he meets Valerie, and recognizes her as the secret wife of Arthur Heatherway. Then he agrees to his son's marriage.

Adrian, meanwhile, has been carried away by a saloon owner of the city. The rescuers follow and arrive just in time. Valerie is fatally wounded in the brawl, but has just enough strength before she dies to kill the saloon owner.

"IMMEDIATE LEE"

(Mutual—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

ALL the stirring incidents of Western cowboy life, with its jollities, its love making and consequent intrigue are fully and accurately portrayed in Kenneth B. Clarke's drama, "Immediate Lee," with Frank Borsage and Anna Little in the leads. From the ancient "pastime" of cattle rustling is evolved a stirring plot, around which is wound a pretty love story, and eventually a wedding which differs from the customary cowboy affair in that the dance hall is entirely stripped of its fixtures and an improvised church interior, substituted, and absolute decorum reigns.

Leading up to this, of course, there is plenty of the inevitable shooting, the trickery of the villain, the disfiguring of the hero for life and finally the undoing of the former. The cattle rustlers are rounded up through the instrumentality of Immediate Lee, and a battle royal ensues.

Jack Richardson as Kentuck Hurley, the bad man, acts the part admirably, and his method of capturing Lee, when the latter is off his guard, and the manner in which he carries his quarry into the brush, and there slits the corners of his mouth in revenge for Lee's having made him the laughing stock in a crowded dance hall are all most realistic. On Lee's recovery, there follows a wild chase across country, Hurley having left camp when it became known that he was Lee's assailant. Lee discovers him on a neighboring ranch, some eighty or ninety miles distant, and carries him back to the scene of the trouble, and he might have been roughly handled had not Lee held the men back.

The scenes are typically Western, the Llano Estacado and the sage brush faithfully depicting the West.

"THE IRON WOMAN"

(Popular-Metro—Six Reels)

REVIEWED BY H. S. FULD

IT is not often that one is dissatisfied with a Metro offering, but when the acting of a capable cast, good photography, and a good story such as "The Iron Woman" are discounted and wasted all for the lack of a few explanatory words one has a right to kick.

For two reels and into the third one was at a loss to form a connecting story, but from there on was held spellbound. There is no getting away from the fact that it would take more than the lack of a few subtitles to detract from a picture that has Nance O'Neil for a star and her characterization of Sarah Maitland, the "Iron Woman" is wonderful to say the least.

The book by Margaret Deland was arranged for the screen by Wallace C. Clifton, and a more interest holding story would be hard to find. Just a little foreword to introduce the characters in the first reel and one of the best releases of the season would be the ultimate offering, and we understand this has been done.

Sarah Maitland, managing the iron mills left by her husband, in the bringing up of her children, Blair and Nannie, spoils the former by indulgence, but the girl retains her simple goodness or "sweet loveableness" throughout.

Blair gets into debt in college, wastes his allowance, becomes a general reprobate and winds up by turning over a new leaf after his attempt to keep the affianced wife of his best friend David Ritchie, who has married him in a fit of pique, though still loving David. The scene where David's mother saves the two from themselves when she confronts them in the country hotel is most delicately handled. Only by confessing her past mesalliance can she show them what they are compassing by violating "man's laws" even though they "love each other."

Vera Sisson, as the affianced wife of David; Alfred Hickman as Blair; Evelyn Brent as Nannie and Christine Mayo as Helena Ritchie deserve special mention.

"THE MADNESS OF HELEN"

(Paragon-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

HERE is the sort of picture which will be talked about, and which will be instantly recognized as far away from the beaten path. The cast includes Ethel Clayton, Carlyle Blackwell and Earl Schenck, but first honors go to Miss Clayton. The direction was by Travers Vale, the story by Emmett Campbell Hall.

It is a suspense story, with the mystery hung upon the dual characters of twin sisters, both roles taken by Miss Clayton, whose interpretation of the difference in type and character is little short of marvelous. She makes the audience feel that she is living two entirely different personalities, although not until the very close of the story is the mystery of these two characters solved for the audience.

We are first introduced to the happy home of Virginia Carlton, whose irascible father refuses to allow the attentions to his daughter of Robert Haskell, a fine young naval surgeon home on furlough. A breach between father and daughter follows, and Virginia leaves home and gives herself to Robert, who receives her as his wife, and three happy days follow. The father employs a detective agency to trace the whereabouts of his daughter, and on receiving word that his daughter is living with the man openly as his wife jumps at the worst conclusion, and dies of the shock. Meantime Robert is forced to leave hastily for his ship, and his wife starts for home and forgiveness in an auto which skids and is wrecked. She is carried home, unconscious, and her twin sister, seeing the telegram to her father, believes the worst and carries Helen to the country to shield her from the world and bury the disgrace she herself feels at her sister's plight. All this time the audience is carried in suspense, for the double identity of the two sisters is not explained, and when the injured sister, recovered in health, but shattered in mind, escapes over the wall and shocks the simple villagers with her mad beauty, which she uses to throw a spell of enchantment over the men of the village, it seems so real, yet unreal, the audience, too, will be carried away by Miss Clayton's artistry.

Fantastically clad, Helen appears to Dane Ashley, a young author who has taken up his residence in the retired small village, as a strange vision of Virginia, whom he has learned to love from casual meetings which break up their mutual loneliness. The village gossips have said strange things about Virginia, and he all but believes them, yet his love will not be killed. Then the villagers take matters into their own hands and the women follow her and stone her at her very gate. Virginia seeks Dane's protection, and tells him all, tells him about shielding her mad sister, and why she has not told him before of the "wall between them." She tells him this with her own mistaken belief in her sister's unworthiness. Robert, who has been introduced in early scenes as the close friend of Dane, comes to visit Dane and finds Helen, his wife, badly in need of his surgical skill after suffering from the vengeance of the village women. Dane, upbraiding Robert for his supposed brutishness to Helen, learns for the first time of the true state of affairs, of the honorable relations of Robert and Helen and how she has disappeared as by magic because of the hiding from everyone of Virginia and Helen after Helen's loss of reason. Robert explains how he has been searching almost without hope. Robert's return restores Helen's reason and health, and at once removes the "wall between" Dane and Virginia.

As will be seen from the above synopsis, this play combines mystery and suspense in a wonderful degree with true dramatic values. The storm scenes and many other touches of careful direction and splendid photography add greatly to the enjoyment of a picture much above average. Miss Clayton's work in the dual roles is startling. It greatly adds to the effectiveness of the suspense, because, knowing not why, one feels the strangeness and the duality of the two characters who are not until the last moment revealed to be two separate persons.

This quite unusual effect of keeping the audience itself in ignorance of the very identity of the two principals in the cast, makes this a play that will excite more than passing interest among photoplay audiences who want surprise and novelty.

From a purely dramatic standpoint, reasons might be advanced for regretting a change from the original script, which kept the audience in suspense even as to the legitimacy of the relations between Robert and Helen. But we think the decision to eliminate all possible unfavorable reaction and the effacement of a bad impression sustained over an unusually long interval, by taking the audience into the author's confidence on that one point, a very wise one. This will be taken care of by an insert title.

"THE VAMPIRES"

(Gaumont-Mutual Series, First Episode, "The Detective's Head," Three Reels; Second Episode, "The Red Notebook," Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THE terrible crimes of a band of lawless French Apaches furnish the frame into which will be set each week a series of startling melodramatic pictures which should appeal strongly to the class of theatre patrons to whom mystery, murder, and Satanic schemes are meat and bread. Philip Guard, the cub reporter on the Paris Mondial, has been fearlessly "showing up" these crimes in the columns of his paper, when he sets out personally to investigate at closer hand the latest and most terrible crime, the murder of Detective Durtal, whose headless body has been found at St. Clement.

Immediately upon Guard's arrival at the house of a friend of his mother's things begin to happen. He examines the pictures on the wall, and finds one which is a secret panel. A lady visiting there is drugged and visited by a member of the vampire band, who takes her jewels, and deposits a diamond set cigarette case in Guard's own pocket while he sleeps. He reports to the police, then follow in succession two heavy thrills, the discovery of the ghastly head of the murdered detective, behind the secret panel, and the "dance of death" by Marfa Koutiloff, Russian dancer in black skin tights, which ends with the death of the dancer who is poisoned by one of the band through the use of a poisoned ring. Guard, following the stranger he feels sure must have murdered Marfa, is suddenly attacked, blindfolded, and about to be executed when he discovers the man left to execute him is an old employe of the paper, whom he befriended, and who saves him, both escaping just in the nick of time.

The second episode introduces for thrills an Apache dance, poison fountain pen, cleverly revolving hand mirror enabling Guard to see poison prepared for him, and a close call for Guard's mother, who is enticed away by a false message.

If these two episodes are to indicate the nature of this series, we believe they will fully measure up to previous Gaumont thrillers of similar character. The second episode, especially, gets off with a rush and holds the attention right down to the finish. The capture of the mother, an elderly woman, is unusual in pictures, and Florence Simoni in this role is excellent. Edmond Mathe takes the role of Guard, and Eugene Ayme the several heavy roles called for by the changing plot as the Great Julet.

"ARMS AND THE WOMAN"

(Astra-Pathe—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AT last, and the couplet is employed after extensive consultation with our conscience, there is a picture that puts to rout that typewriter-worn phrase, "It would be better if cut down." "Arms and the Woman" has no padding. It is action, action, action, all the way. Never does it let down for an instant; its range runs from East Side New York to the battlefields of Europe. "Arms and the Woman" certainly ought to win the exhibitor's audience for besides its action it is extremely well written, enacted and produced.

The story comes from the pen of Ouide Bergere and was produced by George Fitzmaurice. This combination alone should be sufficient to guarantee of its success but there is more to say in favor of the cast. Mary Nash is featured. Miss Nash makes an excellent screen actress. She can do the light and the comedy scenes wonderfully well while the places wherein she is called upon to register heavy emotions carry along convincingly. Her support is composed of Lumsden Hare, H. Cooper Cliffe, Robert Broderick and Rosalind Ivan, each one exceedingly well fitted for his or her role.

The story tells of Rozika, a Hungarian girl who coming to America suffers fortune's vicissitudes until she meets and marries David Trevor, owner of an immense steel works. With the war's outbreak she implores her husband to refuse ammunition orders from a foreign power but he ignores her pleas. Rozika's brother, an anarchist, comes to America with orders to blow up Trevor's plant, and he succeeds, but only after Rozika has made desperate efforts to stop him. Financially ruined Trevor at last sees his wife's point and agrees that "it is better so."

"THE CHILDREN PAY"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Children Pay" aims to prove that it is the children who suffer when their parents are divorced. In dealing with such a ticklish theme, the producers have allowed their picture to suffer a little itself. They have hardly supplied the theme with sufficient action to carry it through to a dramatic finish. The end is by the way rather humorous. The older of the two sisters positively refuses to remain with either of her divorced parents. The judge thinks it would be a fine idea if she married and says so and at that the attorney for the girl offers his services in this respect and so the problem is solved. It is our opinion that the judge says a good many things that are out of place, at least they read so in the subtitles.

Millicent and Jean, the children, live in a small town and are generally looked down upon by their neighbors. Their only friends are old Susan, their governess and a young law student. They are obliged to go to court when their father marries a second time and then they are sepaarted, Millicent going to the father and Jean to the mother. Life being unbearable, they run away but are caught and brought to court again, this time the young student now a lawyer appearing in their defense. And so the picture ends with a marriage.

Lillian Gish and Violet Wilkie are the children while others are Keith Armour, Ralph Lewis, Loyola O'Connor, Jennie Lee and Alma Reubens. Frank E. Woods is author and Lloyd Ingraham director.

"THE MEASURE OF A MAN"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BLUEBIRD makes no idle boast when it says "The Play's the Thing" in connection with "The Measure of a Man." Norman Duncan has written a virile story and it has been picturized excellently. For once we see a minister on the screen who is neither a dunce nor a prude and we take his welfare to heart from start to finish. The gratifying part about it is that the finish is kept back until the proper time. Never is there any anticipation of just what is going to happen.

John Fairmeadow, a divinity student, is expelled from a seminary on account of his bibulous habits. He hits the trail to the west and arrives in a lumber camp just in time to read the funeral service for Batch, a lumberman who has died, leaving an only daughter. The men in the camp make him stay— they like him because he is a fighter and a leader and he unwillingly at first stays on. He succeeds in converting a nearby camp too, and restores a wayward girl to her father. In the end his good work gets to the ears of the bishop and he is ordained and of course he marries the girl.

Mawkish sentiment that might be expected to be present in such a story never obtrudes in "The Measure of a Man." It is easy moving and it convinces at all times. There is much good comedy in it. The locations selected by Director Jack Conway are delightful—in fact the setting throughout is ideal.

J. Warren Kerrigan is featured and Louise Lovely does quite the best work of her career opposite him. Katherine Campbell, Ivor MacFadden, Harry Carter, Marc Robbins and Buster Emmons are others.

"THE TEMPTATION OF ADAM"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

A COMMON criticism of photoplays is that there is too little story for the footage. Here the reverse is true; the three reels are stuffed with too many plot complications. Instead of sticking to the main theme—a powerful one in itself—the author was tempted into irrelevant digressions. The effect of this literary diffusion is seen when the denouement takes place, and the spectator is still left wondering what became of the story's loose ends.

The well cast and able players do much to counterbalance the story's shortcomings. This cast does well with several intense situations developed by the main plot. Kathlyn Williams, Guy Oliver, Eugenie Besserer, Vivian Reed, Charles West, Al Filson, and Frank Clark are the players.

This release should be well received in theatres using short-length program material exclusively.

Adam Cavanaugh gives up his theological studies for business when he marries Dorothy Blaine. He goes into the stock brokerage business with Forrest, a family friend. Dorothy's social ambitions force Cavanaugh to spend large sums of money. Forrest, in disgust, dissolves the partnership.

Years later Cavanaugh's daughter makes even greater extravagance necessary. Cavanaugh steals $200,000 from the safe of his former partner, and Forrest is put in prison. Rose, Forrest's wife, schemes to secure a confession from Cavanaugh. She has detectives install dictographs in her house. One night she plies Cavanaugh with liquor, and the listening detectives hear his confession. Forrest is released, and Cavanaugh sent to jail.

THREE CHRISTIE COMEDIES

(One Reel Each)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AL E. CHRISTIE has a simple formula for the making of comedies. The trouble is that it is so simple it seems inimitable. He begins with a good story founded on several humorous situations and then he puts a competent cast in all down the line. The straight parts, the character parts and the eccentric parts all have real people in them. Even the extra parts have too. Mr. Christie believes in throwing in half a dozen odd girls when the case demands and from all appearances he must tour Los Angeles until he finds the prettiest. And after that it's merely a matter of producing and cutting, which however, are quite the most important matters after all.

"A Brass Buttoned Romance" is a likeable comedy for a good many reasons. One is Betty Compson who never looked prettier and another is Dave Morris who cavorts about as an underhanded old police chief. He loves Betty and threatens to discharge her father from the force unless she marries him. But then there is the young detective, who also loves Betty, and he in running a case to the ground discovers that the old chief is the head of a gang of crooks, and all is well. Horace Davey produced this burlesque; Neal Burns and Harry Rattenberry are in the cast.

"Some Kid" is an excellent number by Ellis O. Jones and concerns an absent-minded wife who takes home a colored baby from the store instead of her own. When hubby brings a friend home to see his darling child the fun starts. This is full of humorous situations and will certainly get many laughs. Betty Compson, Neal Burns, Dave Morris and Stella Adams are the principals. Horace Davey did the directing.

"Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" has Billie Rhodes, Eddie Barry, Harry Ham and George French in the principal roles. Al Christie directed. The story tells of a father who is expecting his sons home from a dramatic school. They tell him that they will arrive in disguise, and so when two tramps come to the front door he believes them the boys. All goes well for the tramps until the boys arrive in reality, and then something akin to a brawl takes place.

"THE HEART OF VIRGINIA KEEP"

(Essanay—Three Reels)
REVIEW BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

JUDGING from the reception given previous Essanay three-reelers of the same type, this release will be welcomed by the average audience. The story is not new, and is not wholly coherent, but these defects are discounted by the good acting contributed by the principals.

One directorial slip cannot be condoned, however. The heroine goes to some trouble to disguise herself, and enter a rendezvous of crooks. She secures important evidence there, but the nature of this evidence is not disclosed, the girl does not use it, and the incident is abruptly dropped.

Mystery, love, and suspense are the elements of the story, and they are fairly well handled by the director. The production can be summarized as a slight but diverting piece that will satisfy a patronage not too critical.

In the cast are: Marguerite Clayton, John Cossar, Edward Arnold and Thomas Commerford.

Virginia Keep's father suddenly disappears. He has been warned that he will be tried for a murder committed 25 years before. He is captured and sentenced to life imprisonment. Arnold Trude, a reporter, covers the case for a newspaper, and, in his interviews with Virginia, falls in love with her. He is in reality the millionaire owner of the paper, but is doing reporting for the experience.

Virginia now must earn her own living, and she is offered a job on Trude's paper. When she learns that Trude is responsible for the huge salary she is drawing, she resigns and determines to prove her father's innocence. She gets valuable evidence, but doesn't use it (see comment above). The governor pardons her father, and she decides to accept Trude's proposal.

"THE DEVIL'S BONDWOMAN"

(Red Feather-Universal—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ONE is led to believe that too many scenario writers spoiled "The Devil's Bondwoman." The original story was done by Willis Woods, Fred Myton supplied the allegorical touches and Maie Havey did the continuity. Take, for instance, the allegoricals which include several flashes of the lower regions. These have little to do with the story proper and the picture would be better if they were eliminated. The main plot is of a commonplace sort and is not founded on basically convincing situations.

It tells of an elderly woman, so beset by an evil man that she attempts to ensnare him. She succeeds in convincing her husband that the other man has made advances that were disagreeable to her. The husband breaks him through his bank and then the truth is revealed to him. A romance between the younger man and the girl he loves is brought to a happy conclusion.

Lloyd B. Carleton directed the production and his direction falls quite far below the standard he usually maintains. The double exposures and dissolves are not well done. The exteriors were chosen with little care and the interiors are not appropriate. Some of them are even reminiscent of other pictures on the Unisal program.

Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson are the principals. Adele Farrington is an unconvincing vampire and over-acts so strenuously that one can never take her appearances seriously. William Canfield and Richard Morris have other important roles. And there is a pistol in the table drawer too.

"BAWBS O' BLUE RIDGE"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE success of this picture depends entirely upon the popularity of Bessie Barriscale. As a vehicle for her it passes. She will do the rest in localities where the popularity of the star is placed above the quality of the production in the minds of the picture goer. Disregarding Miss Barriscale this Ince picture is just about as ungainly as its title.

Monte M. Katterjohn, the author, evidently had a difficult time stretching it out to five reels. His work is laborious and he has incorporated in it about every conventional situation that was ever found in a wild-girl-of-the-mountains-story. For all that the plot is simple to the extreme and after the introductory scenes are passed over the ending is plainly in sight. Incidentally the introductory scenes occupy over a reel of space.

Bawbs has been taught by her guardian to keep away from the trousered sex. An author arrives in the mountains for local color. And then we pass through the death of the guardian, disclosure of the fact that Bawbs is rich, her awakening to a love for the author, her belief that he is unfaithful, her courting by an old miser and her final happiness with the author. The last reel is the best, for here some genuine comedy is introduced by way of the miser whose hopeless efforts to appear rejuvenated accompany his proposals to Bawbs.

The mountain scenes are beautiful and there are some elegant light effects. Arthur Shirley is opposite Miss Barriscale, while Joe Dowling is the miser. Charles Miller directed.

"THE DOLLAR AND THE LAW"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

VITAGRAPH releases this picture in conjunction with a certain Thrift society that aims to stimulate the saving idea among the public. No one will doubt the economic value of such an idea and propaganda in its behalf is certainly a thing to be commended. But the Vitagraph company has aimed to combine its propaganda with drama and the results do not make for a good picture. Views of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing at Washington are doubtless interesting, but we believe there is a certain place for such views and that is not in a feature that aims to tell a story. And just why the knowledge of how paper money is made should instill a sense of economy into a person is hardly clear. When we saw this self-same Bureau we wanted to go out and paint the town red.

The chief points in the disfavor of "The Dollar and the Law" are its subtitles and its story. The former should be removed and rewritten. Little can be said in behalf of the latter except that it was written by Irvin Cobb. That ought to mean a whole lot. The name of Cobb is widely known in fiction and just now it is attached to a Broadway play. But witness the basis of the story here: The old miser whose daughter doesn't know he's worth money and who gets the saving habit along with her lover. The good-for-nothing young fellow who kills the old man to get funds for a crooked scheme and then his showing up by the hero. It would need a mighty good production to carry this old friend through and this has not been given it.

Starring in the production is Lillian Walker and her support consists of Edward Elkas and Thomas Mills who give fine performances and Walter McGrail, Arnold Storrer, Josephine Earle, Victor Norman, Vera Norman, Mother Maurice, Hugh Wynn, and Nellie Anderson, all of whom register to good effect. Wilfred North directed.

"THE SUNBEAM"

(Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

MABEL TALIAFERRO is truly herself as Prue Mason, The Sunbeam, in the film of that name, the story of which was written by Shannon Fife, and the scenario by June Mathis, and is to be released Nov. 27. The picture is one that appeals directly to one's soul and holds one's undivided attention throughout. It has a sympathetic vein which will appeal to most lovers of the drama and the manner in which The Sunbeam eventually wins over the stern old Stephen Rutherford cannot fail to satisfy even the most fastidious along these lines.

It's the old, old story of the rich influential father-in-law positively repudiating his son's wife and child after the death of the son. After many heartrending instances of flint-hearted cruelty the old man is won over by the Sunbeam's Christianlike ways; the misery and poverty of the daughter-in-law are transformed into joy and plenty and Bobby, the youngster, is taken into the old man's home and deluged with toys.

There runs through the story the career of a reformatory product, who, through the influence of the Sunbeam has decided to "live right," but in an ill-advised moment he cracks his employer's safe to secure funds to provide for a birthday party for Granny (Mrs. Breyer) who is seventy-five years old. He only takes a ten dollar bill, but hearing a noise he is scared away and leaves the safe open. His former pals visit the place later and secure the money. Danny O'Maddigan (Raymond McKee) the reformatory product is, however, suspected, arrested and convicted.

It is not, however, until the old man has suffered a change of heart that he uses his efforts to effect the boy's release. It is a subject that is full of humanism and doubtless will appeal strongly to the better class of motion picture patrons.

Others in the cast are David Thompson, Helen Alexandria, Lillian Shaffner, Al Lee, Warner Anderson, Louis Wolheim, Eddie Reddway and Daniel Bertona.

"THE MAZAMAS AND THE THREE SISTERS"

(Bruce-Educational—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE nicest thing about Robert Bruce's pictures is that they are more than excellent scenics. They are good comedies besides. He has aimed for comedy in his subtitles and has achieved it. In passing many a picture producer might do well to look at some of Mr. Bruce's subtitles. He has the original knack of using good English in them. But that is neither here nor there. "The Mazamas and the Three Sisters" is one of the most attractive scenics issued in some time. From a photographic standpoint it is wonderful, mainly because there are lots and lots of snow scenes and no static.

The Mazamas are not bandits or anything terrible—merely a club of mountain climbers. To be a Mazama you have to get your life insurance before hand. No agent would take it after he saw this picture. The Mazamas climb mountains just for the fun of it. Up ninety degree declivities they go and smile when they get to the top. And they sleep in the snow, eat out in the open and slide down hills just like so many children.

On this trip they journeyed to the Three Sisters. These are mountains in the center of the state of Oregon. Long attractive fields of snow with lofty mountains in the background have been caught by the camera. The photography is superb. But the best part about the film is the Mazamas cutting capers in the snow. They build a fort, take sides, some defending it, others storming it. They indulge in snowball fights and even go in swimming where there isn't a sandy beach but a snowy one.

Real enjoyment will be gotten from "The Mazamas and the Three Sisters," scenically and comically. Any program will be hugely benefited by it.

JELLICOE'S GRAND FLEET AND FIRST MESOPOTAMIA PICTURES AT RIALTO—UNUSUAL WAR PICTURES BY CHARLES URBAN TAKEN FOR BRITISH GOVERNMENT

IMPRESSIVE pictures of Britain's fleet are being shown this week as an added attraction at the Rialto theatre, together with the first pictures brought over showing the difficulties encountered by the troops in Mesopotamia. Nothing yet shown in pictures has been more timely. The floating fortresses—for the resemblance of the modern English battleship to a big island covered with forts is striking—are shown in battle array, and one realizes at once the immense sea power of this seemingly resistless force.

The submarines and torpedo destroyers are shown in various maneuvers, especially interesting being the periscope views and torpedo launching. One knows how a periscope looks from the outside, but to see how the outside looks through the periscope from the inside, is quite a new picture.

The Mesopotamia pictures show the flooded country, great water covered wastes, with a river flowing so rapidly that a three day journey down takes eleven days going up. The landing of motor cars and transport equipment is effected under difficulties which grow even greater when attempt is made to move this equipment across country. There can be no wonder in the minds of those viewing these pictures why the allies were compelled to withdraw from this country of waste and devastation.

These pictures were taken by Mr. Charles Urban, through special authority and cooperation of the British government.

"THE CHAMBER OF HORRORS" AND "DER LIMIT"

(Mutt and Jeff Exchange)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Chamber of Horrors" is one of Bud Fisher's cartoons in which the Long and Short of it secure the job of carting a trunk across the city. When they reach their destination they open it only to discover it to contain a woman's head, arms and legs. They believe they have been made parties to a terrible crime until their employer arrives and shows them that the head, arms and legs are of wax. There is some more incidental acting to this which is as humorous as that in other Mutt and Jeff releases. The laughs from this one will result more from the disconnected episodes shown than from the story itself.

"Der Limit" is a Hans Und Fritz number in which the Captain spends most of the footage riding about on a motorcycle pushing a horse. This has a few laughs in its also. The animation however, is not as smoothe as that in the Mutt and Jeff number.

"WAR BRIDES"

(Brenon-Selznick—Eight Parts)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE theme of "War Brides" looms above its other merits as its greatest. It deals with the war in Europe and dwells on the suffering of war's women. The principles of war and drama when analyzed prove to be the same. Both are founded on conflict. A good drama has its conflict from start to finish and so has war. So when the two are combined, intelligently combined as in "War Brides," the results must of necessity be unusually striking. But "War Brides" is even greater. Its story is tremendous. It is founded on the one-act play by Marion Craig Wentworth which created something of a sensation when played in vaudeville with Nazimova in the chief role.

Nazimova makes her screen debut in the picture. She is an actress of wonderful emotional ability and as the woman who rebels against the command of her king and refuses to bear her child with the thought of it growing to live for another war, she puts her whole self in the part. The complete technique of the screen is not yet the knowledge of Nazimova—that will come in time—but technique or no technique she plays so wonderfully that we tremble at the thought of naming another actress for the character. In screen makeup she also has more to learn, but in all sincerity such minor details are quite without the range of vision with respect to "War Brides," for the reason that the whole is so good.

Beyond the shadow of a doubt it is the best thing that Herbert Brenon has ever done. His direction here is excellent. His straight scenes are effectively arranged, the action is centered—easy to follow. He has utilized close-ups to advantage—employed subtitles and excerpts from the plays effectively. The standard of production is above criticism. Many of the exteriors are mindful of great paintings. The lighting is superb and the photography excellent.

The picture has so many intense dramatic episodes that one hardly knows where to begin in their listing. The scene in which the mother learns of the death of her three sons is remarkable for its sustained, almost nerve-racking suspense. Its climax is terrific, for the third son reported dead is the husband of Joan (Nazimova). When Joan denounces the captain and the entire system of war in the name of the women of the country, it is very likely that any audience will break into applause as the trade audience did at the picture's initial showing. The final scene is a wonderful piece of stagecraft. In it Joan after bringing all the women of the town together stands and denounces the king of her country and then puts an end to herself and her unborn child. A terrific climax to an immense picture.

Miss Gertrude Berkeley as the mother of the four soldiers did a wonderful part in a corresponding way. Nila Mac was effective as the sister. The rest of the cast counted forcefully and included Charles Bryant, Charles Hutchinson, William Bailey, Richard Barthelmess, Alex Shannon, Robert Whitworth, Ned Burton, Theodora Warfield and Charles Chailles.

A line or so in reference to the distributor of the picture is in order. "War Brides" is not a program picture and doubtless Mr. Selznick will offer it at advanced prices. All we can say is that it should be well worth any reasonable hire. When all is said as to its artistic points, there is the all-important fact of the box office angle—the attraction offered by the title and the star, and frankly we know of no better combination than Nazimova in "War Brides," produced by Herbert Brenon.

PHAX PICTURES COMPANY, 220 WEST 42D STREET, NEW YORK, IS LAUNCHED BY FARNHAM

PHAX PICTURES COMPANY, with offices at suite 903, Candler Building, 220 West 42nd Street, New York, is a newcomer to the motion picture field. Presided over by motion picture men with practical experience, the company has been organized for the express purpose of exploiting the better grade motion picture productions along advanced ideas of presentation, embodying the all-essential qualifications of true showman ideas, which the company claims as its double quantity.

The field of operations of the Phax Company for the present will be confined to the Middle Atlantic Coast States, with the intention of broadening activities in the near future. For the initial presentation of the company, the exclusive rights to the six-part subject, "Race Suicide," have been purchased for the territory of Greater New York, New York State and New Jersey, from Joseph W. Farnham.

Tabloid Reviews for the Busy Exhibitor

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

"The Sheriff's Blunder." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., Nov. 20.)—This Tom Mix Western starts out with the customary rapid fire action and good riding stunts usually found in these releases. The action later becomes involved and hard to understand. A good comedy finish helps to counteract the dragged effect of the foregoing footage. This number will moderately please an uncritical audience. Supporting Tom Mix are Victoria Forde and Sid Jordan.

Hal Whitcomb, a bank messenger, steals a large sum of money entrusted to him for delivery. He is later caught by the sheriff's posse, and about to be hung when he tells a story. He tells of a twin brother named Steve, who was the one who took the money. He says that he himself is on his way to see a sweetheart who is dying. The sheriff's heart is touched. He believes the man's story and releases him. When the sheriff arrives at his office, he finds letters from officers in another county, telling him to beware of a notorious outlaw who tells a story of a dying sweetheart and a twin brother.

"Hedge of Heart's Desire." (Selig. Sat., Nov. 25.)—The story, acting and directing of this picture are all exaggerated, and almost meaningless. The fact that the picture was made some time ago excuses these faults, but does not recommend the release to any exhibitor catering to an intelligent audience. In the cast are: Virginia Kirtley, Eugenie Forde, E. J. Brady, Lillian Hamilton and Robyn Adair.

An adventurer tries to win the hand of Betty Chester, an heiress. A hedge separates the magnificent estate of the Chester home from the squalid abode of Peggy McCann. Betty appreciates the sincere love Peggy has for her fiance, and wishes that she might feel the same toward Arthur. One day in a brawl Arthur kills a man, and endeavors to fasten the blame upon Peggy's sweetheart. In a struggle that ensues. Arthur shoots and seriously wounds Peggy. Betty then runs after Arthur with a shot gun, and, although wounded in the hand, shoots him dead.

"Rah, Rah, Rah." (Vitagraph.)—This is a rough and tumble release with Hughie Mack, James Aubrey and Patsy de Forrest heading the cast. Hughie is considered very brave by his sweetheart and so the rest of the boys plan a scare for him. They hire a penniless theatrical trio and lure Hughie to a haunted house where the actors stage the tail end of a melodrama for his benefit. Hughie is easily taken in and the boys have the laugh on him, but the fight starts when a band of robbers attack the haunted house. This is funny and will doubtless get over, but a better picture would have been the result had the plot been a little more centralized. Some of the photography is quite poor.

"Not in the News." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 14.)—While obvious in plot and treatment, the general style of this picture will appeal to the kind of audience that likes program short lengths. The leads are taken by Marguerite Clayton and Sydney Ainsworth, the former a pretty ingenue, the latter a very good actor. There is nothing much either to praise or condemn.

Elliott Dexter and his brother are released from prison. The former resolves to lead a decent life; the latter determines to be a criminal. Years later Elliott has become a bank president, and the husband of a fine woman who knows his past. Elliott's brother, unknown to him, blackmails his wife. One night the brother comes to Elliott's house to get money. In the darkness Elliott, thinking him a burglar, shoots and kills him. He is exonerated, and the reporters never learn the real story.

"His Moral Code." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Nov. 18.)—Not shown for review, the story follows:

Estelle Bland, a nurse, is engaged to Dr. Armstrong, an interne. George Ewing, a wealthy idler, is injured and comes under Estelle's care. He falls in love with her. He pictures to Armstrong what he can do for the girl as against the struggle she must experience as a young physician's wife, and the doctor in his love for her, gives her up and leaves for the West. Thinking he has left her, the girl marries Ewing. In the years that follow he proves himself unworthy, and, in revulsion, Estelle divorces him, returning to her old position at the hospital. Armstrong has established himself as a physician of standing in the West. On a visit he finds his former love, and takes her with him on his return.

The cast is composed of Lillian Drew, E. H. Calvert and Edward Arnold.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

"A Lass of the Lumberlands." (Mutual. Two reels.)—Chapter 4. A deed of daring is the title of this chapter and ensuing events certainly warrant the title, for Helen Holmes performs more blood curdling stunts on railroad rolling stock and a few flying leaps from trains to automobiles and from automobiles to automobiles that any other title would never have conveyed the chapter's message properly. Miss Holmes has earned the title, "the fearless girl of the films," by sheer courage.

"Her Son Kissed Hero." (Cub. One reel.)—A prettily concocted story of two boys who, down on their luck, accept positions as clerks in a seaside hotel. A pretty little maiden—Betty—comes on the scene and turns their heads, while she turns to the lifeguard, who is already married and though the wife and children of the latter are produced Betty still clings to him. One of the young men—Neal—then fixes up a sham drowning with a daring rescue accompaniment, but Betty is obdurate. The play is prettily staged, and the rescue by life belt and ropes is a stirring and realistic scene. The characters are Betty Compson, Dave Morris, Neal Burns and Harry Ham.

"When the Tide Turns." (Mutual. Two reels.)—Written and produced by Bert R. Coolidge. It cannot really be termed convincing. The cajolery of an old sweetheart poisons the heart and mind of a previously happy husband and in desperation he sends his young son to a brother with the injunction that his wife be not acquainted with his whereabouts. The husband is then accidentally killed by a blast and the wife drifts. In after years a young man visits the locality where the woman is now conducting a hotel. He makes known the fact that he has considerable money on his person, he being commissioned to purchase certain oil bearing land. On this account the hotelkeeper plans a "knock out" and robbery, which would have succeeded had not the woman recognized the stranger as her son and used her endeavors to effect his rescue.

"A Mountain Daisy." (Mutual. Two reels.)—This picture deals with the fickleness of an Eastern civil engineer who, while engaged in Montana, plays havoc with the heart and affections of the "Mountain Daisy," Hazel Buckham. He promises to return for her in September, but fails and later the girl reads of his wedding to an Eastern girl and his projected trip back West, so, after a hurried wedding the Mountain Daisy plans a surprise for him, which works wonderfully, much to his own discomfiture and the disgust of his bride. The play is nicely staged and well acted. The others in the cast are William Parsons, Lamar Johnstone and Edward Sloan.

"The High Cost of Living." (Mutual. One reel.)—A film of value both from interesting and educational standpoints — compares prices of many foodstuffs of to-day with the prices of 1906 and 1911, pointing out the percentage of increase. It deals with meats—mutton, beef and pork; vegetables and then goes on to the textures.

This is followed by the "Mile a Minute Mail," portraying the first carrying of mails between New York and Chicago by aeroplane. The views of country displayed here are wonderful, and it is stated in the subtitle that the aeroplane planed at an average altitude of a mile and a quarter, and this distance was covered in 8½ hours.

"Up the Flue." (Vogue. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 26.)—While there are many excellent spots in this slapstick comedy, the action for the main part is slow because of constant repetitions. There are enough good laughs excited by the original "business" to make the average audience fairly well satisfied with the offering. The photography is not up to the usual Vogue standard. Larry Bowes, Lillian Hamilton, Harry Huckins, Florence Rosee, Owen Evans, Rube Miller and Roy McCray appear in the cast.

A gang of bomb makers plan to intimidate an oil magnate into giving them money. They send several threatening notes, until the rich man finally leaves a decoy package. The police then try to seize the bomb makers, but are put to rout. The enraged anarchists try to bake the magnet's secretary in an oven, and try to blow his daughter to pieces. These intentions are frustrated by the unexpected explosion of dynamite that topples over a tall brick chimney, crushing them all to earth.

"Charley Chaplin Behind the Screen." (Mutual Master. Two reels.)—Charley Chaplin is a very busy mortal in this—his latest film, and when he is not carrying a dozen chairs or a piano, or preventing stage scenery from toppling over, he and the "fat man" have a duel with exceptionally soft and mushy pies, with the result that they put a rehearsal of some historical play out of commission, and bring down the wrath of the manager and actors alike upon their poor heads.

For slap-stick comedy, it certainly is breezy, and full of action and should satisfy even the most exacting devotee of this class of entertainment.

As a scene shifter, he is far more active than the genuine article, yet the manager persists in referring to his laziness, with the result that in his earnest endeavors to make good, he scurries round, and invariably collides with something or somebody, much to everybody's discomfiture.

Hence we say Charley Chaplin's admirers—and they are legion—will find in this latest film plenty of life and unbounded cause for laughter.

INTERNATIONAL

"The Hidden Face." (No. 14 of Beatrice Fairfax Series. International.)—In this story Beatrice and Jimmy Barton investigate a mysterious murder, the only clue being the objection of a guardian to his ward's marriage, with a possible reason for the objection in the clause of the will taking control of the funds from her guardian in case of marriage. There are two guardians, and the other sides with the girl and demands an accounting. Jimmy discovers the murderer, and puts him through a third degree, by handcuffing him within a few feet of an infernal machine, which he had used in murdering the other man, and which he thinks is timed to murder him. Too obvious a plot, from the standpoint of melodramatic requirements, Harry Fox and Grace Darling filling their usual roles satisfactorily. Alice Masters as the ward.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

"The Shielding Shadow." (Astra. Two reels. Ninth Episode.)—George B. Seitz has introduced innumerable thrills in this episode of the serial entitled "The Incorregible Captive." Sebastian imprisons Leontine in Bianca's stronghold. Ravengar, who has startled this underworld den by his mystic powers of disappearing through bolted dors, contrives for her escape. He leads her to an underground sluiceway and believing her safe, returns to his cell. Bianca discovers this and turns a flood of water into the passage and closes the gates. Helpless, Leontine swims about in the sluiceway, the water approaching the upper level with increasing rapidity. But Ravengar saves the day again when he overpowers several of Bianca's henchmen and turns off the water and opens the gates.

PARAMOUNT

"Col. Heeza Liar Hobo." (Bray Cartoon. Thurs., Nov. 16.)—This animated cartoon drawn by J. R. Bray himself, depicts the humorous adventures of the comical character, Heeza Liar, subsequent to his leaving home after a row with his wife. He gets into all sorts of mixups, and the situations evolved by the artists are exceedingly funny. He finally lands home to find his wife has presented him with three babies, but that is too much and off he goes again.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The Adventure of the Last Cigarette." (Universal Two reels.)—By George Bronson Howard and Luther Reed. This film contains so many instances where the life of one or another of the principals is in jeopardy, and where one man—Max Ober—under sentence of death for murder, is promised his liberty if he will kill a certain Yorke Norroy, that it has a grim interest. The plot is laid in Venezuela and in Washington, D. C., and centers around the political intrigue of the South American Republic. Malcolm Blevins as Max Ober, Kingsley Benedict as Yorke Norroy and Vola Smith as Minna Ober are the chief characters, and seem to fully appreciate the importance of their respective parts.

"The Precious Jewel." (Universal. Two reels.)—By Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley. Here we have a case of two sisters and a brother who prefer to live by the no-work plan, and they never lose an opportunity to replenish their coffers by thievery. They first relieve their orphaned cousin of five hundred dollars, and then rob a neighbor of what they suppose is a valuable pearl, only to learn that it is a very cheap imitation they have annexed. Their cousn knows of the latter and threatens to acquaint the owner of the pearl unless restitution is made. For this she is locked in a room until she can learn to keep a still tongue, but by throwing notes from the window, she attracts the attention of Harry Cartwright, the owner of the pearl, who already in love with her, rescues and marries her.

Rather a pretty little play, and clearly shows to what length the girls will go to secure their ends. In the cast are Hayward Mack, Edith Roberts, Mina Cunard, and Lee Hill.

"The Emerald Pin." (Laemmle. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 23.)—This story by E. M. Ingleton has good suspense and is laid in pretty settings, the customes of the crinoline period adding much to the beauty of the production. The ending, however, lacks something in force. An old lady seeing her grand-daughter taking to gambling tells her her own experiences. Roberta Wilson, Charles Perly and Louise Owen are the leads. Miss Wilson as a young girl is good but fails to look very much like an old lady.

"Irma in Wonderland." (Powers. Thurs., Nov. 23.)—This has some good juvenile stuff in it and as it is enacted by children it should provide fair entertainment for the kiddies. However, even a child likes a more definite story than that which is presented here. It is only the dream of a rich girl who sees herself as poor. Irma Sorter is the lead.

"Circumstantial Guilt." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Nov. 24.)—This story, by George Suprenant, is cut from conventional material but is pictured very well. At a murder trial the jury stands eleven to one for conviction. The twelfth man at last tells his story and he turns out to be the murderer. Burton Law, Jack Nelson, George Brooks and George Berrell are the leads. There are some slips in the detail of the direction but in general the subject has been handled very well.

"How Do You Feel?" (Nestor. Mon., Nov. 20.)—The Doctor's letters get mixed and as a result the young man believes he is going to die and the old man has the idea that he is to get married and live long. Then there's the undertaker that persists in pursuing the young fellow as he needs the business. This story by Robert McGowan with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean in the principal roles makes diverting entertainment of above-the-average order.

"The Woman He Feared." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Nov. 21.)—Rather a forced story in which a woman purposely gets her nephew drunk at his wedding breakfast to avenge herself on the bride's father. The man's regeneration comes later through the care given him by his wife. Franklyn Farnum, Vola Smith and Clarissa Selwynne appear in this. The story is by E. M. Ingleton and the direction that of Harry Millarde.

"Where Is My Wife?" (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 22.)—Billie Ritchie and bathtubs—some comedy this. Anyone who can keep a straight face after the action in this picture gets started needs a bathtub. We find our hero ensconced as head flunkey in a hotel—and the boss? Some Juno, take it from us. More neat comedy punches are found in this two-reeler than ordinarily make up ten garden variety slapsticks, and we think every movement of Billie Ritchie is funny. We don't laugh any too easily in these days of extravagant comedy action, but we laughed at this, and it didn't make any difference if we had seen water and bathtubs in strange combination before, it was funny and will make a real hit with any audience.

"The Lost Lode." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Nov. 25.)—A mining melodrama with the usual combat between hero and villain for the heroine, materially enhanced by the plotting of the latter gentleman to take the life of the former. While this subject builds up well in a conventional way to a point where the audience expects a terrific explosion as a climax, this part of the picture falls rather flat as the effect of the explosion is disappointing. L. C. Shumway as hero, Edith Johnson as heroine, Ed Hearn as villain and E. N. Wallack are the principals.

"A Janitor's Vendetta." (Joker. Sat., Nov. 25.)—A little too familiar over most of its length this comedy gets a fine laugh at the end which saves the day. The wife believing her husband employs too pretty a stenographer discharges and advertises for a man. The girl comes back disguised and then the wife becomes enamoured.

"Married a Year." (Nestor. Fri., Nov. 24.)—Both husband and wife after reading foolish newspaper stories, conjure to themselves each other's unfaithfulness and an attempt is made to turn these mere situations into a comedy. Aside from the fact that it has not been well produced, we rise to remark that the total absence of plot puts this reel with the porest. Ed Sedgwick and Betty Shade are the leads.

"Liberty." (Universal Special Feature. Two reels. Fifteenth Episode. Week of Nov. 20.)—The opening of this chapter entitled "The Flag of Truce," finds Liberty and Pedro the captives of the Mexicans. Pedro makes long but futile efforts to escape and at last is taken away to the torture chamber. Liberty in the meantime makes a hole in the prison wall and crawls through only to find herself in a dank dungeon. She turns to go back but the hole was then closed.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

CALIFORNIA—Goat Island: The United States Naval Training Station has purchased a moving picture outfit from Walter Preddey for the instruction and entertainment of budding Jack Tars.

Hayward: The management of the Hayward theatre has completely revamped its operating room and has added a new Power's Cameragraph No. 6A.

Redding: E. M. Linnell recently purchased a Power's Cameragraph, No. 6A.

Sausalita: The Swastoka theatre, which has been conducted by several persons during the past two years, has been taken over by its owner, J. Elliott, who will conduct it in conjunction with his other house.

Eureka: D. E. States recently paid a visit to San Francisco, where he purchased a motion picture projection machine and a gas generating outfit.

Dunsmuir: Extensive alterations were made recently to the Auditorium and a new Baird projection machine was installed as part of the improvement.

San Francisco: The Zellerbach Paper Company has purchased a projection machine for the purpose of showing the steps in the manufacture of paper.

Manteca: The interests of M. D. Serrano in the Palace of Amusements have been purchased by H. Jacobson, who will conduct entertainments there twice a week.

San Francisco: The California Development Board of Trade has installed a Motiograph projection machine in its rooms in the Ferry building.

San Rafael: G. Sargent, of the Lyric theatre, is making a trip through the southern part of the state to enjoy a vacation and secure new business ideas.

Redlands: The Wyatt Opera House has been converted into a motion picture theatre by the lessees, Hendrickson and Cooper. The firm of J. Slipper and Company has installed two Powers 6B projecting machines with full equipment.

Los Angeles: The Superba theatre is one of the first down-town houses to be equipped with a Baird projecting machine which was installed recently.

Fresno: M. R. Parra, who conducts the Plaza theatre, is having plans prepared for a theatre to be erected here at an estimated cost of $50,000.

Tulare: The new Lyric theatre was opened recently by L. W. Willis.

Salinas: R F. Shinn recently reopened the White theatre, the house having been dark for some time.

Berkeley: Ground has been cleared for the erection of a $100,000 moving picture house on University avenue for A. R. Moore and associates.

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

That the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. has done more for the exhibitor by furnishing a machine for his booth at a great saving than any other similar company in existence? If you did not know this we wish to impress upon you that the above is a fact.

We fear no competition when it comes to COST OF UP-KEEP and SIMPLICITY of machine, nor is competition plentiful when considering exactness of machine.

The MOTIOGRAPH is in a class by itself.

With a combination of accuracy—simplicity—economy—service and satisfaction, and the comparatively small initial cost, the MOTIOGRAPH is the biggest buy today.

The MOTIOGRAPH is not intended to merely produce an excellent picture for a short time but to continue to give unexcelled projection for years. The material used will not wear out with continued use.

The Price is within reach of every conservative buyer.

The performance of this machine with exceedingly low cost of up-keep and extremely long life are things that every exhibitor should take into consideration.

Just give our dealer a chance to demonstrate its superior qualities.

Selling Service

LET us analyze the conditions in the supply end of our industries still further than we did last week, when we merely asked a question which we hope has been considered carefully by our readers.

We do not wish to accuse anyone of a lack of business sense any more than we consider any man dishonest until he has proven himself to be.

LET us consider for a moment an actual case which has recently taken place, where all three factors came together—Manufacturer, Dealer, and Exhibitor.

The Manufacturer, while on a trip through one of his best and most active territories, visited a new house which was designed, upon its completion, to be one of the finest in the state. Equipment was to be a prime factor, for it was known that nothing but the best would do.

HE found to his surprise that four of the dealers handling his goods were on hand, each one fighting for the order to supply all the projection equipment and that which went with it.

Taking the average carfares of these dealers, to and from their headquarters, would amount to about fifteen dollars. They were in town two nights and two days, costing them on an average of fifteen dollars, making a total minimum expense of thirty dollars per man. This is a considerable outlay regardless of the loss of time.

What did they have to sell?

THEY were all handling a complete line of equipment and all had the same brands of goods on which they all receive the same dealer's discount. What was the answer?

It was a pure case of one man cutting the price of the goods so low that the other three dealers gave up in despair. This is the supply business.

WHAT happened to the various manufacturers? It was for them to sit back and laugh—they had no worry as far as the dealers' competition was concerned. All that could possibly worry them was whether another competing manufacturer was allowing a larger dealer discount or not, and this was to a large extent eliminated as each commodity had its own reputation and as a general rule sold at different list prices. As it happened in this case, exactly the same recommendations were made by all four dealers.

HOW about the theatre man? He saved money; that is, his initial outlay was not as great as it might have been, but did he save money?

The question again must be asked.

What has the supply dealer got to sell?

After all there is only one answer—SERVICE

What is there that the theatre man buys?

It's just as simple—SERVICE

THE equipment is always the same—that is, a theatre man can buy the same goods from one reputable dealer as he can from another, therefore SERVICE is all that is left.

To go back to our four dealers—here were reputable men all after the same order—offering the same goods—and all having the same possible margin of profit, yet all that one had to sell over the other was the QUALITY of SERVICE he had to offer.

NOW service costs money—as the costs of maintaining this service increases so the ability to serve should increase.

The theatre owner has a competent operator—perhaps the best in the country—yet his operator cannot and should not be looked upon as an expert in the repairing of machines, transformers, and all the other mechanisms.

Just as automobile companies operate service stations to do work which the chauffeur or owner is not expected to do, so the supply house must do service work which the operator cannot be held accountable for.

THE theatre owners do not seem to realize this when they begin beating down the prices of equipment, or it may be that the dealers do not sell the goods in the right way, but whichever it is, conditions as they exist today are not healthy and cannot last.

The distributing end of the supply business is an important matter. When four dealers compete for an order which ultimately brings a profit of not over a hundred dollars at a combined mimimum expense of one hundred and twenty dollars for traveling, hotels and meals, there is something wrong somewhere.

THE profit on this sale should have been approximately five hundred dollars to the dealer who sold the goods—his contract should have included complete and satisfactory installation with upkeep and guarantee for a given length of time. This would have relieved the theatre owner of all worry and would have given the dealer a margin of profit which would have allowed him to employ a staff of competent and trained men who would be ready at all times to take care of any and all troubles which might occur, no matter what time of day or night. This would have meant equipment plus SERVICE.

THERE is no doubt that if a condition of this kind existed today, the man referred to last week would have collected his four thousand dollars without any trouble and the supply business today would be in a healthy condition. We would find outside manufacturers trying to get into the business, but above all we would see better projection, more enthusiastic audiences and therefore more satisfied theatre owners.

A B C of the Motion Picture Projection Room

The Slide, What It Is, How It Should Be Handled, and the Way in Which It Is Misused by a Great Many Operators —Neatness Is as Necessary in the Projection of Slides as It Is in the Film

THE ordinary lantern, or stereopticon slide is nothing more or less than two pieces of glass bound together with gummed paper, and with a mask or mat between the two glasses to give uniformity to the outline projected upon the screen. These mats though, can be cut in various designs to lend an artistic touch and for use in vaudeville acts doing what is known as poses plastique or cloak effects.

One of these pieces of glass is in reality a sensitized photographic plate 3¼ x 4 inches in size upon which a positive photograph has been made from the negative. The photograph is usually colored by hand, using water colors, especially those used to illustrate popular songs, and is then dried and a mat laid over it which reduces the size of the image to be projected to about 3 x 2¾ inches, after which the other piece of glass, called a cover glass, which is simply a clear, plain piece of thin glass, is laid on top and the two glasses are then bound together with gummed paper called slide binding tape. The purpose of this cover glass is to prevent the emulsion on the positive from becoming scratched, or injured in any way.

The Right and the Wrong Way to Bind Slides

On the face of the mat there is generally the name of the manufacturer and some design in one corner, either a small spot, a star, or some distinguishing mark whereby the operator can be sure that he gets the slide in the carrier as it should go. In binding the slide care is taken to see that the emulsion side of the positive slide is facing upward, the mat is then laid over it with the above mentioned design in the lower left hand corner, first being sure that the picture is not up side down, after which the cover glass is put on and the two are then bound together.

The slide is placed in the slide carrier which should be as close to the condensing lenses as possible in the following manner: See that every slide is before you in the same position as if you were looking at the pictures in a picture book, with the distinguishing mark, whatever it may be, in the lower left hand corner, then pick up the slide with the thumb and forefinger of the left hand, the forefinger covering the spot, or star, and with a half turn of the hand away from you insert the slide in its carrier. If the other side of the slide should be placed toward the condensers, then all the reading matter, if there should be any would read backwards. Also if the slide was inserted in this way it would be more susceptible to breakage of the negative on account of its being nearer to the heat given off by the condensers, and that is the purpose of the cover glass, to protect the negative from breaking by its thickness intervening between the light and the negative.

To Remove the Slide

After being shown this slide may be removed by the thumb and forefinger of the left hand, as before, but we now make a complete turn of the hand to the right, or away from us, and lay the slide down with the mat downward and the distinguishing mark (if we were to lay it upon a sheet of glass and look on the under side) would then be on the right hand lower corner. Each slide as taken from the carrier should be placed on top of the previous slide shown, in the same manner, and after all have been shown it is then a simple matter to pick up the entire set and with one turn of the wrists they are in the proper position to be shown again. This is a simple and easy way to keep your slides from becoming misplaced, and will save you much annoyance, although it is always well to make sure that the slide is not reversed by holding it up to the light before putting it into the slide carrier.

Cleanliness Essential

It is absolutely necessary that the slides should be kept at all times perfectly clean, for nothing looks worse or reflects upon an operator so much as does the showing of dirty slides, caused by finger marks, especially when those fingers are covered with oil and carbon dust. And though a spot of dirt may look small to you in the operating room, remember that it becomes magnified many times upon the screen, and you can have no excuse for finger marks if you follow out the foregoing instructions on placing the slides in the carrier. There is plenty of margin covered by the mat in which to pick up the slide without touching the center of the slide or any other portion but that which is covered by the mat.

To Clean Slides

When a slide becomes dirty it is an easier matter to clean them, by breathing on them while they are cold, and then polishing with a clean dry cloth. Try it out, you who complain that your slides show up foggy and hazy upon the screen and note the difference; you will be surprised just how much difference it does make, and it only takes a few minutes of your time too. Should the slide be extremely dirty and difficult to clean the use of wood alcohol will quickly remove all traces of gumminess, after which the slide should be polished as before, using a soft, clean cloth.

Steadiness Is Essential

The steadiness of a lantern slide is as essential as that of the motion picture film. And with the use of a dissolver there is hardly ever any unsteadiness, but when using the projector to show slides it sometimes happens that the rod holding the stereo lens becomes loosened or the machine is not setting perfectly level will cause the slide to show up on the screen as a "moving picture," this will also happen if care is not taken in putting the slide in the carrier, for sometimes an operator will drop in a slide with a bang, and take out with a yank that will cause the carrier to move more or less, and this movement is of course magnified upon the screen, and with some slides any movement makes the whole thing appear ridiculous; therefore be very careful when putting in or taking out the slides that you do not move the carrier. I found it a pretty good plan to hold the carrier with one hand while putting in or taking out slides, and then when ready to make the change get what we used to call the "dissolving" effect by placing the palm of the right hand over the opening in the condenser cone and gradually cutting off the light until the screen was entirely dark, then quickly pushing or pulling, as the case might be, the new slide into position and then gradually uncovering the light until the slide was entirely illuminated and on the screen again. It takes longer to tell it than it does to do it, but with a little practise this can be accomplished in a really creditable manner, and with a very short period of darkness upon the screen.

Repairing Broken Slides

Should a slide become broken, it can be made as good as new unless the break is in the negative, but this should rarely occur if the slide is placed in the carrier in its proper position, for then the cover glass would be the one to break, and in that event all that you would have to do would be to remove the broken cover glass, and the binding tape scraped from the edge of the negative, a new cover glass put on and the slide rebound as it was before. But if the break is on the negative there is no hope.

With a little attention to the foregoing it is possible for an operator to become recognized as a neat workman, and it is only another one of those things that go toward the making of better projection, and once an operator gets the habit and maintains if he is bound to receive his reward in the increased salary; for managers, with few exceptions, are beginning to realize that it is the careful workman, the one who pays attention to the "little things," that makes it possible for a theatre to gain and keep a reputation for perfect projection.

Next week I will publish an excellent article on Carbons, through the courtesy of Mr. William C. Kunzmann, of the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

I. G. SHERMAN.

MOLLIE KING TO LEAD MARCH AT OPERATORS' BALL

MOLLIE KING, star of the Pathe-Astra film forces, has been chosen to lead the grand march at the reception and dance to be tendered by the Local 244, I. A. T. S. E. of the Moving Picture Operators' Union on Friday, November 17, at Kreuger's Auditorium, Newark, N. J., This will mark Miss King's initial appearance at a public function of this kind.

The Imperial, St. John, New Brunswick, Is Well Equipped

By Herbert W. Andem

KING Square, located at the head of King street, may be said to be the Hub of St. John, N. B. Near the hour of seven o'clock each night, if one is on the streets, there will be seen many people all briskly walking in the direction of King Square. Following, on any one of the seven streets leading into this centrally located plaza, you will find these people turning in toward the south side of the square, and then going into a building located at about the middle section of the block. It is the Imperial theatre, built about three years ago, and devoted to the giving of high class photoplays and comedies. The program is changed each two days and good vaudeville acts are booked for the full week. The Imperial has been very successful from the start under the management of Walter H. Golding.

There are no Sunday performances. The Lord's Day is rigidly observed in St. John. Soft drinks, candy, tobacco are all tabooed for sale on this day. The performance starts at seven o'clock, but only because it is the popular one of the four shows given daily. The first starts at 2 P.M.; the second follows this one, after a few minutes intermission, and closes at 5 o'clock. The second evening show follows closely onto the first performance, at 7 o'clock and closes at 10 o'clock.

"Music for the Pictures" is rendered by a mixed orchestra of six instruments at the afternoon performances and augmented to ten pieces at the eyening performances under the direction of Mr. Swornnesborne. Selections from the best composers and popular operas are played throughout the showing of the films and descriptive music is introduced, as required, for the melodramatic scenes in the pictures.

The total seating capacity of the Imperial is 1,800 seats, one-half comprising the lower floor and the other nine hundred seats located in the one single large balcony. The admission price is ten cents.

At the back of this balcony, in the centre, is located the projection room. It is a built-in room of asbestos and angle-iron construction, 12 feet by 8 feet floor area and 8 feet high. Ventilation is by means of a circular duct located in the centre of the ceiling. The two rheostats are mounted on a shelf, in one corner of the room, and a separate ventilating duct leads off the heat from these to the air outside of the building.

The equipment of the operating-room comprises two Simplex Projectors, hand driven; and one Kleigle spot-light outfit. This is used for the vaudeville acts, as required; 110 volt direct-current at a strength of 50 amperes is used for film projections and 25 amperes is used in the spot-light arc. Bio carbons of ¾-inch, cored, are used for the positive and ½-inch, solid, for the negative or bottom carbon. Plano-convex condensing lenses of the regulation 4½-inch diameter and 6½-inch focus and 8½-inch focus, respectively, are used. The 8½-inch focus lens is placed first toward the light.

The projection is under the direction of A. J. Mason, chief operator and electrician. Ernest Ross is assistant operator. License for operating is issued each year by the governing board for the Province of New Brunswick. Mr. Mason has been identified with the Imperial since its construction. He superintended the electrical work, doing a great deal of this work himself. The electrical equipment in this theatre has more to it than most theatres of this kind. The cost for electrical energy is very high in St. John, when delivered from the regular lighting circuits, and too, it is all of the alternating-current system. A much cheaper rate for power could be had from the station if energy were taken from the street railway alternators. It was decided then to have installed a motor-generator outfit set up adapted to these conditions and large enough to supply power for both the theatre lighting and projection current. Electrical energy is brought into the basement of the building at a pressure 2200 volts, 60 cycles, 3-phase.

This current is used without transformation to drive a 50 H.P. induction motor direct connected to a 35 KW. 3-wire compound wound, inter-pole type direct-current generator. This direct-current is generated at 220 volts, and leads are brought out to collecting rings connected through two small transformers for maintaining a balance to the 3-wire system of wiring used throughout the theatre. From the main control panel, located in this power transforming room in the basement, feeder cables are run in conduit to the projection-room and to the stage switchboard. At these points additional distributing panels control the individual circuits for the stage and auditorium lighting. Both the stage and projection-room have a Palmer remote control-switch used in emergencies to instantly turn on the full lighting circuits at the one operation of pushing a small switch-button.

The stage of this theatre is large, and is equipped with the usual paraphernalia for the giving of the legitimate performances. At about one-third of the distance back from the foot-lights are steel wire guides holding braces for a Radium Gold Fiber screen. These braces are longer at the bottom, and for the purpose of holding the screen out at an angle and thus avoiding the unsightly inverted keystone shape on the screen when projecting at an angle. The braces have eyelets sliding on the wire guides. In this manner of mounting the screen, the screen can be raised as an ordinary drop and the full depth of the stage can be had for other purposes.

The Gold Fiber screen is at a projection distance of 138 feet, and a screen picture of 18 feet by 14 feet is obtained with a Gundlach objective lens of 7-inch equivalent focus. Slide projection is from the usual method of moving the lamphouse to one side, and back of an objective lens held on the machine head. Each film shown has to be preceded by the announcement slide that it has been passed by the Board of Censorship Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Mason has equipped his projectors with several conveniences in the way of easily made devices. One very good device is a shield made of sheet metal fitted to hang on the heat-plate and protects the eyes as also any light reflections into the room from the light cone striking on the heat-plate and not passing the aperture. Another practical device is to put a segment of a small gear on the lower carbon holder, and have it move this lower carbon in a to-and-fro motion to the upper carbon.

This gear is operated by an extension rod to the back of the lamphouse, where the other handles are located. A small mirror held at an angle to see into the lamphouse through the sight-port for the carbons permits the operator to see the set to his carbons from the operating position. A field glass is in use to detect imperfections in the projected picture on the screen and to obtain a sharp focus.

MARQUETTE, ST. LOUIS, IS AN 800 CAPACITY HOUSE SHOWING A MIXED PROGRAM

AMONG the numerous beautiful picture playhouses of St. Louis, the Marquette theatre deserves proper attention. The Marquette is located on Franklin avenue, and has a seating capacity of about eight hundred. This theatre runs a mixed program of General, Mutual, Universal and Pathe and is proving a great money maker for its owner and manager, George Pliokas. This theatre is fitted up with every modern improvement, among them being two latest model Powers machines and a Minusa screen.

ANOTHER SUGGESTION

Harry Smith, Cobleskill, N. Y.: In the Projection Department of the NEWS issue of November 18 I read of the trouble being experienced by Mr. Magners, of Boyerton, Pa., and I think I can make another suggestion that will be of some help, and if you think it worth while you may publish it.

The blue spot (ghost) may often be eliminated by bringing the condensers together more closely. I was troubled for some time with this same thing and instead of buying new condensing lenses of different focal length I removed the spacing band in the condenser mount of my machine, which is an old-time Edison, and had it made much narrower, bringing the lenses close enough together, so that they almost touch each other. By getting the condensing lenses just the right distance apart both the blue spot and the red fringe which is present when the lamp is ordinarily pulled back far enough to remove the ghost, disappear. Don't try to get a good light with less than 35 amperes on A. C., 40 or 45 is better.

Answer: I do think your suggestion "worth while" and wish to thank you for making it. When I omitted the spacing of the condensers in the answer to Mr. Magners, I took it for granted that all operators were in the habit of placing their condensers in the position which you describe, and as I had very little data to work on it made some little difficulty for me to answer as fully as I would have liked the question of Mr. Magners. I hope that you will continue to read the department and feel free to make any further suggestions, for this is a department of the operator, for the operator and by the operator, and it is just as much yours as it is mine or anyone else. So don't hesitate to come across at any time with suggestions that you may think will be of benefit to the operator.

OPERATOR CAN DO TWO THINGS AT ONE TIME

Mr. Harding, manager of a theatre in Orange, Mass.: I read with much interest your special article, "A B C of the Motion Picture Operating Room" in last week's issue of the NEWS, and while there was some good hints in it I want to take exception to the part wherein you say, "No man yet has been able to do two things at the same same and do them both as they should be. The real fault is that the manager is unwilling to employ sufficient COMPETENT help in the operating room to do the work as it should be."

The reason that a great many managers put up with incompetent help is that the manager himself does not know whether his projection is good or bad. And I believe it is a duty of the manager to understand something about projection so that he will be able to give his patrons a run for their money. And as far as your objection is concerned regarding the operator rewinding film while projecting a picture, my operator can and does do it. The rewind is located in the booth at the operator's right hand and has a tension so set that when the crank stops the rewinder stops. My operator can turn the rewind with his right hand and the machine with his left, his eye on the screen practically all the time. If the light goes bad all he has to do is let go of the rewind, change hands and adjust the light, and from my personal experience there is no reason why an operator should not rewind film under proper conditions, than there is to think that he cannot feed the lamp with one hand while cranking the machine with the other. I hope you will take this in the spirit it is intended, and wish both the NEWS and yourself continued success.

Answer: Now that the election is over and the best man has won, I thought I would be free from arguments for a few days at least, but such is not to be, and while I do accept your criticism in the spirit which prompted you to make it, I must "come back" at you.

You stated a certain amount of truth when you said that many managers do not know when they have good or bad projection. But happily there are only a few of this kind left. All are striving to give their patrons, as you say, "a run for their money," with the result that the work of the operator is becoming more and more important and more recognizable every day.

You in your letter contradict me while agreeing with me, for you must admit that when you say, "If the light goes bad all he has to do is to change hands and adjust the light." This proves my contention that the operator CAN NOT DO TWO THINGS AT THE SAME TIME AND DO THEM BOTH AS THEY SHOULD BE. It is not permissible now in the better class of houses for the light to "go bad" ever, and an operator has all he can attend to if he projects a picture on the screen that is free from and shadows caused by failure to keep his carbons properly adjusted, and to pay particular attention to the speed at which the subject should be run. If you or any other exhibitor expect to give your patrons that "run for their money," you must see that the operator pays such close attention that there will be absolutely no change in the illumination on this screen from the beginning to the end of the picture. And this can only be accomplished by the operator who has nothing else to distract his mind or attention while the film is being projected.

I will agree with you in your last statement. There is no reason why an operator should not rewind film under proper conditions, but PROPER CONDITIONS mean that he should do nothing else while he is engaged in the rewinding, and to do that properly is a job in itself, for it is upon the work of the operator that you depend for the income of your theatre, and if you were to have a number of breaks during the showing of each film you can readily understand that your audience would become disgusted and go elsewhere. And an operator is the only one who can rewind film and give it the proper inspection that will enable him prevent nearly all, if not all, such occurrences. I believe if you give this careful thought you will agree with me. For your kind wishes, accept my sincere thanks.

PICTURE OUT OF FOCUS IN CENTRE

Walter Johnson, Ashtabula, Ohio: I am having some trouble with my machine and am writing you to see if you can help me out. When running a show the film seems to be loose in the aperture. It shakes and wobbles so much that the picture is in and out of focus all the time, right in the center. The machine is a Powers 6-A, and the aperture plate seems to be in good condition, also the tension springs. Can you help me?

Answer: I'll try. I was some time getting it through my head just what you meant by the film being "loose" in the aperture, but I think I understand now what you mean. It is probably due to the tension springs being loose which causes them to shift from side to side on the film track. See that the tracks of your aperture plate are not worn, and if they are get a new one; if they are not, feel the tension of the springs, and if they are too loose, set up on the small screw which you will find on the lower part of the cooling plate as far as it will go; then if the fault you complain of is remedied, but the machine seems to pull or drag, loosen off on this same screw until the drag ceases, taking care that you do not loosen it enough to cause the same trouble to develop again. That, I think will fix you all right.

BALTIMORE OPERATORS PLAN DANCE

ARRANGEMENTS are being made to handle 5,000 people at the dance of the Maryland Motion Picture Operators, Baltimore, which will take place at the Lyric on Wednesday, November 15. The affair is expected to be the largest the operators have ever held, for a larger hall has been engaged and elaborate preparations are being planned by the committee in charge.

The American Federation of Labor, which will convene in Baltimore the week of November 13, are expected to be the honored guests. Plans are also being made to bring one of the biggest stars to town for the night, and numerous other attractions are expected to be sprung during the evening.

SEVENTH ANNUAL DANCE OF BALTIMORE OPERATORS ON NOVEMBER 15

THE seventh annual dance of the Motion Picture Operators' Organization of Baltimore will be held on Wednesday, November 15th at the Lyric. The dance is to be given in honor of the American Federation of Labor which will visit Baltimore that week.

The committee has been organized and preparations are under way to make this event one of the finest affairs the operators have ever held. Efforts are being made to introduce several new attractions and additional features and it is hoped the dance will surpass any of the previous entertainments. Electrical dances and effects will be an innovation and entirely original. In addition to the dance in the main auditorium, there will be a continuous entertainment in the lower hall. The music will be furnished by Gaul's Symphony Orchestra.

The committee in charge of the dance is composed of the following members: G. Kingston Howard, Samuel Isaacson, Carroll G. Bayne, Frank T. Holmes, Fred Kerby, Jr., William George, A. J. Stewart, Nicholas Popka, Thomas P. Finn, Harry E. Wallis, William C. Whitmore, Norbert Haefele and N. Basil Morgan.

OFFICIAL ROAD CALL OF THE I. A. T. S. E.

The Official Road Call is now operative against the theatres enumerated in the following list, viz.:

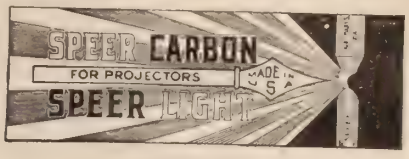
Murfreesboro, Tenn.—Citizens' Opera House.
Nashville, Tenn.—Crescent, Elite, Fifth Avenue, Rex, Alhambra and Hippodrome.
Oklahoma City, Okla.—Overholzer, Lyric, Liberty, Folly, Empress, Majestic and Colcord Airdrome.
Richmond, Ind.—Murray.
Tampa, Fla.—Tampa theatre.
Tusla, Okla.—Empress and Palace.
Watertown, N. Y.—Local theatre.



PROJECTION AT THE PARK

VISITING the Park theatre, Broadway and 59th street, where the sensational photoplay "The Masque of Life" is being shown, I was invited by Mr. Emil Ankermiller, manager of the production, to enter and take "the worst seat I could find." But there wasn't any.

On entering the theatre I was met by "Pete Montebello," one of the stars in the production, and who cannot be excelled as a steeple jack, for "Pete" is a monk. Signor Morona, Pete's trainer who has appeared before all the crowned heads, and some of those uncrowned, of Europe, claims that Pete is the best trained chimpanzee appearing in the movies, and after seeing the picture I think you will agree with me. The ape is only three years old and he causes one to gasp when he is seen climbing, with a baby in his arms to the top of—But don't take my word for it, go see the picture, I started to write of the projection, not the story of the play.

The operating room in charge of Thomas Ross and my old friend Frank Nealy, is equipped with Simplex projectors, arc controllers and all necessary appliances for putting on good work, which I am pleased to say is just what these two boys are doing. They are both members of Local 306, and it speaks well for the organization that in every house so far visited by me, the operators have been men who can be relied upon to give satisfactory results upon the screen. With 90 amperes of current being used to project the picture on a radium gold fiber screen, the picture stood out so wonderfully clear that by the manner in which it was being projected the picture would be a "feature" if there was nothing else to commend it. The speed was judged with nicety

Steady success comes to the house that shows clear pictures

The crowds follow the novelties—that is true. But they stick to the houses that show the clear, vivid pictures week after week, when the passing interest of novelty is gone.

The music, rendered by an orchestra of eleven pieces, the picture and the masterly way in which it is put on, and last but not least the pleasure of meeting personally and shaking hands with "Pete" affords one an opportunity of spending a couple of hours where they are soothed by the music, the blood quickened by the many exciting moments during the action of the drama and the eye pleased by the brilliant and well handled illumination of the screen with all absence of "flicker" that causes the better class of patrons to keep away from picture shows where no attention is paid to the finer details of projection.

UNION MUSICIANS AND OPERATORS WALK OUT

THE union musicians and operators at both the Regent and Rosedale theatres, Detroit, Mich., walked out before the first evening show on Thursday, November 3. The union people are demanding that the proprietor, William F. Klatt, first unionize his other Detroit theatres, namely, the Jewell, Gratiot and Vendome. Mr. Klatt refuses to comply with their demands, taking the stand that he will run his theatres as he wants and that he will not be dictated to.

Some time ago he put in union musicians and operators at the Rosedale and Regent theatres, which are his finest playhouses, the Regent having opened only six weeks ago and seating 3600 people.

WASHINGTON THEATRE CHANGES MANAGEMENT

PENN GARDENS, Washington, is now under the management of S. Eddleman, who succeeded George Schulz, who had directed this house since its inception nearly two years ago. Mr. Eddleman has installed a three-piece orchestra of violin, harp and clarinet, which makes a delightful accompaniment for the pictures. With a change of program every evening, Penn Gardens offers a wide range of features culled from Metro, Paramount, Triangle, Keystone and Fox, with shorter travel subjects, comedies, and the animated weekly.

A neat card of the week's attractions is issued to patrons, on the back of which is found some personal information differing each week. The newest items of these is the soliciting from patrons of their favorite player so that the management may notify the particular patron when his screen favorite will appear at Penn Gardens.

FINE NEW ORGAN INSTALLED IN CLEVELAND THEATRE

AN organ that is understood to have cost $10,000, and that can roar like the guns at the storming of Verdun or drop into a lullaby as soft as the wooing songs of birds, was installed last week at the Strand theatre. Sidney Hamilton is to be chief organist. For tone and range the big instrument is supposed to be the only one of its kind in Cleveland.

PARAMOUNT THEATRE IN PARKERSBURG, W. VA., REMODELED

THE Camden theatre, at Parkersburg, W. Va., was recently remodeled and redecorated, and from the reports that have been received by F. Fayette Smoot, of the theatre, which runs Paramount Pictures, he says that since then business has been steadily increasing. The management has also installed a number of new house features that have created favorable comment.

ABOUT equal in popularity with the additive methods of natural color cinemotography are the processes by which it is endeavored to produce the much sought results through substractive color mixing. While a properly worked out three color additive system will doubtless produce the more scientifically correct color interpretation, the subtractive processes appear to have the most value commercially and will be more likely to appeal to the practical man.

We have briefly outlined the difference between additive color synthesis and subtractive color mixing in a former installment of our article (Camera Department, Issue of October 14, page 2423), but it seems advisable to here set forth the most apparent differences between additive and subtractive processes as applied to the motion picture film strip used in color cinematography and the means of projecting it. As has been previously shown, the respective sensation images of the film positives used in additive processes generally appear black and white, and receive their proper coloring when being projected through the medium of suitable color filters forming part of the projector mechanism.

But, in examining a film strip prepared by a subtractive method, we see that each picture on the film strip appears to be a natural color reproduction of the objects photographed, or a close approximation to such. If we have a film strip with each image, a complete color transparency and also showing successive phases of motion, it will be apparent that such a film may be projected (and its coloring reproduced upon the screen) on an ordinary projecting machine with no added attachments of any nature.

Subtractive Process Defined

We may, therefore, briefly define a subtractive process of natural color cinematography as one by which we can produce films on which each image is a more or less faithful reproduction in colors of the scene photographed. The value of such a process is readily apparent, but, as will be subsequently seen, it is by no means easy to produce such colored positives and also maintain the qualities of sharpness and register which are seen to be necessary when the enlargement incident to projecting is considered.

The subtractive methods of color photography became popular largely through the efforts of the well known English authority, Sanger Shepherd, whose system may be outlined as follows: Three primary sensation negatives are first taken of the subject through red, green and blue-violet filters, the filters being similar or identical to those used in additive tricolor work. We next make transparencies (on films or plates) from the sensation negatives and after having suitably dyed or colored the images of the respective transparencies, we propose to bind them up together with the images in register. In order that this triple or composite transparency may, when looked through, reproduce correctly the colors of the objects photographed, we must when preparing our three transparencies (or positives) take into consideration the laws governing subtractive color mixing or, in other words, the superimposing of pigment or body colors.

It is required, therefore, that we stain each of the positive images, which combined form the color transparency, with a dye complementary in color to the filter through which its corresponding negative was photographed. In other words, each separate sensation image of the superimposed transparency (positive) must be stained with a color transmitting the other two colors which combined with the color transmitted by its respective taking filter will form white. It is to be specially noted that the separate sensation records are not tinted all over but merely the images are stained—the highlights remaining white. It should also be appreciated that the images cannot be black deposits of reduced silver (as in an ordinary photographic positive) as our colors would then be degraded by an admixture of black. The respective images must be represented by transparent deposits of greenish-blue, magenta pink and light yellow coloring matter—these hues being, of course, the complementaries to the red, green and blue violet taking filters, as set forth in a previous installment (Camera Department, October 14, p. 2423).

Printing on Bichromated Gelatine

The next problem which arises is that of producing the color sensation images without the formation of the customary silver deposit which results when a film positive is developed. In the Sanger Shepherd and similar subtractive processes of still plate color photography, the positives are printed upon films coated with gelatine (ordinary gelatino-bromide negative films for instance) which have been immersed for a time in a potassium bichromate and ammonia solution. After such immersion and subsequent drying in the dark, they are ready for use and such films are termed bichromated gelatine films. The immersion of the gelatine film coating in a bichromate solution confers upon it the property of becoming insoluble in hot water after sufficient exposure to light. The color separation negatives are now placed in a printing-frame and some sensitized bichromated film placed upon the negatives with the celluloid side of the film in contact with the negatives.

Upon proper exposure to sunlight the portions of the bichromated film behind the shadow (clear) spaces in the negative become hardened and therefore insoluble upon development which is performed with warm water. As is known to most all photographers, the gelatine coating of a plate or film will quickly melt if the same is subjected to treatment with warm water. This is true of the unexposed portions of our bichromated gelatine film also, but the portions which have been impressed by light will resist the melting action of the warm water and upon completion of development in this manner, we have transparent gelatine positive images in relief corresponding to our color sensation negatives. If the bichromated films used also contain a coating of silver bromide emulsion, this may be dissolved away in a fresh Hypo bath to which a little Ferricyanide has been added.

The developed gelatine positives are next immersed in dye baths of suitable colors, whereupon the dye is taken up by the colorless gelatine images. The staining may be regulated to perfection with such processes, for if it is found upon removal that a film is too heavily dyed it may be washed in water until the highlights are clear, or, conversely, if it is not sufficiently stained it may be returned to the dye bath for a longer period. When the three films are stained and dried they are bound up in register, the result being a transparency in the colors of the original.

Although films of bichromated gelatine have proven entirely satisfactory for making color transparencies by the subtractive process a little reflection will show bichromated film would not be suitable for making the positives for a subtractive cinematographic color process. This is largely by reason of its com-

Music and the Picture

What is the Standard in Music for Pictures?

"They Want 'A Perfect Day,' 'Just a Song at Twilight,' or Something of the Like Title to Fit Scenes in Pictures That Are of Such a Nature That They Will Permit This Type of Music," Says Correspondent—The Reason Is a Psychological One WEEK after week I read in the musical department of the NEWS the opinions and criticisms of leaders and musicians all over the country in regard to the methods for "playing the pictures." One would think that the consensus of opinion of all these musicians would formulate a standard for picture playing, but as these opinions have been coming in for years and still continue to do so, one must naturally infer that that standard has not arrived.

In your columns in the NEWS, dated December 25, 1915, you printed a letter of mine on improvisation. Since that time I have changed my views somewhat. I still contend that a musician who can improvise a musical gem of any description is the ideal man for a picture theatre where only one musician is used.

However, after coming in contact with such well known managers and producers as Frederic Ullman, of Buffalo, who owns the Elmwood and other large theatres, J. B. Clarke, vice president of Metro, Jerome Caspar, manager Regent theatre, Pitssburgh, and W. C. Quimby, Fort Wayne, I draw my conclusions from their observations that the public does not want music that is specially composed for the pictures. The foregoing seems to go against my pet theory of improvisation, but from the aforesaid observations I am forced to conclude that the following idea in picture playing is what the public and knowing managers want: They want "A Perfect Day," "Just a Song at Twilight" or something of a like title to fit sunset or twilight scenes in pictures that are of such a nature that they will permit this type of music. They want "Old Black Joe" and "Kentucky Home," etc. for plantation scenes. They want hymns where hymns will fit and they want Lampe's "Vision of Salome" during a cooche dance. They not only want this music to be characteristic of the type and locale of picture, but the action and titles must fit as well. They not only want the action to fit the picture, but there must be a very evident collusion between the scenes and the titles of the music.

There are two very great reasons why managers and the public want very close collusion between, not only the music and the action on the screen, but the titles of the music and the scenes.

The reason the public wants its music thus is a psychological one. Every person has a natural inclination to believe that he or she is as clever and discerning as any other mortal and when those persons hear music that they know in a picture show, it flatters their vanity that they can detect the collusion between the titles of the music and the scenes of the picture. The patron is helping to make his own entertainment. He has a sort of picture puzzle game on his hands and he likes it.

The reason the manager wants this kind of music is quite obvious. He wants it because it pleases his patrons and that's where he gets his money.

There are many instances that bear out these managerial contentions, the most notable one that I know of being in Pittsburgh. Ince's "Civilization" was being shown at the Pitt theatre and after the first show, Mr. Carl Bernthaler, a great conductor, simply changed the original score to suit the musical taste of the Pitt's clientele. I heard the original score of "Civilization" at the Criterion theatre and I am forced to confess that there were scenes in that picture where a simple hymn tune would have lifted those scenes to sublime heights. The people who were in that theatre during the performance I saw, sat there apathetic, subdued but not tense.

Not so in the "Rialto." When the topical picture was shown, the orchestra followed it wonderfully well, both in the action of the music but the titles as well. Faces beamed all around me and all over the theatre could be seen people leaning toward each other and whispering the name of what the orchstra was playing. The audience was intensely pleased. They were part of the entertainment then.

The musicians of the country can take this letter for what it is worth. I still have my own ideas about playing the pictures but I am sincere in my belief from close observation that the people want collusion between both the action and the music, and the titles of the music as well.

Yours truly,

FRED SLOOP.

Olympic Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio.

EDITOR'S NOTE:

It has been a long time since we last heard from Mr. Sloop and the above communication will more than explain the reason.

In every phase of the musical field there has always been a difference in the critical consensus of opinion and this will undoubtedly continue as long as music is an art. There is one redeeming factor, however, in playing music to pictures, namely, that regardless of what so-called musical critics may say, results are obtained when the audience is entertained. The greatest failures in the photoplay theatres have been made by those musicians and musical directors who have tried to please the advanced musical critic who might be in the audience and which at the highest estimate might constitute 2 per cent. of that audience. This does not mean that less care should be taken in playing good music properly, but that music which does not really entertain and simply attracts attention to the technical ability of the performers and at best can only interest this 2 per cent. of the audience is all wasted energy and spells failure with capital letters. This so-called classical business has been driven so far that I know many instances wherein some who knew little or nothing about music have been able to hold down positions in picture theatres by making the managers believe that they played nothing but classical music.

I am certainly glad to hear that Mr. Sloop has changed his ideas about improvisation for this is the one thing that is entirely obsolete in present day picture playing.

There is little to add to what Mr. Sloop says regarding the setting of certain musical numbers to certain picture scenes. I am personally not a great advocate of setting music by its titles,

There is no picture released that cannot be superbly interpreted by

THE BARTOLA ORCHESTRA

—and no theatre for which there isn't a size and style to fit.

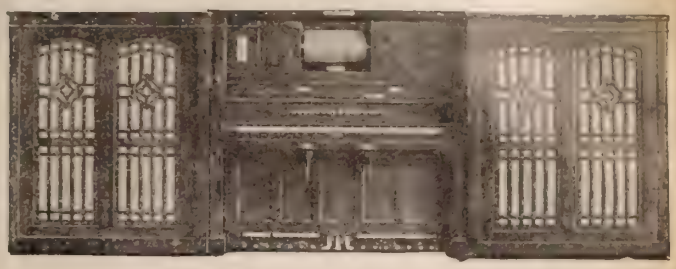
CHAS. C. PYLE, General Sales Agent, 708-710 Mallers Bldg., Chicago, Ill. Factory Oshkosh, Wisconsin

nevertheless there is no rule in picture music which does not work both ways and when a suitable musical number can be so set that the title lends an additional enchantment, it is always highly appreciated by the audience. When this is done judiciously and the action on the screen and the music or theme synchronize temperamentally, it is very good, but in so many cases synchronization is sacrificed when the musician tries to fit titles to screen action, which to say the least is very ridiculous. When standard music composed by competent composers is used, the composition as a rule bears out the meaning of the title in temperament. When songs of the street or the so-called popular music is used, the fitting titles often create very ridiculous musical complications. Musical scores are bound to be a fact to a certain extent and when confined to pictures which are long in preparation, giving sufficient time to the thought of original music, I cannot see but that such pictures can be benefitted by the original musical score.

Your criticism of the "Civilization" score has been mentioned to me before, nevertheless, there were other points in the score which were very good and when you consider that we still criticize and hear criticisms of great musical works, it is only fair to suppose that the present efforts in picture music which is still in its infancy will receive a fair share of criticism which is necessary to agitate still higher attainments. I have before me music of the "Intolerance" score which has been published by Chappell & Company, and composed by Joseph Carl Breil. This score contains sixteen separate compositions. The music to "Intolerance" is beautiful; the music to the Fox feature "The Daughter of the Gods" is beautiful and there is no reason why this music should not be played. If the musicians do not encourage original picture music, it is simply going to delay the better results.

I have on my desk at this time a letter from one of the best known producers, saying "We have found that the main difficulty lies, not in obtaining suitable music but in persuading the exhibitor to use it. With the exception of a few conspicuous houses, the average exhibitor cannot be induced to give much attention to special music." This is in error, for we know that it is the musician who makes the exhibitor disinterested. I have yet to meet one exhibitor who has tested the benefits of proper music, and has not become a thorough enthusiast.

Just as Mr. Sloop has changed his mind in the last year, so we will all change our minds to a certain extent in the next year.



HARRY MEYERS, LEADER OF STANLEY ORCHESTRA, PHILADELPHIA, DEDICATES MARCH TO MASTBAUM

HARRY MEYERS, leader of the Stanley orchestra, Philadelphia, has recently composed a march which he dedicated to Stanley Mastbaum.

This was published on the back of the theatre program, and it was advertised that requests for the march would be honored. Twenty thousand programs were asked for, the one week of the publication of the march. The Stanley orchestra is exploited as much as the pictures. The whole musical program is advertised in the daily papers at a cost for this part alone of $350 a week.

A typical evening's repertoire is as follows: Overture Ruy Blas, by Mendelssohn; selection during photoplay, "Au Matin," by Godard; "Claire de Lune," by Thome; Characteristic, "Whispering Flowers," by Von Blun; Reverie, "Sous les Etoiles," by Lucome.

Note.—In music plots each reel of film is divided into 10 units of time, each unit denoted by one X, representing about 1½ minutes. Consequently when a number is designated by XX it plays about 3 minutes, XXXX about 6 minutes, etc. When no X appears after musical description it means that the number is very short and does not play a minute or more. When cues to stop numbers are in quotation, "——," it means that the cue is reading matter or sub-title. All other cues are action on screen. All segues should be made quietly and clean. When quick segues or abrupt stops are necessary it will be mentioned in Cues or Notes. When the time of each 1,000 ft. of film is less than 15 minutes there will appear less than 10 X's in each reel. To get the correct time of projection for each reel, multiply the number of X's appearing in each reel by 1½.

Music Notes.—No. 1 should be a short andante movement of pathetic appeal. Nos. 2 and 3 should be two light movements. Two numbers are suggested, as one played continuously may become tiresome. No. 4 begins a light romantic suggestion. No. 5 should be a concert waltz with a slow introduction of pathetic appeal. No. 6 is similar to 4. No. 7 should be a light 2-4 number. No. 8 is a screen suggestion. The screen action should be imitated. No. 9 is a more serious romantic suggestion. Dare not be a number of dramatic effect. No. 10 is similar to 2. No. 11 is similar to 9. No. 12 should be a one-step extract of some known musical comedy. No. 13 is similar to 5. No. 14 must be a slow, heavy, agitated number with a positive pathetic appeal. No. 15 must be a lengthy agitato movement. Nos. 16 and 17 must be two long numbers of positive pathetic appeal. Should not be numbers of dramatic effect. No. 18 should be a waltz lento movement and maintain the emotional appeal contained in 16 and 17. No. 19 is similar to 2. No. 20 is similar to 15. No. 21 should be a waltz movement played strictly legato. No. 22 is similar to 16. No. 23 is similar to 18. The organ can be appropriately used throughout the picture.

THE MANHATTAN A THOROUGHLY MODERN WELL MANAGED HOUSE

THE Manhattan at 109th street and Manhattan avenue, New York City, has an unusual location for a Photoplay theatre, being within a "stones throw" of the 110th street station of the Ninth avenue "L," and surrounded by many large apartment houses. The business section of Harlem is also nearby. The theatre a structure of steel and iron measures 100 x 200. The exterior is of tapestry brick. The design demands attention. Upon entering from the street, we see a lobby that is both spacious and attractive. Its size is 10 x 30. The ticket booth is to the left upon entering, and contains an automatic ticket selling device for accuracy and speed. The lobby flooring is marble. The ceiling is stenciled which adds to its cheerfulness. Many posters are seen and autographed pictures of "movie stars" in neat frames hang on the lobby walls.

Interior, Manhattan Theatre

To the right there is an elevator which takes you to the roof or balcony. This roof garden contains 700 comfortable seats. Flower boxes are part of the decorations on the roof The projection booth on the roof is well equipped for real service. Two Simplex machines and other modern equipment are in this booth.

Next to the elevator in the lobby is a cast iron stairway for those preferring the "shoe leather method" of reaching the roof or balcony. Stepping from the lobby to the theatre generally an unusual roomy house is seen, its capacity being one thousand. The seats were manufactured by the American Seating Co. and are leather upholstered, assuring comfort.

To the left a cast iron stairway leads to the balcony from the inside lobby. This balcony seats 400. The smoker is welcome here. Toilets are located to the rear of this balcony. The interior walls are painted red and the ceiling is white, making an excellent contrast. The pictures are shown on a mirror screen 20 x 25, the throw being 75 feet.

A Seabury organ, costing six thousand dollars is furnishing the music, and the head demonstrator of the Seabury Organ Co. plays it. No wonder the music is so good. The Typhoon Ventilating System is used, which explains its unusual coolness. In addition electric fans are numerous. The lighting is indirect. Adequate heat is maintained in the winter. Radiators hang about the walls.

The theatre is managed by Schwatz and Rudy, and it might be mentioned that four or five people have tackled the management of this house previous to them and failed. Mr. Schwartz claims management is everything and we agree with him. This house uses the Universal Film Service, and all other "supreme" features available, Fox, Bluebird, Triangle, V-L-S-E, etc., are on its list for selection. Ten or twelve reels are shown at a performance and four performances constitute a day. Harry Greenberg, the operator starts the machines going at 10:30, and lights are out around 11. The Manhattan is advertised in the New York Evening Telegram, and the management has a mailing list of 2,000. The admission is five cents in the afternoons and ten cents in the evenings.

THE SUMNER, SOL BRILL'S BROOKLYN HOUSE, IS HOME OF GOOD ENTERTAINMENT PROPERLY PRESENTED

THE Sumner theatre, Sumner and Gates avenues, Brooklyn, N. Y., has lately undergone complete redecorating and new management has been instituted. Harry Thoms holds the position of manager, having been appointed by Sol Brill. He was previously manager of William Fox's Audubon and Academy of Music theatres in New York City. During the summer months while the show was held on the roof of the theatre the interior was extensively redecorated, a new stage setting installed and the house light rearranged. As the owners of the theatre cater to a very high class clientèle, Mr. Brill has arranged his program on the generally accepted style of the best houses. An orchestra under the direction of Fred Quintrell, formerly of the Academy of Music, furnishes appropriate music for the pictures. For two weeks Alfred de Manby, the baritone who entertained at the New York Strand and Rialto, was engaged to sing at the Sumner.

As a result of the high class entertainment offered, the house is undergoing a most successful run. The Brooklyn public has not been slow to appreciate the worth of the shows there and as a consequence the theatre which seats 1200 on the ground floor alone, has been filled to capacity many times recently.

The house is supplied with Simplex machines with Feaster rewind attachments. Electra carbons are used. The screen is of CHAPPELL and Company, music publishers, of 41 East 34th street, New York City, are publishing musical extracts from the original music composed by Joseph Carl Breil for David W. Griffith's film play, "Intolerance." The piano score contains sixteen distinct and separate compositions which are introduced in their entirety during the showing of the film. The music for the "Intolerance" film has been a great factor in the success of the Griffith film play.

CHAPPELL ISSUES EXTRACTS FROM "INTOLERANCE" MUSIC

The "Babylonian Love Song" is a chant theme suggested by D. W. Griffith and put to music by Joseph Carl Breil. "Intolerance" music is another reason why we are sure that music and picture has a great and successful future.

J. W. CALDWELL SHOWS WHAT "PEP" AND ENERGY WILL DO IN A SMALL THEATRE TOWN

J. W. CALDWELL has shown what can be done in a small town with a tent, good pictures and—pep and energy. The Triangle, as he calls his tent-theatre, brings people inside at ten and twenty cents admission, and they are glad to pay these prices. They know that no manager can give them features for nothing and must charge accordingly. The 1,500 inhabitants of Rosedale, Miss., see no reason why they shouldn't view the best pictures, even if they do live in a small place. But they are sensible enough to realize that good things cost money. As a result of this understanding between themselves and the manager, they get the kind of entertainment that lines up with that obtainable in a town three or four times larger than Rosedale.

It is said that the Triangle is the prettiest and best conducted airdome between Memphis and New Orleans. Knowing the disadvantage of the no-top airdome, and being obliged to move every time there was a visitation of rain, the management decided upon a canvas covering. There are comfortable chairs and an inclined floor in the Triangle. The interior is cooled by wall fans, the side walls of the tent being open top and bottom.

The Triangle manager advertises in the local paper, and a weekly program and heralds and other advertising matter are mailed to all nearby towns. The front of the tent is made attractive with posters. Novel window displays now and then are sprung upon the townspeople in prominent stores of Rosedale.

In order to place Picture Progress, the publication issued by the Triangle Film Corporation, whose features are in use at the air-dome, only in the hands of those who really want a copy, Mr. Caldwell runs a slide stating that "Your copy of the Paramount Picture Progress is at the Charey Drug Company." This arrangement is one of mutual benefit for the theatre and the druggist, and enables the manager of the Triangle to get a window display without difficulty.

The patrons of the Triangle theatre come from nearby towns and in the majority of instances own their cars. For this reason it is found that the feature shows are the best, for when the people ride from ten to fifteen miles they expect a good performance and are willing to pay well for their amusement.

The Triangle seats 200 and 60 chairs are reserved as "smokers' boxes." A Motiograph machine throws the pictures on a Beaver board screen coated with flat white. A two-foot border helps to accentuate the details of the pictures. The length of throw is forty-five feet.

CRANDALL'S APOLLO, WASHINGTON, D. C., IS AN EXCLUSIVE TEN-CENT THEATRE IN THE RESIDENTIAL SECTION

CRANDALL'S Apollo, Washington, D. C., has helped to make the capital famous for its up to date picture exhibitions. Located at 624 H street, N. E., in a residential section, it has gained the reputation of being one of the best neighborhood houses in the city. The theatre stands on a plot 65 by 140 feet and was built in 1913. It has a seating capacity of eight hundred. The pictures are thrown on a Gold Fibre screen by Power's 6-A machines; the length of throw is 130 feet. The booth is completely equipped with all the "safety first" appliances now so necessary in motion picture theatres.

The Apollo is decorated with simplicity and taste; ornamented side lights cast a subdued glow throughout the auditorium; draperies of rich material and pleasing color, pictures of stars on the walls and compelling decorative effects make the Apollo interior distinctive.

An orchestra of four furnishes the music for the pictures, a selection of World, Paramount, General and other important companies. One, three and six sheet posters, photos, large pictures of stars make the lobby, 60 by 40, "the eye of the theatre." A National cash register ticket machine is installed in the box office.

Seven shows a day is the schedule of the Apollo, with four on week days. Fourteen employes are necessary for the proper upkeep of the house. The doors are open at six o'clock in the evening, and on Sunday at three in the afternoon. Space in the newspapers, a mailing list and the kind of programs that the people want to take home after the show are the principal forms of publicity maintained by the management.

Admission prices do not change at any of the performances. Harry Crandall made the Apollo an exclusive ten cent house. There is a daily change of features and society drama seems to have the preference with the patrons. Six to seven reels are run off at each show.

DIRECTORY OF NEW THEATRES

MISSOURI

M. Domecci recently purchased the Palace theatre, Kansas City, from the Richard Flynn Amusement Co.

The Shenandoah theatre, at Grand and Shenandoah avenues, St. Louis, one of the representative playhouses in the south of the city, has again returned to motion pictures after a few weeks of vaudeville. The Shenandoah, when first built, was a combination vaudeville and picture house; then it became a straight dramatic house in which a local stock company played to excellent business for something like two years. A change of policy decided the management to put on pictures for a few weeks, and then they again tried vaudeville, which lasted only a very short time. Now the Shenondoah's program consists of only big photoplay features, with first and second run showings.

The Royal theatre, at Sixth and Olive streets, St. Louis, under the management of Mrs. Rose Cornelius, is showing "The Fall of a Nation" for the first time in St. Louis, and charging twenty-five cents admission. The house has been crowded to capacity at every performance, and in the evening a line of people waiting to get in extends way down the street.

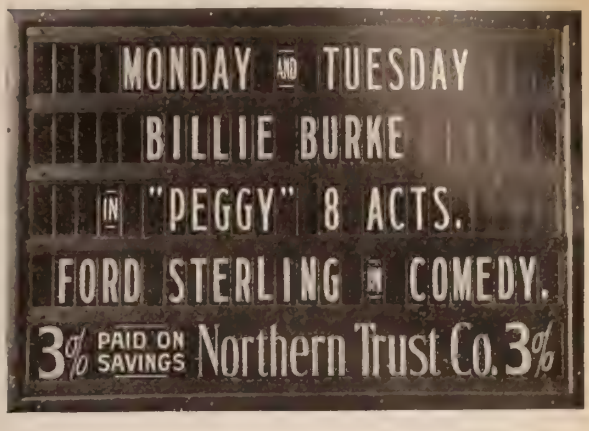
The Bridge theatre, on Natural Bridge road and Euclid avenue, St. Louis, has opened for the season with an all picture bill, using occasional big features.

Carter and Daily, who have taken over the management of the Easton theatre, 5177 Easton avenue, St. Louis, opened the house last week for the season with much eclat—and advertising. The Easton has heretofore been a short season house, having had a number of different managers at different periods, each of whom did not remain long. The new management mean to make the house a success from the start, and in order to get the people to come the very first night, handbills with a coupon attached which was good for one admission to the theatre on opening night were liberally distributed in the neighborhood. Eight reels constituted the first night's program, at five cents admission. There will be two feature nights a week, besides a ten-reel program on Sundays, when ten cents will be charged.

The St. Charles theatre, Sixth and St. Charles streets, St. Louis, was sold during the summer to D. Biondo, who after repairing and decorating the house, opened for the season on September 30. Mr. Biondo will continue the policy formerly in force with the management of the theatre and will continue to show the kind of pictures to which his audiences have become accustomed.

The Broadway, at Broadway and St. Charles streets, St. Louis, which has been closed for the summer, was also opened for the season on September 30, by E. A. Schwartz, formerly manager of both the Broadway and the St. Charles. Mr. Schwartz was manager of the first picture theatre in the downtown district of St. Louis, a little house called the Scenic, which had a successful career, as have all the houses with which he has been connected.

PENNSYLVANIA



H. A. Victor, owner of the Savoy and Victor theatres at McKeesport, states that the former house will be enlarged and remodeled to double its present capacity. Work on remodeling will start shortly after the opening of the new Victor theatre, about October 15. The Savoy theatre now has a capacity of 400. The building will be extended in the rear.

The Olympic theatre at McKeesport is installing a new steam heating plant at a cost of $1,500.

Harry McGowan left Pittsburgh last week to take charge of the Charlestown office of the Unicorn Film Company.

The Grand theatre at Homestead, which has closed during the summer, has again opened.

Building a Theatre?

IF so, why use unsanitary, quickly soiled and unsafe wood lath and plaster ceilings when give permanent beauty and safety, at reasonable cost, without involving any upkeep expense?

These ceilings are fire-resisting and non-collapsible. From the wide range of designs, you'll find many bold, massive and elaborate effects or those comparatively simple and unobtrusive. Easily and quickly erected—if repairing, right over the old ceiling if desired.

parative insensitiveness which it will be recalled is so great as to require exposure to direct sunlight.

Double Coated Film

Coming now to the proposition of superimposing the differently colored positive images printed from the sensation negatives, as applied to cinematograph film, we see that in order to secure more than one surface upon which to print, our film must be coated with emulsion on both sides—while a third layer of emulsion somewhere or other would prove highly desirable. It has been proven possible to coat a film strip with emulsion on both sides and also to subject such a film to the customary laboratory processes without harm to either surface, but as yet no successful method has appeared of coating again over one of these emulsioned surfaces and printing and selectively dyeing this extra coating.

We therefore find that most experimenters who are working out subtractive processes of color cinematography have embraced the double emulsion and are using cameras with which they secure two color sensation negatives. This brings us back to a consideration of suitable taking filters for such a process. Briefly stated the best selection will be a pair which divide the spectrum in two parts with no appreciable gap between their transmission bands. The most usual selection seems to be orange red and bluish-green filters which, being complementary to each other, would appeal to fill the bill quite competently.

To return to our double coated positive film—it will now be realized that we must print on each side of this double coated stock from the two color sensation negatives (each on a separate film strip) which we have produced in the camera. We will describe in forthcoming installments the methods and devices used by various workers to accomplish this double printing operation, but we have now to face the fact that when our positive, printed upon both sides, has been developed we have black images of reduced silver (as in an ordinary positive print) upon both sides of our film strip. The removal of these developed images and the substitution of transparent images complementary in color to the filters through which the respective sensation records were photographed must next claim our serious consideration.

Coloring the Images

This coloring of the images in such a way as to leave the highlights clear may be done in numerous ways, of which the most feasible would appear to be toning or else bleaching away the silver image and replacing it with a colored deposit of basic dye. The complications of the coloring operation become apparent when it is considered that the dyeing or chemical treatment applied to one side of the film is not suitable for the different sensation images on the other side. Various devices have been evolved to overcome this difficulty, which has not proven a serious drawback to the leading workers on subtractive color cinematography.

We have now to contrast the merits of toning (changing the color of the developed images by chemical means) and basic dyeing as applied to the coloring of the images on the two sides of the film strip. A toned image always retains a certain opacity which tends to degrade the resultant colors, but, at the present stage of the game, it is almost imperative that workers on such processes as we are now considering resort to this method, as basic dyes are (due to the war) scarce and prohibitive in price. As is true in all other lines of endeavor the results of different workers vary greatly, and while some can never produce toned images of tolerable transparency, the results secured by one or two skilled workers are so clear as to be almost conceded a satisfactory substitute for basic dyeing.

Basic Dyeing

The subject of basic dyeing is one of great interest and its application to subtractive color cinematography is an important one, but it is regrettable to state that nothing much has been written upon this subject. Briefly outlined the process of converting our more or less opaque silver images into transparent images of colored dye is carried out as follows: The silver image is first bleached and converted into an iodide by a bath composed of iodine in potassium iodide. It is then dyed up in a dye bath of the requisite color compounded with a basic dye. The concentration of the dye bath is not so important, since if the bath be weak the immersion may be prolonged. Dyeing completed the highlights may be cleared by immersion in a weak bath of acetic acid. The silver iodide formed in the bleaching operation should be fixed out by immersion in a hypo bath to which some tannin has been added—the latter being necessary, as it acts as a mordant and fixes (or renders permanent) the basic dye with which the image has been stained. In order to place the credit for this method of basic dyeing where it rightfully belongs we will state that the procedure above outlined is that practised by Dr. Traube, the German investigator, in his "Diachrome" process, which appeared in 1907.

Appreciating the importance of a reliable method of basic dyeing, both as applied to color and cinematography and to stereoscopic cinematography, by the Anaglyphic method, we have worked out formulæ by which cine film can be successfully treated in this way. While it is not within the scope of this article to publish working details and formulæ, those which we have prepared are at the disposal of any readers whose work or experiments may require same.

TWO NEW SCHIRMER PUBLICATIONS THAT ARE INDISPENSABLE TO PICTURE MUSIC

G. SCHIRMER, music publisher, New York City, publishes this month a suite of four numbers by H. Frommel, which are valuable to orchestra leaders accumulating a suitable repertoire for picture plays.

The new edition is a suite of four numbers arranged by Otto Langey and divided into two orchestrations of two numbers each. The first known as Galaxy No. 82 consists of a light three-quarter movement, very good for light ensemble, followed by more serious action, to which "No. 2, A Romance" in a slow, common time tempo will synchronize. This number makes possible the obtaining and maintaining of two distinctly different picture temperaments with one sheet of music. Both numbers are what we would term "classy" music and well arranged.

The second, known as Galaxy No. 83, is somewhat similar, inasmuch as it makes possible the maintaining of a frivolous and serious temperament from the same sheet of music.

No. 1 is a 2-4 allegretto movement of an odd and not ordinary character. While it is a light number it will nevertheless maintain to a certain extent a serious suggestion. No. 2 of this suite is a classy romantic number and can be appropriately used for romantic scenes of more or less action. The number is in a medium slow, common time tempo.

My personal experience has taught me that numbers arranged and set together in this manner are valuable in picture playing. Publishers who will cater in this manner should be encouraged. We, therefore, hope that G. Schirmer will keep up the good work.

THE members of the Chamber of Commerce of Berkeley, Cal., recently made a tour of inspection through the large factory of the American Photo-Player Company in that city. The party was conducted through the plant by B. R. Van Valkenburg, who showed the various steps in the manufacture of player instruments for use in moving picture houses.

The payroll of this concern is now about $2,200 a week and a large addition is to be made to the plant at an early date, as double shifts are now necessary to care for the business. Mr. Van Valkenburg stated that during the past month twelve contracts for the building of pipe organs had been secured, in addition to much other work.

SYMPHONY PLAYER INSTRUMENTS POPULAR IN THE SOUTH

THE factory of the Symphony Player Company, Covington, Ky., has placed five of its instruments with the Signal Amusement Company, one of the largest concerns operating motion picture theatres in the south. The instruments are all in use in houses of Chattanooga, Tenn. In the Alcazar a $10,000 electric organ was installed, this being the largest instrument of the five placed in that city.

In Birmingham, Ala., in the Champion theatre operated by the Hury Amusement Company an $8,000 organ was placed.

An Unbroken Chain of Merit

NO company has ever been able to go before its customers with such assurances of business-building productions, for so long in advance, as is represented by the schedule of features for the first six months of 1917, to be released by Greater Vitagraph, which are listed on these two pages. Analyze the stars, the authors and the seat-selling qualities of the plays, and prove this statement for yourself.

Jan. 1st—"THE SOUL MASTER," by James Oliver Curwood, featuring EARLE WILLIAMS. A drama of a man's soul, reborn in the afterglow of shattered faith.

Jan. 8th—"THE MAN OF MYSTERY," by A. C. Gunter, featuring the Most Famous Actor of the Modern Stage, E. H. SOTHERN. Supported by the Popular Stage Favorite, Charlotte Ives. A drama of a man who returned from the Valley of the Shadow, to live again among those who thought him dead.

Jan. 15th—"INDISCRETION," by William Addison Lathrop, featuring LILLIAN WALKER. Dedicated to youth that it may glimpse the tragedy that lies beyond the walls of convention.

Jan. 22nd—"HER RIGHT TO LIVE," by Paul West, featuring PEGGY HYLAND and ANTONIO MORENO. The heart story of a little child waif, whom Fate made mother bird to the fledglings in the family nest.

Jan. 29th—"BLIND JUSTICE," written, produced by, and featuring BENJAMIN CHRISTIE, Author, Director and Star of "Sealed Orders." Proclaimed by every newspaper and photoplay critic, the most perfect film offering of the season. A symphony of sentiment and technique.

Feb. 5th—"MONEY MAGIC," From the Widely Read Novel of the Same Title by Hamlin Garland. Featuring EDITH STOREY, ANTONIO MORENO and WILLIAM DUNCAN. A story of a woman who sacrificed her love on the altar of duty, and of a man who gave his life in payment for her faithfulness.

Feb. 12th—"THE GLORY OF YOLANDA," by Maibelle Heikes Justice, featuring America's daintiest actress, ANITA STEWART. A drama of the fidelity of a Russian dancing girl who chose Siberia and the man she loved, to luxury and pretense.

Feb. 19th—"ARSENE LUPIN," from the Famous Detective Drama of the Same Title, by Paul Potter, featuring EARLE WILLIAMS. The regeneration of the master criminal who was made to see the light of day by a woman of his own class.

Feb. 26th—"THE GRAND DUKE," by Maibelle Heikes Justice, featuring PEGGY HYLAND, MARC MacDERMOTT and BOBBY CONNELLY. The thrilling experiences of a resourceful young woman, in a contest with the unscrupulous diplomatic agents of a foreign principality.

March 5th—"KITTY MACKAY," from Last Season's Biggest Broadway Hit of the Same Title, by Catherine Chisholm Cushing, featuring LILLIAN WALKER. A "glad" play, in which an adorable girl faces a heart-saddening denial, but in the end gains her life's desire through the sheer force of an everlasting faith.

March 12th—"ALADDIN FROM BROADWAY," from the Book and Play of the Same Title, by Frederick Ishman, featuring EDITH STOREY and ANTONIO MORENO. The adventures of a "good fellow" who braves the perils of a forbidden city, and wins love and fortune.

March 19th—"HAPPINESS," by Marguerite Bertsch, Author of "The Law Decides," featuring ANITA STEWART. A beautiful conception, written especially for America's daintiest actress, and providing for her a setting of such charm as that which earned for her the title of "The Wood Violet."

March 26th—"WHO SHALL CAST THE FIRST STONE?" by Milton Nobles, featuring ALICE JOYCE and HARRY MOREY. A mistaken love of a noble woman for a man who leaves her heart an empty shell.

April 2nd—"THE HAWK," from the Famous Play of the Same Title, in Which William Faversham achieved such great success. Featuring EARLE WILLIAMS. The heart tragedy of a man who buried his better self, and who was redeemed through the love of a woman.

April 9th—"SALLY IN A HURRY," by A. Van Buren Powell, featuring LILLIAN WALKER. A drama of a lowly girl who rises to great heights through an unselfed love.

April 16th—"THE GREEN GOD," from the Book of the Same Title, by Frederic Arnold Kummer featuring PEGGY HYLAND and MARC MacDERMOTT. An absorbing mystery revolving about the loss of a sacred relic and the murder of the man who stole it.

April 23rd—"THE CAPTAIN OF THE GRAY HORSE TROOP," from the Book of the Same Title, by Hamlin Garland, featuring EDITH STOREY and ANTONIO MORENO. A man's battle for a down-pressed people, and his victory over the champions of greed and persecution.

April 30th—"BABETTE," from the Book of the Same Title, by F. Berkeley Smith, featuring ANITA STEWART. A criminal's rescue from the depths of black despair, through the influence of an innocent girl, who never knew the vengeance she averted.

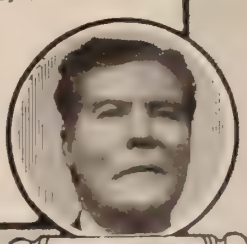
May 7th—"NORTHWARD HO!" by Harry James Smith, featuring ALICE JOYCE and HARRY MOREY. A thrilling fight of a man in the Arctic zone against the rigors of the frozen north from without, and a scourge from within his own heart.

May 14th—"PRINCESS OF PARK ROW," by Paul West, featuring LILLIAN WALKER. A romance of a little princess who flees from a royal love match, only to be captured by an American prince of 'good fellows.'

May 21st—"APARTMENT 29," by Edward J. Montagne, featuring EARLE WILLIAMS. Proving that truth is stranger than fiction, and turning the tables on a man who sought to order life as it should be, not as it is.

May 28th—"THE AGONY COLUMN," from the Book and Saturday Evening Post Serial of the Same Title, by Earl Derr Biggers, featuring PEGGY HYLAND and MARC MacDERMOTT. How the quest for a wife involved a man in a series of astounding mysteries, and incidentally resulted in a happy ending.

June 4th—"THE MAGNIFICENT MEDDLER," by Lawrence McCloskey, featuring EDITH STOREY and ANTONIO MORENO. The struggles of a young man who set honor above love, and who had the courage to unmask the father of the girl of his desires.



June 11th—"THE HUMAN DESIRE," from the Book of the Same Title, by Violet Irwin, featuring ANITA STEWART. A story of a convent girl who gave her all for love, and the price she paid.

June 18th—"THE COUNTESS," by Adrian Gil Spear, featuring ALICE JOYCE AND HARRY MOREY. Picturing the strength of the weak in a crisis that called for the supreme heights of self-denial.

June 25th—"THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY," from the Book of the Same Title, by Cyrus Townsend Brady, featuring PEGGY HYLAND and MARC MacDERMOTT. In which a man surrounded by a network of duplicity, through strength of character untangles his own life and that of the one he holds most dear.

Greatest of all romantic actors, beloved of theatre-goers of every age for the heroic figures, the dashing, fiery swordsmen and lovers his genius has created,—E. H. Sothern in "An Enemy to King" gives the screen its highest art achievement.

The drama itself needs no mendation. It is the gem of Sothern's repertoire—the play closely associated with his fan the one drama, above all others, is and can be only—Sothern.

The production is the best that unlimited resources and twenty y experience of the Vitagraph Comp could make possible. And that gifted actress, Edith Storey, scored a personal triumph in wonderful characterization of heroine.

Mighty War Spectacle

"The Fall of a Nation"

Music by Victor Herbert —

Continues to be one of the biggest money-makers now in the hands of exhibitors.

Here's another bit of evidence:

Buckingham Theatre
Chicago, Ill.

I ran "The Fall of a Nation" in my theatre last week and I made such an enormous success on it that I want to tell you in detail just what I did so that other exhibitors may benefit by it.

In my advertising I announced that this was an unusual production and that it was necessary for me to raise the regular admission price. The people recognized this, as was demonstrated by the enormous crowd that came to the theatre.

FOR THREE HOURS THEY WERE STANDING OUT TO THE CURBSTONE WAITING FOR SEATS.

This is the most successful picture I have played for a long time and I highly recommend it to every other exhibitor. It is a sure winner for box office receipts.—

Notables In Uplift Work Enthusiastic Over "Charity?"

"CHARITY?," the seven-reel feature production, produced under the direction of Frank Powell, was given its first public showing on November 10. The Zeigfeld Theatre on Michigan Avenue, Chicago, was the scene of the screening, which was an invitation affair. The auditorium was literally packed with leaders in social-uplift work, heads of various settlements, and child welfare leagues. Besides these there was a goodly sprinkling of the clergy, reviewers from the trade press and others. When the last scene faded on the screen, the vast audience, roused to enthusiasm over the powerful arraignment of ill-conducted charity institutions, broke into applause which lasted for several minutes.

Bishop Fallows Speaks.

Ere the picture began on the screen, Bishop Samuel Fallows, one of Chicago's foremost church dignataries, addressed the audience. He pointed out the necessity of properly caring for the little ones, bereft of father and mother. He suggested that the picture which was soon to be shown might do more to awaken the public to the needs of properly conducted charity institutions than thousands of appeals by word of mouth alone. Present and interested in the mission of the film were such other notables as Esther Falkenstein of the Esther Falkenstein Settlement; Judge and Mrs. Thomas F. Scully; Miss Sophonisba Breckenridge and Miss Mary McDowell of the University Settlement; Mrs. Herman Wallstedt of the Child's Welfare Association of Philadelphia; Mrs. Corwin Hughitt of the Child's Welfare Department of Cincinnati, and numerous others.

A Plea for Social Justice.

The pictured story, wonderfully enacted and superbly photographed, proved a most powerful plea for social justice. It stars Linda A. Griffith, the famous "Biograph Girl," supported by a company that includes Creighton Hale, Sheldon Lewis, Elizabeth Burbridge, Veta Searl and others. President Freuler of the Mutual Film Corporation confidently expects it will prove as great a drawing card as have "damaged Goods," and "The Miracle of Life." Ask for "Charity?" at your nearest Mutual film exchange.

Thrills Continue.

The latest installment of the Helen Holmes picture, "A Lass of the Lumberlands," is even more sensational than those which have gone before.

Who Is Author of "Diamond Sequel?"

Who is the author of the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky"? Thousands and thousands of people are wondering. The only possible way in which they can find the answer to the question is by seeing the films. Exhibitors showing the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky" can profit by this overpowering curiosity on the part of the public. Bookings can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual film exchanges."

Mary Miles Minter Appears This Week In "Dream or Two Ago"

"A DREAM OR TWO AGO" is released this week. It is the fourth of the Mary Miles Minter Series of Mutual Star Productions. It is the third to be produced under the direction of James Kirkwood. It is a five-act story contrasting life in the underworld with that in the homes of luxury and wealth. Mary Miles Minter is charming, whether as a beggar girl in rags and tatters, or as a debutante in a millionaire's palace. The supporting company is well balanced and made up of players of note. The stage settings are exceptional. The photography is crystal clear. The story is absorbingly interesting.

Directed by James Kirkwood.

James Kirkwood, who formerly directed the pictures in which Mary Pickford appeared, is demonstrating with each new Minter release that he is a real artist. Dainty Mary Miles Minter is proving as adept under his instruction, as did his former star. In fact, she is rising to dramatic heights little short of marvelous. Each new release of the series is winning her thousands of new admirers. Theatres showing the Mary Miles Minter productions are finding them greater and greater attractions as new units in the series are issued. Bookings on the Mary Miles Minter Series can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual film exchanges.

Margarita Fischer Has Thrilling Adventures in "Miss Jackie of the Navy."

The second of the Margarita Fischer Series is now ready. "Miss Jackie of the Navy" is its title. It is released the week of November 27. It was made by the Pollard Picture Plays Company. It tells a thrilling story of a society girl's adventures aboard a battleship. Before she gets safely back to her palatial mansion she has some queer experiences in the Tropics. Miss Fischer is at her very best in this unusual five-act photodrama.

Life Aboard a Battleship.

Life aboard one of Uncle Sam's largest battleships is depicted in detail. In fact, when Miss Jackie, the society-girl heroine of the story, ventures aboard the warship, disguised as a little Jack tar, she finds life on the bounding wave to be composed of an infinite number of details of which she had never dreamed. Miss Jackie finds herself put to work as a common sailor by a burly boatswain. Unaware that she is a girl, he orders her to perform more than one embarrassing task. But she gamely carries on the masquerade—for she had vowed to win the attention of no less a personage than Captain Crowne himself.

Scenes in the Tropics.

Not all of the scenes are taken aboard ship by any means. The latter part of the story finds the cruiser anchored off an island in the Tropics, and a landing party ashore mixed up in some thrilling adventures. Miss Jackie is a member of the shore party and finally proves herself a heroine by rescuing them all from death at the hands of the natives. Eventually her disguise is penetrated and Captain Crowne finds her such a bewitching little creature that he compels her to enlist for life as his mate. Margarita Fischer is simply stunning as Miss Jackie. Bookings on the Fischer Series can be made at the nearest Mutual film exchange.

INITIAL SHOWING AT ZIEGFELD THEATRE STARTLES CHICAGO PRESS AND PUBLIC!

ACTING STRIKINGLY ADEPT

TRULY the acting of Linda Griffith, who wrote the scenario and plays the woman's lead, is strikingly adept. She has a finesse in the portrayal of emotion which few on the screen possess. Assistance comes to her in generous quantities from Creighton Hale and Veta Searl, the latter Producer Powell's recent "find."

Preceding the showing Bishop Samuel Fallows gave a short address commending the Mutual release to his auditors, prominent among whom were the Misses Sophonisba Breckenridge, Kate Adams, Mary E. McDowell Mary Barteime and Mesdames John D Shoop, Gertrude Howe Britton, Grace Wilbur Trout and Laura Dainy Pelham.

Bob McKnight In The Chicago Examiner

"Truly the acting of Linda Griffith who wrote the scenario and plays the woman's lead, is strikingly adept."

"One of the most powerful exposes of improper uses of charity funds which has ever been staged."

The talented wife of America's most famous producer is a great student of sociological conditions. "Charity?" owes its birth to the fact that Mrs. Griffith has been particularly interested in asylums for orphan children since her childhood.

BY MAE TINEE.

THE devil asked "Is this art?" Linda Griffith asks "Is this charity?" And she forthwith presents us with seven reels of good acting.

A fairly large audience including well known charity and reform workers attended the private showing at the Ziegfeld theater Bishop Fallows spoke feelingly of our children and what we should do for them before the showing of the picture.

Perhaps there is much to be deplored about associated charity. In fact I know there is. But promiscuous charity has never proved itself especially beneficial and until we have worked out some national plan for better caring for our orphans, the institutions must exist

Here's what they say of the first chapter:

"Indications point to a really original and entertaining continued photoplay. The unusualness of the film's locale, the intenseness of the plot, and the popularity and daring of Helen Holmes, certainly ought to make this serial a sure winner."—William C. Esty in Nov. 4th issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

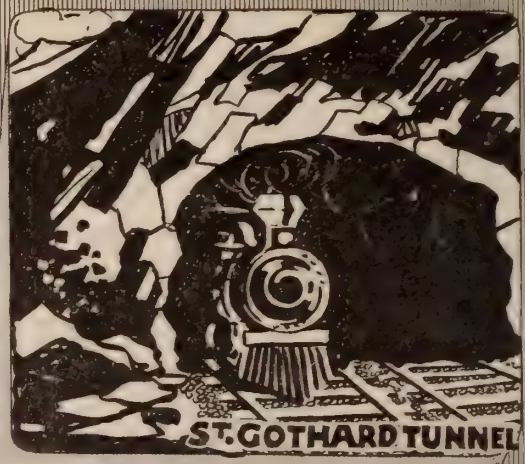
"The opening chapter gives the story an excellent start. The big timber country of the Northwest is the scene of action, an authentic picture of the vast lumber industry being shown. The human interest of the drama is compelling and consistent with its surroundings."—Edward Weitzel in Nov. 4th issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

"The initial chapter of the new serial is excellent. It has a great amount of action, fine settings in the Western lumberlands, and a story which promises to develop into one of the best of its kind so far shown on the screen."—Willard C. Benson in Nov. 4th issue of EXHIBITORS HERALD.

Here's what they say of the later ones:

"The second and third chapters bring in all the thrills foreshadowed by the first with more thrown in for good measure. The big moments are not only gripping, but are the logical developments of a genuiue story. Helen Holmes is peppier than ever."—William C. Esty in Nov. 11 issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"The shipwreck scenes are impressive, an actual shipwreck having been used. Miss Holmes' likable personality and knowledge of the art of acting serve her in good stead. Leo Maloney has a congenial role and a number of the scenes in these later chapters are of great pictorial beauty.—Edward Weitzel in Nov. 4th issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD.



"The second chapter of this dramatic serial is powerful in story and its dramatic situations are well done. In this production every thrill—and there are plenty of them—is strictly in the main plot. Not alone should the story itself prove a worthy attraction in any theatre, but the scenic beauty of the Western forests is really an educational feature." Willard C. Benson in Nov. 11th issue of EXHIBITORS HERALD

In one single chapter of this amazing new Helen Holmes serial—"A Lass of the Lumberlands"—the following thrills can be seen: A Boiler Explosion—Election Day in a Lumbercamp—The Riot at the Polling Places—Two Rival Gangs in a Pistol Fight—A Perilous Hand-over-hand Climb Along Telegraph Wires—The Burning of the City Hall—The Arrival of the Cavalry. Standing room is at a premium in the theatres running this chapter-play. Boom business at YOUR theatre. Book this spectacular chapter-play TODAY. Fifteen chapters—a new two-reel chapter each week.

IF you like action you will delight in the new serial, "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Gray Seal." If you want to see a picture that will make your heart beat faster and find you sitting upright in your seat waiting for the climax, you will not miss a single solitary reel of Jimmie's adventures.

No one will complain that these episodes drag or pall. There isn't time to be bored. Slam, bang, you scarcely emerge from one of Jimmie's adventures before you are taken right along with the current and carried bodily into another, just as thrilling.

All of the fans who have enjoyed E. K. Lincoln in the past will be happy to know that the portrayal of this temperamental youth has been intrusted to Mr. Lincoln's capable hands. Jimmie is a multimillio... aire and social favorite. Far more ... portant than Jimmie's place in the s... world is his systematic and cont... thievery. THE first three episodes of another new serial made by the Monmouth Film Co. have all the ear-marks of commercial success. The story of the film, based on "The Adventures of Jimmy Dale," by Frank L. Packard, appearing in the People's Magazine, has that thrilling, impossible quality, that the public like. It will be released in sixteen two-part episodes, and features four well-known and popular players, namely, E. K. Lincoln, Edna Hunter, Paul Penzer, and Doris Mitchell. Its first episode is entitled "The Grey Seal," and undertakes to present the characters of the story first in importance, clearly outlining that of Jimmy Dale, who is the son of a millionaire, and who, under some mysterious, unknown influence, follows the profession of breaking safes, leaving behind him an identification in the shape of a diamond-shaped gray seal. The proceeds of his escapades are always donated anonymously ... some charitable purpose. A parallel ...end of the story brings to light the plot ...e Henry La Salle who with a party of ...uized criminals plans to murder his ...e, Marie La Salle, in order to obtain ...session of her fortune.

WHAT NEW YORK'S GREATEST CRITIC SAYS ABOUT THE SEX LURE

FROM THE NEW YORK JOURNAL NOV. 1, 1916

STAGING OF "SEX LURE" WORK OF GENIUS

By "ZIT."

Yesterday there was a private showing of a six-reel feature entitled "The Sex Lure," produced by Ivan Abramson, the genius in the directing of motion pictures. There may be other directors who produce one hundred to five hundred thousand dollar productions, but when it comes to putting an artistic finesse into a picture that costs a small amount to manufacture and make something that costs six thousand look like fifty thousand, that is the time ability tells.

Most any one can do a great deal with a great deal. But how great can a director make a thing with a small amount of money?

I have seen many, many pictures, but I don't pretend to be a critic. In fact, far be it from me to think that I was ever considered one, but I do want to go on record as saying that "The Sex Lure" is a most beautifully told story, and the most interesting one I have witnessed in many moons. For every one in the production is an artist and an actor, and Ivan Abramson has dug deep into the soul of each one of them and brought out the necessary talents to depict each part the way the author intended.

Every point in the motion picture industry has been covered by this wizard, Abramson, in this picture. To tell the story would only spoil it for those who are going to see it on the release date, which is next week.

It is home stuff—true stuff—nothing exaggerated. There is thrill after thrill. You have everything—love, murder, kidnapping, deceit, wrecking of a home, factory life, poverty and riches. It's a picture you can't afford to miss. It's a picture you have got to see. It's a picture that will hold you every minute.

If you went to see the picture at 4, and you had to catch the 4:45 train, you would miss the train to see the finish. I missed my dinner, and I want to go on record as saying that if that's a sample of Ivan Abramson's work we are going to hear a whole lot more of Ivan Abramson, and it won't be long.

THIS BOY HAD NEVER SEEN A WOMAN. HE KNEW NOTHING OF SEX, OR OF THE REAL WORLD. ALL OF THE LIFE HE COULD REMEMBER WAS SPENT ON A SECLUDED ESTATE. HITCH YOUR WAGON TO A STAR?

It may be good policy to 'hitch your wagon to a star', but you may find that in so doing you will soon have no wagon left!

It is far better to attach your theatre to a program of strong, entertaining features, where the tremendous salaries of the "stars" are eliminated, and which is sold to you minus the big profit of the central exchange.

Art Dramas is that program. It will satisfy your patrons because Art Dramas pictures are good. It will satisfy you because it will make money for you.

Art Dramas pictures are all that the name implies. They are artistic in conception, and dramatically perfect in execution.

GERTRUDE McCOY

GERTRUDE McCOY in "THE LASH OF DESTINY", supported by an excellent cast, including Bruce McRae, Helen Green, Arthur Housman and Mabel Scott.

An unusual story, embodying a number of strong situations that give Miss McCoy splendid opportunity to display her versatility. A new treatment of the theme of the country girl who comes to the city, plays the game, wins, loses, and finally wins again. Selected to be the First Art Drama.

Directed by George Terwilliger. Produced by the Van Dyke Film Production Co.

Released December 14.

JEAN SOTHERN in "WHOSO TAKETH A WIFE—"

A remarkable answer to Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me", picturized from the novel of the same name; written by J. Wesley Putnam. A big, virile story of the problem that confronts a girl who marries a man she does not care for, and who later meets the man she loves.

A special photoplay edition of the book now being prepared, to be illustrated with still pictures from the Art Dramas production. To be advertised everywhere by the local booksellers in conjunction with the showing of the picture.

Directed by Frank Crane. Produced by the U. S. Amusement Corporation.

JEAN SOTHERN

DOROTHY BERNARD in "THE RAINBOW", with Robert Conness and Jack Sherrill.

JACK SHERRILL

DOROTHY BERNARD

"The Rainbow" was one of the big hits of the legitimate stage, having had a run of over a year at the Liberty Theatre, New York City, with Ruth Chatterton and Henry Miller in the leading roles. An intensely powerful story, it tells of the separation of a father from his daughter because of his estrangement from his wife, and how he sees his child for the first time in fifteen years, and then for only one day, and the curious chain of circumstances that finally re-unites the family.

Play by A. E. Thomas. Directed by Ralph Dean. Produced by the William L. Sherrill Feature Corp. Released December 28.

A Wall Street Man Speaks Out

OUR "Keep the Ball Rolling" articles are bringing in some remarkable contributions. We do not know the authors; nor do we care about their identity. They probably come from men who have thus far chosen not to talk for publication.

RIGHT or wrong, in whole or in part, these statements are at least straight-from-the-shoulder. They will start discussion. They will clear the air; they may start a right trend of thought and secure some much needed reform.

To this end—the ultimate good of this big industry, we publish them word for word, without comment or responsibility.

This time a capitalist talks:

New York City, November 16.

William A. Johnston, Esq.,
Editor MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
729 7th Avenue, New York City.

Dear Sir: My attention has been specially called to the "Keep the Ball Rolling" articles in your last two issues of NEWS.

MY motives for writing this letter are indirect ones so far as I am personally concerned, but I believe that what I have to say will be of material benefit to the exhibitors, even if not relished by others in the film industry. The truth invariably hurts. I have had special investigators at work in every branch of the picture business for some time past—I am not going to tell the reason for this except to say that I belong to the constructive class of financiers, and whatever I go into is for permanent investment, and not merely passing speculation.

THE picture industry cannot be classed, as now conducted, as the fifth industry of America.

It is a speculative bubble, grossly mismanaged and being tossed about like a rudderless ship at sea. Its greatest failing is lack of what downtown we term "big calibre men."

My investigators have turned in to me exhaustive reports and detailed statements covering the industry thoroughly—not only in America but in foreign countries too. I am going to submit in a brief manner some of the material points.

THE exhibiting end of the business is in good shape for proper development. The managers as a rule are men who know their business and with proper co-operation and direction from the manufacturing and releasing end, will deliver everything that can be expected from the theatre end.

That the majority of them are making no money now is a fact I have established to my own satisfaction, but the causes for this are all remediable.

THE EXHIBITING BUSINESS SHOULD BE LEFT IN THE HANDS OF INDIVIDUAL MEN AND CAPITALISTS WHO ENTER THAT FIELD FOR PURPOSES OF CONTROL, WILL MAKE A GREAT MISTAKE. THIS IS INTENDED NOT ONLY AS A WARNING TO FINANCIAL MEN, BUT AS AN ENCOURAGEMENT TO EXHIBITORS TO HAVE FAITH IN THE FUTURE. THE EXHIBITING BUSINESS IS GOING TO REMAIN IN THEIR HANDS.

YOUR published articles have covered many details of needed reforms on the theatre end—some of importance and others not. The big reform is not required there, it is at the big manufacturing and exchange ends.

THE picture business has developed no big men. With all the talk of the millions made and millions invested, no dominant controlling man of the Ford, Durant, Patterson, Harriman, DuPont, Eastman or Schwab type has developed from it. Our investigations have shown but one chain of exchanges that was considered as being properly and efficiently conducted and would state that this was organized by interests outside of the film business proper. This chain made money and big money in a consistent manner for a long time—something which not one of the others has succeeded in doing for any length of time.

A VERY illuminating article on the distributing business was published in the Cincinnati "Times-Star" under date of February 24, 1916, a copy of which I have on my desk. The statements contained therein were made by a big film man who is in a position to know what he is talking about. He is now President of one large distributing organization and owner of another, yet he has done nothing towards reorganization.

One of the largest manufacturing concerns in placing a valuation on their business based the valuation on future possibilities and not on ascertainable past results.

Cold facts and figures are not used in the business at all.

I am quite aware of the difference between effecting working agreements and consolidations of co-related companies to similar consolidations of highly competitive ones, and the film men are certainly in this latter class. The manufacturer should be and must be in close touch with the exhibitor; he must know what kind of pictures the public want an make them accordingly. The distributing end must be part and parcel of the manufacturing end; it is quite immaterial which owns the other, but there must be one controlling head and not two, and this head must be sort of a father to the exhibitor.

Sex and vice films should be banned entirely. Sensational crime films should be excluded entirely also. With these eliminations the censor question would be a dead issue.

MY reports embrace the comparative merits and salaries of the directors of America, with those of Europe, especially Italy. The difference between them is simply astounding. Likewise the comparison in actual figures as to salaries drawn by actors and directors when they work in the theatrical business with what they are paid in the film business in this country—now referring to present day estimates.

AUTHORS of note are practically unknown in pictures. Investigation and careful analysis has shown where the trouble lies; it is easily adjustable when ready for handling by the proper people.

VOL. XIV December 2, 1916 No. 22

The foreigner market has not been approached at all. Where American films have been sold outside of the United States the manufacturers have not been responsible—it was almost forced on them, Great Britain being excepted in this statement.

I HAVE been compelled to speak in generalities only, as to do otherwise would be to endanger certain tentative plans now under final consideration and adjustment. If I might be permitted to send an anonymous message to the exhibitors through your paper, I would say, have faith in the future of the business, you will come into your own before very long.

The letters already published clearly indicate that some exhibitors at least realize where the trouble is, and they indicate to some extent, what the remedies should be.

What astonished financial men is the manner in which film people have thrown away their advantages and permitted others to reap benefits which should have accrued to them in the way of dividends. For instance, a high grade theatre playing legitimate attractions, Saturday matinee only and six nights a week on an average of 32 to 35 weeks a year and closed through the Summer, shows it is open about one third of the available showing time of the year, said available showing time of matinees daily and showing Sunday night and open 52 weeks a year being possible and actually done in the picture business. Instead of getting the theatre at the same rental as the legitimate people do, they plunge in and pay twice as much, and throw all the financial advantage and increased earnings to the landlord.

Ordinary sized orchestras do not seem to be permissible for picture houses of the larger capacity type—they put in a large number of musicians entirely incommensurate with their prices of admission. Men who contemplate building more theatres of this class—now referring to the Strand and Rialto variety—should weigh up a few points very carefully before it is too late.

Long masterpiece films of the future are not going to be shown in those theatres, but in higher priced houses conducted along the lines of legitimate theatres giving two showings a day, matinee and night with all seats reserved, BUT NOT AT A TWO DOLLAR SCALE OF PRICES.

Statistics show that the aforesaid price has wrecked the regulation theatres, so why court disaster?

The films mentioned are going to put the large picture houses on their mettle and it is safe to say that 25 cents will be their maximum admission price, and they must cut their cloth accordingly. Rental and size of orchestra are the two main items.

MANY are bound to disagree with what has been stated herein. It is not my intention to enter into any argument or controversy. Suffice it to say, that I am acquainted with real facts and conditions and know whereof I speak. It is to be hoped that a whole lot of the incompetents who have made big money in the business have saved some of it for a rainy day, for they will soon have use for it, and, like all incompetents, they have, or rather soon will have, managed to eliminate themselves.

This writer's words are worth weighing.

An industry as huge as this requires big capital and big men to direct that capital. Both are bound to come We disagree with the writer that these men must come altogether from without. There are a few men of the right calibre within the industry.

This industry demands regulation. It must approximate the business regulation of its sister industries—railroad, oil and steel. And this regulation is bound to come. But it will be delayed until the industry meets capital upon a common ground—a ground of permanent solid investment, of legitimate, moderate profits, of economic management.

What's the Matter?

RECENTLY a remarkable war picture was offered the buyers of state rights through these columns. The response was large, but dreary and disheartening Some buyers said the market had been killed by fake war pictures; others said that heavy pictures were a drug on the market.

SO the picture was put on at the Strand theatre, New York City. For two weeks it did a record business there. At the Astor theatre, with 1500 seats, people were turned away. Now three high class legitimate theatres in New York City, at high prices, are required—they were promptly offered by their managers—to handle a motion picture.

WHAT is the matter Mr. State Rights Buyer? Is your judgment faulty; or is the method of selling state rights pictures wrong; or what is the matter?

What an Amateur Exhibitor Found Out

ONE of the best known producers in the East recently tried an interesting experiment. He purchased a theatre. Before he bought it he was informed with emphasis by the exchange men that a 40 per cent. profit was not only easy, but positive. It happened that there was a competitor across the street. In fact there were several competitors in that neighborhood.

WITH rosy dreams of a comfortable little bank account, he invited the exchange men to do their worst. They did. Their approach can be compared with that of the sheepherder who sharpens his shears and glances expectantly at the bleating flock. The exhibitor experimenter was forced to buy all the live features produced; so that his competitor across the street would not profit. Many of these features he was unable to exhibit. The exchange men continued to threaten. Of course they used the same tactics on the competitor across the street.

AT the end of the year this exhibitor balanced his books. Instead of forty per cent., his profits were below five.

And the saddest part about this story is that the producer, who played at the exhibiting game for years found that the same conditions exist in all parts of the country.

Benjamin B. Hampton is General Film Head

Well-Known Man of Affairs Is Impressed with the Volume of Business Accredited to the Company and Will Put Into Operation Plans for Solving Problems of Distribution—His Ability as an Organizer and Systemizer Recognized

NEWS of unusual interest and importance reached the film world Tuesday afternoon, November 14, when Benjamin B. Hampton, of the Greater Vitagraph, gave out the statement that he had accepted the position of president of the General Film Company. This unexpected act of Mr. Hampton's took place at a meeting of the board of directors, when George Kleine tendered his resignation as the company's president.

Mr. Hampton's statement, sent to the various newspapers and trade papers, follows in part:

"At the meeting of the board of directors of the General Film Company, Inc., on Monday George Kleine requested that his resignation as president be acted upon. Mr. Kleine's many important interests demand the time and thought he has been generously devoting to General Film matters, and for some weeks he has been urging his General Film Associates to release him from the presidency. Monday the directors reluctantly acceeded to his wishes.

"Since the stockholders honored me by electing me a member of the board of directors several weeks ago, I have taken part in various conferences looking to new plans in the affairs of the company. When it became necessary Monday to choose some one to fill Mr. Kleine's place until the annual election in January, and the directors offered me the position ad interim, I welcomed the opportunity to assist in working out the new plans. I am confident that the officers, directors and stockholders will work together so effectively that when a new administration is chosen in January it will find the old General prepared for the biggest year in its history.

"Mr. Kleine has consented to serve on the executive committee, so that during my tenure of office I will have the constant and active counsel of himself and Mr. Marion of the Kalem Company."

The election of Mr. Hampton to the presidency of the General Film Company has been viewed with no small amount of interest by other distributing companies.

Mr. Hampton's prominence in the business world testifies sufficiently to his ability as an organizer and systematizer. He declined to make a definite announcement concerning the consolidation of the General Film Company and the Greater Vitagraph, which, according to men in film circles, is the logical outcome of his election on account of his connection with the latter. Such an announcement, film men believe, would not be made before the regular reelection of General Film officers next January. Mr. Hampton's firm belief in concentration and unity, combined with his connection with the Greater Vitagraph, make this consolidation seem possible.

When interviewed by a representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, Mr. Hampton, while declining to make a detailed statement concerning the plans for regenerating the General Film Company, manifested a high degree of enthusiasm regarding the future of that organization.

Impressed with Large Business of General

"Before I began investigating conditions here," he said, "I had no idea of the amount of business which the General Film Company conducts. I had grown to believe the rumors to the effect that the company was losing customers. Instead, I find that the volume of business is increasing steadily and rapidly. Of course, I am not now in a position to predict definitely the big things that General Film will set itself to accomplish. Just now I am trying to absorb some of the more important details of this giant organization. By next January we will have, I hope, real achievements to point to."

Frank Marion, president of the Kalem Company, and, in his capacity as a member of the executive committee and the board of directors of the General Film Company, one of Mr. Hampton's closest advisers spoke enthusiastically of Mr. Hampton's election.

"Mr. Hampton was elected unanimously," said Mr. Marion, "and I can think of no man in the moving picture industry who can accomplish more for the General Film Company. We all know that the weakest part of the industry is distribution. All of the profits that producers are making is being swallowed by the haphazard system of distribution. Motion picture stock is a joke on Wall Street. The public looks upon us as a species of wild men. And can you blame them? We are the fifth largest industry in the United States, and we haven't learned yet how to sell our product. We need consolidation and concentration. I believe that Mr. Hampton is the man to accomplish it.

"Film distribution as it exists now is warfare. In Syracuse, N. Y., a city of sixty or seventy thousand, there are fifteen exchanges. Fifteen solicitors from these exchanges have succeeded in frightening the exhibitors in that territory so that they don't dare to call their souls their own.

"These fifteen exchanges should be reduced to no more than three or four."

"What are the possibilities of one great amalgamated distributing company to take the place of them all?" Mr. Marion was asked.

"I would have suggested that," he replied, "but others have suggested the same thing, and been laughed at. Maybe it is possible. Perhaps Mr. Hodkinson or Mr. Hampton may accomplish it. For the time being, or for the near and distant future, I would be satisfied if all of the distributing companies stopped cut-throat methods, got together and formed three or four large units and co-operated. Do you realize how much money the industry would save in one year if that were possible? I have figured it out for myself. The industry would save from $17,000,000 to $18,000,000 a year.

"I have made several quiet trips of investigation in various parts of this country to find out what exhibitors think of the situation, and to examine the distributing system through their eyes. I found that more and more of them are anxious for a return of the old solid program method of distribution.

"Another interesting thing I found was that, contrary to the widely circulated opinion, the moving picture is not waning. Out in Montana recently I witnessed the illuminating scene of ranchers driving eighty and ninety miles into town in their Fords through thick 'dobe mud to see their favorites perform on the screen. The Fords were stripped of everything but engine and chassis, and it was necessary to smear heavy oil on the engines to prevent the mud from clogging them up. The ranchers left their homes at three in the afternoon and got back barely in time for milking. Such enthusiasm as that should convince any man that the movies are still climbing the up-grade."

ONE REELER A WEEK FROM "V"

Beginning December 22, the Vitagraph Company of America will release through the General Film exchanges a one-reel picture every week. There are ten of these one-reel productions to be released under the general title of "The Dangers of Doris," with Mary Anderson as the star. Jack Weatherbee plays the male lead.

This series will deal with the amusing adventures of a country girl of enterprising disposition who is suddenly thrown into a city environment. The series provides a vehicle adapted to the sprightly temperament of "Sunshine Mary."

The titles of the ten releases in "The Dangers of Doris" series are as follows: "A Bit of Bent Wire," by A. Van Buren Powell; "The Luck Charm," by Graham Baker; "One Good Turn," by Edward Montagne; "The Twin Fedoras," by Garfield Thompson; "The Suitor from Siam," by A. Van Buren Powell; "The Burlesque Blackmailers," by Stanley Olmsted; "The Gang," by William Courtney; "Up and Down," by Garfield Thompson; "The Old Fourth Ward," by Tom Bret; "The Road to Eternity," by A. Van Buren Powell.

PATHE NEWS FILM SCOOPS ON ELECTION

In Pathe News No. 90, issued the day after election, were published scenes of President Wilson and Mr. Hughes casting their ballots, followed by a greeting to President Wilson as the sure winner of the election. Various intimate scenes of Mr. Wilson were also shown. The News was the only motion picture newspaper to show such scenes thus early.

In No. 91 the Pathe News scored another scoop by showing scenes of the Count von Bernstoff, German Ambassador to the United States, visiting the submarine Deutschland in New London, Conn.

Lee Ochs' Trial Is a Thrilling Affair

Second Meeting of Investigation Committee to Determine Whether or Not He Used His Office as President of the National Association to Further His Personal Ends Is Replete with Melodramatic Situations—Ochs Admits to Watered Stock in New Trade Publication—Calls Opposing Lawyer a Liar

WHITE hot discussions filled the office of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League last Saturday when Lee Ochs undertook to remove from his reputation the shadows that have been cast upon it by the two New York exhibitors, Fleischman and Goldreyer.

The most dramatic moment of the afnoon occurred when Keppler, counsel for Fleischman and Goldreyer, was cross examining Ochs regarding his visits to Philadelphia during Selznick's negotiations with Mastebaum.

"Is it not true," demanded Keppler, "that you went to Philadelphia in your capacity of national president to see Mastebaum about relieving the condition of exhibitors?"

"Yes, sir," replied Ochs.

"And is it not true that you went to Philadelphia some time later with Mr. Selznick and Miss Young to arrange for the Selznick pictures?"

"No, sir."

Keppler shook his finger at him, and shouted: "Mr. Ochs, I say that as a result of your efforts, Selznick and Mastebaum now control the same condition which existed before!"

Mr. Ochs Gets Wrathy

"You're a liar!" said Mr. Ochs.

"You're a gentleman," murmured Mr. Keppler, a remark that was almost drowned in the applause that greeted Mr. Ochs' reply.

Mr. Ochs voiced his frank opinion of Mr. Keppler on another occasion, when Keppler was endeavoring to convince the committee that Ochs had used his position as national president to further his own personal ends.

Ochs was asked if he did not consider it unfair to use his influence to deprive Fleischman and Goldreyer of their Triangle Service, after having taken away from them the services of Metro, Pathe, Paramount and World. Ochs said no; that it was merely a matter of business, having nothing to do with his presidency. He said, moreover, that Keppler did not know anything about moving picture conditions or he would not have asked such a foolish question. Keppler requested the chairman to suppress further personal remarks. Mr. Anson, one of the committeemen, at this point, and others, declared that the committee, as well as Mr. Ochs, should have counsel. Sam Trigger, committee chairman, said he wanted no more lawyers. All he desired was the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

Keppler, to prove that Ochs secured privileges because of his position, asked Ochs if he paid anything additional for service when Ochs' Airdome was opened. Ochs admitted that he did not; that by oral contract he was permitted to switch films between the Airdome and the Costello, although they were two blocks apart, for single service price.

Another point won by Keppler concerned the respective Paramount contracts with Ochs and Fleischman and Goldreyer. Ochs confessed to paying $50 a week for the service, while Fleischman and Goldreyer paid $150, with a deposit three times as great as Ochs.

Keppler asked Ochs if ever, since he had been a member, had he participated in the affairs of another film company. Ochs said no. Keppler inquired the date of Ochs connection with the Popular Plays and Players Company. Ochs then recollected that he had been that company's treasurer two and one-half years ago. He denied that he had financial interest in the company, although he was treasurer. On further questioning, he recalled that he was only acting for the treasurer who was out of town. He had no stock in the company, and received no compensation, he said. All he did was sign checks; he was not even a regular treasurer. He conconfessed that he indulged in this charitable occupation for eight months.

Concerning the Mutual return expressage matter, Keppler demanded: "Why did you not cancel Metro and Paramount, because of express charges, when you cancelled Mutual?"

Ochs replied that the Metro and Paramount custom was long established, and that he thought the Mutual express charges were unfair.

The question was brought up concerning Ochs' attempts to induce Fleischman and Goldreyer to buy his two houses. Ochs said he never threatened them. He scorned Keppler's insinuation that he had used his influence as president with services or accessory houses.

Trade Paper Stock Watered, Admits Ochs

The most thrilling part of Keppler's and Ochs' word duel happened when a trade paper, which Ochs is said to have organized, was brought up for discussion. Ochs frankly admitted that a large percentage of the publication's stock was water. He said that he was its promoter and leading spirit to the extent of $15,000 cash. He denied, with vigor, that any film producing company had money invested.

Keppler dared him to produce the subscription books. At this point, Charles M. Rosenthal took the floor, announced that he was Mr. Ochs' attorney, and advised Ochs to decline to make further statements regarding the trade paper.

Keppler, when silence again reigned, loudly defied Ochs to produce the books, "not two hours from now, nor next week—but now!" Half the members of the committee, Mr. Ochs, Mr. Blumenthal, Mr. Trigger, Mr. Ochs' lawyer, and other interested parties, promptly arose, and said it was out of the question. Mr. Ochs said it was inconvenient. Mr. Blumenthal said it was nobody's business. Mr. Rosenthal said that the man who had charge of the books was playing golf, and he further defied anybody to find him. Keppler claimed that their refusal to produce the boods clinched his argument. They were afraid! He double-dared them to show the books! A delay of a few days, or hours, he said, would permit some one to tamper with the books, so that later investigation would be worthless. He pointed out the delicacy of Mr. Ochs' position in refusing an examination; that his attitude would thoroughly convince the exhibitors all over the country that the trade paper was subsidized by a film company. Mr. Anson, a committeeman, took the floor with a worried look, and guessed that the books ought to be produced.

Mr. Steiner, another committeeman, who had protested most vigorously throughout against the books being shown, then moved that the books be produced at the next hearing, 11 o'clock, Tuesday, November 21.

Brooklyn Men Demand Investigation of Ochs' Paper

Resolution Offered Protesting Against Secrecy in Policy of New Trade Publication—Selznick Proposes That Theatres Be Bonded to Do Away with Deposit System

THE following resolution pertaining to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Trade Review, was offered and carried at the Triangle theatre at the meeting of the Brooklyn Association which represents 110 theatres, Saturday evening:

Whereas, Information has come to this local that a trade paper is about to be published in New York City under the title of The Exhibitor's Trade Review, according to the advance notice primarily intended for the benefit of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of America; and

Whereas, The Brooklyn local being an integral part of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America are without any knowledge concerning the executive, financial or business policy of the proposed new trade paper;

Therefore, Be it Resolved, That we, the Brooklyn local, New York City branch No. 2, in meeting assembled go on record as requesting a complete report from the national president on the scope and plan of the executive, financial and business policy of the proposed trade paper;

Be it Further Resolved, That information regarding the benefit of the organization to be derived from such a trade paper be obtained from the national president;

Be it Further Resolved. That this local go on record as withholding its indorsement until the above facts have been made public to the members of this local.

Lewis J. Selznick made a proposition to the association that they should tax the theatres and thereby raise a reserve fund with which they could bond all their theatres, thereby protecting the exchanges against loss and doing away with the present deposit system.

EFFICIENCY IN THE PRODUCTION OF "IT MAY BE YOUR DAUGHTER"

Samuel Berlinger of the Moral Uplift Society of America believes that his company produced somewhat of an efficiency record along with "It May Be Your Daughter," a six-reel states rights feature. Mr. Berlinger said in reference to this picture:

"It took us between two and three weeks to produce it. We had all our players engaged for the consecutive scenes. Our minor players were engaged for the actual scenes in which they were to appear, which was previously arranged, and these scenes were taken one after the other, without delay, and when these were finished the players were dismissed. The principals were the only ones retained for the balance of the scenes, thereby bringing the expense of production to a minimum.

"We rented our studio, for indoor scenes, in the same way, using it for that purpose only, doing away with the overhead expense. This we believe to be the secret of cheap production, which method most producing companies are following."

PIONEER FILM SECURES SEVERAL NEW FEATURES

The Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, 126 West 46th street, New York City, has acquired the Greater New York and northern New Jersey rights to "The Human Orchid," featuring Irva Ross and Walter Miller. It is a five-part drama, portraying the follies of modern life. "The Human Orchid" is now ready for release and booking dates are being contracted for.

The Third Em. Gorman feature, entitled "The Little Mother," is nearing completion and will be released in December under the Pioneer banner. Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, is elated at the excellence attained by this picture. It is a powerful story and provides Baby Gorman with a vehicle suitable to her talent.

In view of the patronage enjoyed by the preceding Gorman pictures, bookings for "The Little Mother" should be sought by exhibitors. The picture is in five reels.

Mr. Hirsh, who recently acquired the rights to "Civilization" for Greater New York, has extended his rights to the entire state.

WILLIAM BURNSTEIN JOINS BROTHER JULES TO "UNICORN".

William Burnstein, brother of Jules Burnstein, vice-president and general manager of the Monmouth Film Corporation, has joined the ranks of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation to handle the Monmouth's sixteen episode serial, "Jimmie Dale," alias "The Gray Seal," which is being released through the country through the Unicorn.

Previous to joining the Unicorn Service, Mr. Burnstein was associated prominently with the Fox Film Corporation, also with the Triangle Film Corporation. He is a film man of wide experience and great popularity in the trade.

Mr. Burnstein is enthusiastic over the "Jimmie Dale" serial, which he declares to be the biggest money getter ever. He will leave shortly on a tour over the entire country in the interests of the Unicorn.

War Films on State Rights from Thompson Company

Subjects Sponsored by Leslie's Weekly Will Have Countrywide Exploitation and Be Syndicated in Dailies While Thompson Goes for More

ORGANIZED for the purpose of handling war and topical films, and with a record of one-reel success already to their credit, the Donald C. Thompson Film Company, Inc., has entered the New York market and opened a suite of offices on the 21st floor of the Times Building.

The officers are: President, Captain Donald C. Thompson; Vice-President, Theodore Miller; Treasurer, Florence Ann Harper. The general sales manager and director of publicity is Captain Edwin Bower Hesser, of the Hesser Publicity Bureau, Montreal.

Capt. Thompson is the well-known war correspondent and staff photographer of Leslie's Weekly, in which publication he has had from one to three pages of space each week for his photos and news sent from the front. He has penetrated to the very front line many times, and his pictures are a big advertised feature of Leslie's. Accompanying him on his last trip was Mrs. Harper, also of the Leslie's staff, and both of them being framed cinematographers, they secured a great deal of film that was exclusive and unique. This has already made a decided success in New York at the Rialto theatre, in the seven-reel production called "War As It Really Is," which, according to a signed statement of Mr. Rothapfel, broke the box-office records at that house.

"War As It Really Is" will be released on a state rights basis, and Leslie's Weekly, prominently featured on all lithographs, are giving it their backing, in connection with the syndicate of daily papers with which they co-operate. The proposition is one which is to be handled directly in connection with newspapers in every large city. As an example of the publicity equipment—they have over 100 perfect stills, thirty kinds of ad plates in all sizes, and several exhibition sets of priceless relics from European battlefields, one of which created so much comment at the Rialto theatre.

Capt. Thompson and Mrs. Harper were both officially recognized by France, England and Russia. They are now completing their equipment for another tour of the war zone, and are having special Debrie cameras built; jeweled as if they were watches and with many improvements needed for strenuous war service.

Eighteen Big Plays Are Under Way in Metro Studios

WITH eighteen big productions under way in its studios at one time, the Metro Pictures Corporation has hung up a new record for itself. Never before has there been such a rush of work around the studios in which Metro plays are produced.

The Rolfe and Columbia studios, particularly, are the centres of great activity. The stars at work are Ethel Barrymore, Mabel Taliferro, Viola Dana, Julius Steger, Lionel Barrymore, Frances Nelson, Emmy Wehlen and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. Mme. Petrova is busy in the Popular Plays and Players studio, and over at the Quality Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are at work, while out at the Yorke studios at Hollywood, Cal., Harold Lockwood and May Allison are producing a new play.

Margaret Whistler (Universal) and Her Favorite Horse

In the Quality studios Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne are making the fourteen episode serial which will follow their superb work in the picture version of "Romeo and Juliet."

At the Popular Plays and Players studio, Mme. Petrova is working on a story of Corsican life, written by herself in collaboration with Mrs. L. Case Russell. It is a distinct change from the feminist plays she has been producing during the last few months, going back to the primitive and elemental for its appeal. Burton L. King is directing this Metro play, and in the meantime Edmund Lawrence is completing the direction of the Anna Steese Richardson play, "A Man's Woman," in which Mme. Petrova is starred, and is cutting and assembling the film for that production.

Julius Steger is completing the production of "The Stolen Triumph," a Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. five-act drama, which will be released Dec. 11 on the Metro program. Mr. Steger and Mr. Karger have made the scenario for "The Stolen Triumph." A cast including Clara Whipple, Clara Blandick, Harry Burkhardt, Marie Reichardt, Helen Badgley, and Maury Steuart, supports Mr. Steger. David Thompson is the director of "The Stolen Triumph," and associated with him and Mr. Steger in the production of the play is P. Thad. Volkman.

Mabel Taliaferro's new play is the Metro-Columbia feature, "Jerry of the Emerald Isle," a story of an immigrant girl, which John H. Collins is directing. Albert Kelly, a former newspaper man, is assisting Mr. Collins in the direction. Robert Whittier

Paramount Eastern Exchange Managers Meet

Department Heads Discuss Plans for the Extension of More Elaborate Lobby Displays in All Paramount Theatres —Among Those in Attendance Are Adolph Zukor, Hiram Abrams, Jesse L. Lasky, Arthur Friend and Kenneth Hodkinson

THE general managers, publicity and advertising directors of all the Eastern Paramount exchanges, together with the executive departmental heads of Paramount Pictures Corporation, the Famous Players Film Company, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures, held an important meeting last week at Paramount's office, 485 Fifth avenue, New York, at which was discussed methods and means of extending the service rendered by Paramount and the producing companies making Paramount Pictures, to their exhibitors. The visiting managers were the guests of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The meeting was confined principally to the discussion and the making of definite plans for the future extension of a larger, better and more elaborate lobby display in all Paramount theatres, and the interchange of opinions and ideas regarding the kind, form and manner of producing and distributing new accessories, lithographs, photographic stills, music, announcement films, publicity, cuts, mats, and other materials. A number of definite ideas were accepted and will be put into immediate effect by the producing companies and Paramount.

Those who attended the conference were Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players - Lasky Corporation; Hiram Abrams, president of the Paramount Pictures Corporation; Jesse L. Lasky, president of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company; Arthur Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Kenneth Hodkinson, general manager of Paramount Pictures Corporation; Benjamin P. Schulberg, director of publicity of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; John Flinn, publicity director of the Lasky Feature Play Company; Carl H. Pierce, special representative of the four producing companies and Paramount Pictures Corporation; Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel of Paramount Pictures Corporation; D. Leo Dennison, special representative for James Steele, treasurer of Paramount, in the Pittsburg, Chicago, Detroit and Cincinnati Exchanges; Harry Asher, manager of the Famous Players Film Company of New England; Whitman Bennett, business manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; William E. Smith, president of the Famous Players Exchange of Philadelphia; William O'Haran Hurst, editor of the Paramount Pictographs; Charles C. Burr, advertising manager of Paramount; W. E. Seymour, manager of the New York office of the Famous Players Exchange of Philadelphia; O. F. Bower, manager of the Famous Players Exchange of Philadelphia.

Publicity Men Present

Harry I. Day, editor of Picture Progress and Paramount Progress; Oscar Morgan, director of advertising and publicity of the Famous Players Exchange of Philadelphia; Frank Gilman, publicity director of the New York office of the Famous Players Exchange of Philadelphia; George Mann, manager of the Famous Players Exchange of Washington, D. C.; Charles E. Moyer, director of publicity of Paramount Pictures Corporation; Julian M. Solomon, Jr., office manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; J. Albert Thorn, purchasing agent of Paramount; Eugene J. Zukor, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; S. J. Stoughton, manager of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company of New York; George K. Robinson, director of publicity and advertising of the Famous Players Film Company of New England; Vincent Trotta, artist for Paramount and William Walker Hines, of the Sales Promotion Department of Paramount.

The meeting was entirely informal and discussions were entered into by all the members present. Many of the excellent advertising and publicity aids that have recently been distributed to the Paramount exhibitors were decided to be continued, but many additional business stimulators for exhibitors were decided upon, all of which will be standardized and of a caliber that will be up to the standard of the productions of Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas pictures. These new ideas which will be placed on the market during the latter part of the year will be utterly different to anything of its kind that has ever been distributed in the motion picture industry, and all of which will decidedly add to the attractiveness and standard of Paramount theatres.

Every means toward helping the exhibitors throughout the country were covered in their entirety. Recently Paramount distributed through its exchanges thousands of dollars' worth of accessories for better advertising and publicity, and to these aids many additions will be made each month in the future.

A spirit of sincerest co-operation between producer, distributor, exchanges and exhibitors, was the keynote of the meeting and the purpose was primarily to provide additional materials for the man who is ambitious to have a better, more attractive and more profitable theatre.

The Urban Color Process Is a Success

Charles Urban, Before a Critical Audience, Displays the Results of Several Years' Effort—Kinemacolor Faults Removed—Colors Vivid and Real

CHARLES URBAN, after many years of research and experiment, has perfected his process of motion picture color photography. Before an invited audience at Wurlitzer Hall on Thursday evening, November 16, a series of remarkable color subjects were presented. According to the program, Mr. Urban's purpose was to present subjects which demonstrated the broad scope of his process, not only in colors, but in climates and seasons. There is no doubt that he has achieved his goal.

The Urban process is an improvement upon the Kinemacolor panchromatic film, and the faults which caused the withdrawal of Kinemacolor film from the market have been removed. The new film is remarkably easy on the eyes, and the colors are vivid and real.

The subjects which appeared to impress Mr. Urban's audience the most were gems, oranges and a parade of Admiral Jellicoe's fleet in the North Sea. Perhaps the most interesting experiment shown was the blending of colors when the juice of a blood orange and a Florida orange were mingled. Crown jewels, butterflies, flowers and portions of dramatic pieces were convincing. That delicate shadings of color are possible with the new process was also proved by an experiment in which Port wine was poured into a glass of water.

The most spectacular and delightful part of the program was provided by the North Sea pictures, in which a choppy blue sea, a clouded sky, racing gray ships and flashing guns vied in taxing the lenses for correct registration. These are the latest pictures made by the Urban process and they provided a sufficient climax to an evening of extraordinary entertainment. The dull red smoke of burning cordite and the reflection on the waters of a genuine North Sea sunset furnished conclusive proof to the belief that he has made a success of motion pictures in colors.

R. A. Walsh Completes "The Honor System"

R. A. WALSH undertook a difficult task in his latest Fox film, "The Honor System." The story is based on prison life, which is a difficult theme under any conditions, but he added the complications of a sustained love interest. Those who have seen the picture say that it is excellent.

To build up the atmosphere of the story, Mr. Walsh staged a number of border scenes which endeavor to convey something of the true conditions in that unhappy locality. There are numerous exciting flashes, showing cavalry charges and riding feats. "The Honor System" contains a number of fighting scenes laid in the same section.

The prison scenes were produced in Arizona, where a number of real convicts participated. The theme of the play centers upon the relations existing between a convict victim and the daughter of the man who takes the place of the brutal warden.

A dramatic critic on one of the Pacific Coast newspapers is the author of this ingenious piece. It is scheduled for early release on the Fox program.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

S. RANKIN DREW is leading a "triple life" around the Metro-Rolfe studios these days. Not content with the honor of preparing the picturization of the big feature, "The Belle of the Season," Mr. Drew is directing Emmy Wehlen, the star, and then to fill in the spare moments is playing the leading supporting role.

"Now, if I just had one more thing to do," Mr. Drew remarked to Mr. Rolfe with a smile, "I could cash in on the six hours out of the twenty-four that are left to me now." Then the popular director-star went on: "But I'm enjoying it. And there's no lost motion in this production; it's all right under my fingers and in my own head."

Edward Elkas, the versatile actor who has been associated with the Vitagraph people for the past two and a half years, has just added his name to the long list of Metro-Rolfe screen favorites. Mr. Elkas soon will be seen in "The Belle of the Season," which is being produced under the direction of S. Rankin Drew, with Emmy Wehlen in the leading role. Before Mr. Elkas entered the motion picture field some years ago he enjoyed a successful career as an opera singer, and later won much praise in his work with the Germania and Thalia theatres in New York, and with the Aaronson and the Alice Neilsen opera companies. He has acted as stage manager for such stars as Lulu Glaser, Blanche Ring, Jefferson De Angelis, Lillian Russell and Marie Cahill.

Mr. Elkas comes to the Metro-Rolfe studios with a long record for splendid work, and has already been made welcome by his new co-workers.

The difficult role of Benjamin Wright, in the Metro-Rolfe screen version of the Margaret Deland novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie," with Ethel Barrymore as star, has been entrusted to Frank Montgomery.

Mr. Montgomery has played for Metro a number of parts calling for clever character delineation and knowledge of the art of "make-up." Most recent among them was Idiqui, the Indian, in "The Brand of Cowardice," with Lionel Barrymore. Previous to that he was seen as the Mexican in "The Yellow Streak," with Lionel Barrymore, the Jewish father, Samuels, in "The Kiss of Hate," with Ethel Barrymore, and the second-story man in "Notorious Gallagher," with Marguerite Snow and William Nigh. Mr. Montgomery was the original Frenchman in the "Fatal Wedding" Company, and the original "jefe politico," with Dustin Farnum in "The Rangers." He was formerly with D. W. Griffith.

A visitor at the Rolfe studios was much amazed recently to hear a conversation between Mabel Taliaferro and Emmy Wehlen, two of Metro's most distinguished stars.

"Oh, I must congratulate you Miss Taliaferro!" said the little Viennese actress, "I understand you are going to be married to-day?"

"Yes," answered the diminutive star, all smiles. "This is my wedding day."

"Who is your bridegroom?" asked Miss Wehlen.

"Really, I've forgotten his name," confessed Miss Taliaferro.

The visitor gasped.

Just then John H. Collins, who is directing Miss Taliaferro in the five-part Metro feature play, "Jerry of the Emerald Isle," called out, "All ready, everybody. Mr. Walker, stand beside Miss Taliaferro for the wedding scene." The cameraman began to grind, and the mystery was solved. Robert Walker was the "bridegroom."

While performing in forthcoming Vitagraph release, "Whom the Gods Destroy," Harry Morey, wearing a naval lieutenant's uniform, was given the courtesy of the U. S. S. New York at the Brooklyn navy yard. Wherever he appeared on the big fighting vessel the enlisted men faithfully saluted him, they supposing he was a new officer attached to the ship. He had the bearing and appearance of a regular naval guy, as this demonstrated, and Director W. P. S. Earle was well pleased with Morey's role.

A curious testimonial has come to Anders Randolf, the "heavy" in Vitagraph's production of "The Girl Philippa," with Anita Stewart. In the title lettering department of the Brooklyn studio, A. Klaussen, who is a linguist, found among some foreign papers a great two-column ad. in a Stockholm newspaper, announcing the showing of a Vitagraph film, "Mother's Roses," which, by the way, it described as "positively the first Randolf film of the present year." Besides this, which was a matter of mild surprise since "Mother's Roses" is several years old, the announcement said that Mr. Randolf's work would be remembered from his previous release, "413," which is even older.

E. K. Lincoln, Star of "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Gray Seal" (16 Episodes). His $5,000 Chinese Chow Dogs Have Captured Over a Hundred Blue Ribbons

Director Louis Myll, who is out to prove that one-reel comedies of standard excellence can be made in record time, refuses to be stopped by wind, weather or public calamity in the making of George Kleine's comedy series, "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer." Mr. Myll, with his star, Harry Watson, Jr., and the Kleine comedy organization, recently invaded the bad lands of New Jersey for the purpose of getting some unique exteriors. Scarcely had the director and his players arrived on the location when they received word that a motor truck, loaded with necessary "props," had broken down and would not be able to reach them for several hours.

Instead of raving, Mr. Myll scanned the horizon. He sighted a Jersey farm in the offing. He then calmly seated himself in the shade of a tree, and proceeded to write a comedy dealing with the adventures of "Musty" as an agricultural specialist and requiring no "prop" other than those which could be borrowed from the farmer. Thirty minutes later the new comedy was being filmed. Those who have seen the advance print declare that it is one of the most hilariously funny reels, in which Mr. Watson, as "Musty Suffer," has yet appeared.

A brother-in-law is at some times a liability, and at others an asset. This is the conclusion which Owen Moore has drawn after sharing his dressing room with Jack Pickford at the Famous Players Studio. Moore was dressed in dinner clothes and about to leave the room recently when Jack burst through the door and demanded a pair of cuff-buttons. He had come to the studio in a soft shirt and the director had told him that he wanted him in a stiff shirt. There was consternation when Moore declared that he had his only cuff-buttons on and was going into a scene. Then Jack spied the four jet buttons in Moore's waistcoat. "Here, your coat buttons over your vest—give me the two middle buttons off that vest. I can use those for cuff-buttons and nobody will know the difference."

The transfer was effected and then Jack proceeded to become involved in a close-up which registered the buttons very clearly.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Nov. 16.

DIRECTOR OTIS TURNER and a company of Fox Players are spending several weeks at Balboa Beach on the Pacific Coast filming water scenes for an adaptation from "Beyond the Rim," a novel by J. Allen Dunne. To use this beach, it was necessary to transfer it into a veritable jungle. Hundreds of palm trees were set out, two hundred monkeys, parrots, paroquettes, and other inhabitants of the jungle were leased for use in the scenes made here. Director Turner has an exceptionally large cast, which includes George Walsh and Anna Luther as leads, while among the supporting players are William Clifford, Willard Louis, Hector Sarno, and a number of others. This subject is spoken of as elaborate in many ways, and it is estimated the cost will exceed $3,000.

Hank Mann, playing under the direction of Charles Parrott in Fox comedies, gave a celebration this week to members of the company, as the result of winning a wager from Barney Oldfield, which was to the effect that he would not wear a hat for one year, except as scenes in pictures required.

Lee Morris, the Fox hairpin comedian, has been loaned to the Lasky Company to play the role of Jenks in "Oliver Twist," a part he appeared in many times on the legitimate stage.

Director Oscar Apfel is preparing a story and selecting a cast for his next production. Gladys Brockwell, Jack Standing, Eleanor Crowe and Monroe Salisbury will take the principal parts.

Director Frank Lloyd has performed a miracle. The Scotchman made scenes in which several thousand took part at a cost of twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents. At the time he was in Sacramento getting scenes outside the California capital building. Included in the mob were Senator Birdsall and State Controller Chambers. The populace of Sacramento wanted to enjoy the novelty of working before the camera, with the result that Lloyd kept down the expense account, and greatly increased the personality of his players. The scenes were for a Fox picture, which stars William Farnum.

Forty-five thousand feet of film is being reduced to a five-reel subject by Richard Stanton. This is the international boundary subject with numerous war scenes in which seven troops of cavalry took part. Allen Hale and Gretchen Hartman are the principals, and the subject is said to have cost $40,000.

Porelli Directs La Salle Company

The La Salle Company, under the direction of M. de la Porelli, is filming a two-reel farce comedy, titled "The Place Where Nothing Happened." It deals with a farmer inheriting the family of a friend, who went to Turkey and becomes the possessor of a large harem. All the wives are sent to the farmer, and, arriving at his home town, turn the usually quiet village into a place of excitement. Jean Otto takes the part of the farmer, Madge Kirby, the leading member of the harem; Eddie Boland and William Scott appear as rubes.

The Stern Film Company serial made by Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, originally known as "Lady Baffles," has been titled "The Purple Mask." Nine episodes of this have been completed, and the first release will shortly be made on the Universal program.

A large number of matinee idol type of policemen of the Los Angeles force were engaged this week for several days at the Yorke-Metro studio, appearing in scenes depicting the raid of an opium joint in Chinatown for "Pidgin Island." Working in the same scenes were approximately fifty extras representing types of the underworld. Harold Lockwood's clothing is said to have been shredded in the fight scenes staged. Three cameras were used during the filming of these scenes. There are a large number of acting parts in this Metro production, said to total thirty-five in all. Harold Lockwood and May Allison are the co-stars, Lester Cuneo the heavy, and Lillian Hayward as an important character part.

The Selig three-reel picture now being completed with Tom Mix and Bessie Eyton in the principal parts supported by William Machin, Eugenie Besserer and Al. Filson, promises a big thrill. Mix staged this by riding a horse across the length of a log, thirty feet, which served as a foot bridge across a canyon seventy-five feet deep. This scene is for the decidedly Western subject, "Twisted Trails."

Victor (Slim) Potel Really Does Not Enjoy Associating with Mack Sennett's Grizzly Comedians, They Say

Colin Campbell is home from Chicago, where he went to supervise the laboratory work on "The Garden of Allah," and after a vacation of a few days, will take up another multiple reel feature, title of which is not known. He has several under consideration now, and is in San Francisco combining business with pleasure by seeking locations while he takes a vacation.

The Christie Company is this week shipping the comedy, "Some Kid," which has Neal Burns as the husband, Betty Compson the wife, Nolan Leary the friend, Dave Morris and Stella Adams the colored people, and George French floorwalker at a department store. It is all about an absent-minded wife who visits the store on a shopping tour and pushed away the wrong baby cab—the one that contains the child of the colored doorkeeper and wife. When hubby invites a friend down for dinner the discovery is made, and there are other things which happen.

Al. E. Christie is still working on the melodramatic farce, "Hist—At Six O'Clock." The featured part of this is that of a vampire being played by Betty Compson.

The Christie Film Company is to open its own New York office shortly, which will be in charge of Charles Christie, who has gone East for this purpose. Al. E. Christie will remain at the studio to supervise and direct all production, and have charge of the business management of the producing plant. Fred Porter, who has been identified with a number of coast producing companies, is business manager at the studios.

Charles Christie, after opening the New York office, will spend most of his time there. It is also his intention to make a trip over the entire country every few months to keep in touch with exchangemen and the wants of exhibitors. By this new arrangement F. J. Hawkins, who has been their former Eastern representative, will not be affiliated with the distribution of their comedies. Mr. Hawkins arrived in Los Angeles during the past week, and will spend some time here making arrangements for state rights producers.

Henry Pathe Lehrman has organized his first comedy company to produce for William Fox, and is now engaged in making the initial release. In addition to Billie Ritchie, Lehrman plays a leading part in this subject, and has engaged Dot Farley as leading woman opposite Ritchie. Wm. McGann is in charge of the camera work.

As soon as this picture is completed, Mr. Lehrman intends organizing another producing unit, which will be directed by David Kirkland under the supervision of Lehrman. The Lehrman Company is working at the Christie studio, where special stages and sets have been built for them.

Ralph Lewis, perhaps best known for his work as Stoneman in D. W. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," who was one of the original members of the Majestic and Reliance first stock company, and has been with D. W. Griffith and affiliated companies for the past four years, this week left the organization to accept a contract with the Fox Film Corporation. Lewis is to be starred in William Fox features, and will shortly take up his work at the Fox Hollywood studio.

Roy E. Aitken is in Los Angeles for a stay of a few weeks at Triangle studios. He will remain here until his brother, President Harry Aitken, comes to the coast, which will be in the near future. The purpose of the trip is for the executives of the Triangle releasing syndicate to keep in touch with matters pertaining to production.

George Seigman, who has been absent from the studio for the past month, or since the death of his wife, has returned to the coast after spending four weeks in the East, and will, within a few days begin the production of a Fine Arts feature.

John Emerson has also returned to the Fine Arts studios, and will direct the films featuring Douglas Fairbanks. He will take up his first subject as soon as the present Fairbanks subject, "The Matrimaniac," now being filmed by Director Paul Powell is completed. This story is an adaptation of a short story to appear in an Eastern magazine, and will be released simultaneously with the story. Mr. Emerson went East last summer to direct at the Eastern studio of the Fine Arts, and later was with the famous players where he directed Mary Pickford.

Edward Dillon is directing a five-reel subject which will offer Bessie Love as star. It is known at the present time as "The Heiress of Coffee Dan," which is a temporary title, the title being taken from the famous coffee house at San Francisco.

A well deserved compliment to William S. Hart which bespeaks the popularity of the Western actor of the Ince studios, was received this week in a statement from the Triangle exchange at Chicago. On October 20, according to the statement received at the studio, was banner day at Chicago for Mr. Hart. Every print in the exchange of Hart subjects, numbering in all forty-two, were exhibited at Chicago theatres on this day. The subject date back as far as "The Desciple," and there were seven prints of his latest release "The Return of Draw Egan" being shown.

"It's Getting Better, Brownie"—Agnes Vernon Visits an Invalid (Herbert Rawlinson at U. City Hospital)

The Fine Arts comedy drama originally known as "The Feud Breakers," has been given the permanent title of "Children of the Feud." This has an atmosphere of the Kentucky and Tennessee mountains, and was filmed by Director Joseph Henaberry. It gives the featured parts to Dorothy Gish and Sam de Grasse, and they are supported by the Fine Art children, and a well balanced cast.

A very unusual war story based upon the actual romance of a San Francisco citizen is to be filmed at the Fine Arts studio. No title has been selected and Dorothy Gish will play the featured part of the Yankee girl, with Frank Bennett appearing as Captain Johnny. At the time of the story the author was a young captain of the Confederate army, and because of his age it fell to his lot to aid a Yankee girl to see her brother, than a prisoner in the hospital of the Confederate army. The instances leading up to the climax of the story have never been printed in connection with history, except in the biography of the captain, who was later advanced in the ranks by General Lee.

J. R. Crone, who since the organization of the Vogue Films, Inc. has served as manager, has resigned that position, his resignation to take effect at the end of this week. James Davis has been appointed the successor of Crone, and will take up his new work immediately. Davis has been affiliated with Kalem "Hazards of Helen" Company, where he was producing director for more than fifty episodes.

Frederick Palmer, who for the past six months has served as scenario editor for the Vogue, has resigned his position there to accept one as writer for the Keystone Company. Hugh Saxon, who has been affiliated with Vogue in the writing of stories, is to continue there as head of the department.

"Hard Luck Love"

A two-reel comedy put into production at the Vogue studio will probably be titled "Hard Luck Love." Scenario for this was written by Hugh Saxon, and is being filmed under the direction of Robin Williamson. Ben Turpin appears as the hay-baler, Paddy McQuire a western bad-man, and Gypsy Abbott takes the part of the sweet little ingenue they both seek. The hay-baler has the consent of the girl, but is disliked by the father, while the westerner is despised by the girl, and admired by her dad. In five different ways the westerner attempts to take the life of his rival, the means adopted finally consists of throwing him into his own hay-baler, and binding him inside a bundle of hay.

He finally escapes by jumping into a diver's suit, blowing it up with air at an automobile station, and soaring away through the sky. All who have been affected by the story previously fall into the chase, which ends when a justice of the peace thinks him a new kind of a bird and punctures the rubber suit, thus bringing him to earth.

THINKS OPEN BOOKING MEANS PROHIBITIVE PRICES

Motion Picture News:
New York.

Having read several articles in the Motion Picture News regarding open bookings I will say that from the standpoint of the large city exhibitor it is a very desirable condition, but what of the thousands of smaller city and country town exhibitors, who form the backbone of the business? For these, open booking, at the present prohibitive prices asked for features that have any merit, spells ruin.

The writer has run a prominent program for years, in fact, since the first release of same, and recently was informed that the leading star of the program would be shown only in special releases, for three day runs, at $100 per day. For a town of 14,000 population the price was prohibitive, as we would have to pay for the regular program in addition. This is an advance of 400 per cent. over prices heretofore paid. The business at best is far removed from a gold mine; in fact to get a jolt like this after the most unsatisfactory season we have had, leads an exhibitor in a smaller town to ponder over the business ethics of the motion picture game as compared to other businesses—to wonder what is coming next—to look with keen apprehension to his very existence.

Any business man knows that to advance a product several times in price is suicidal. To what extent these methods continue depends the life of the business. From an efficient viewpoint at least 90 per cent. of the exhibitors demand a regular program—it is the only logical method for the modern sized houses—and most houses are modern sized. But when the programs are robbed of their strong supports, and the regular program becomes mediocre, just so soon will the 90 per cent. of exhibitors suffer. And how long they will suffer depends on their bank rolls.

B. H. Cooper,
(The Park, Champaign, Ill.)

This exhibitor voices the exact feelings of thousands of exhibitors, who fail to see that if the higher prices are impossible, they won't have to be paid. The prices quoted him, like the two dollar Broadway shows with a handful of attendance, will not endure if they are not based on economic values. In the meantime just these open and frank discussions of the question are what we want to get in this department. Who knows? Some of the producers may read what you have to say and may take heed.

Stanley Exhibitors Organize—To Promote Friendly Relations

FOR a long while the managers of motion picture houses, as well as the distributors of films, have realized that, in order to place the enterprise on a plane of profit and of interest to the pubilc, it was necessary to form an organization which would discuss, and decide much mooted questions after looking them over from every angle. With that object in view there was formed, at the office of the Stanley Booking Company, Philadelphia, an organization which is to be known as the Stanley Exhibitors' Association, which assumed definite shape last week with the nomination of officers.

The object of the association will be to establish a common bond of community interests, to advance the motion picture industry, to promote professional intercourse and to foster and maintain personal and business relations between the owners and managers of the photoplay theatres that are franchise holders of the booking privileges of the Stanley Booking Company.

At present, the organization has a membership of eighty-five owners and managers and when once the advantages of the community of interests is appreciated, the membership of the body will speedily increase to nearly one hundred and fifty.

At a meeting held, the nomination of officers for the first term resulted in the following elections:

President, Jos. M. McCready; Vice-President, Frank Buchler; Secretary, Chas. Segal; Treasurer, Jack Delmar.

Meetings for the transaction of business will be held every first Wednesday of the month. The membership of the organization is limited to the theatres securing their productions through the Stanley Booking Company.

The election of officers will take place on the morning of Wednesday, Dec. 6, and in the evening of the same day, Mr. Stanley V. Mastbaum will tender a banquet to the members of the association at the Bellevue Stratford which will be attended not only by the representatives of the trade in this city but by some of the most prominent film producers in the country. Among the latter, will be Lewis J. Selznick, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Daniel Frohman, William A. Brady, Herbert Brenon, Richard A. Rowland.

The organization of this body of photoplay men will be followed by similar bodies in other sections of the country.

Objects to Extra Cost of Separate Exchanges for Every Star

Motion Picture News:
New York

Open booking will cause more picture theatres to go broke than any other thing that has happened to date in the life of the pictures. In every town where there are two or more shows to bid on those special releases, when one man gets them the other show will try to make him lose money on them. Now, if this is not true, it will be in some foreign country where I have not been. It may be different there; I can't say.

I do know that I have helped to build up several stars in my house which I would not like to see go and make pictures for themselves, and my opposition get them after I have boosted them for years. If they go to some other company and release on regular program of a picture or more a week, an exhibitor should not say a word, but the way some them have begun, it will cost you so much you can't book them and lay your stuff on the shelf. You don't dare cancel the services you have to run, to make six days a week.

Who gets the dimes together, the exhibitor or the producer? If you are trying to hold the exhibitor down and get all he takes in, the goose that lays the golden egg has gone. We got along for years without the big heavy ones, why not try again?

W. H. Coon, Manager.
The Mission, Amarillo, Texas.

This exhibitor voices from experience what is undoubtedly to be feared by the exhibitor from the present chaotic condition of service and star-pictures. We want to hear from other exhibitors. We would like to hear the "other side," the optimistic point of view.

Greater Vitagraph to Standardize Program

Company Will Release, Beginning January 1, a Blue Ribbon on a Schedule Assuring Appearance of Each of Its Best Known Actors and Actresses Every Six Weeks—Plan Means a Star Every Week in Vehicle Suitable to the Player's Abilities

BEGINNING January 1, the Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchanges will release a Blue Ribbon Feature on a schedule assuring the appearance of each one of its best known and most popular stars, every six weeks.

"This," says Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E organization, "is one of the most important announcements, from the production angle, which Greater Vitagraph has ever given out for the benefit of exhibitors at large.

"In other words," Mr. Irwin explains, "productions featuring the following big drawing attractions will be released during the first six weeks of 1917, and repeated throughout the year: Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno and William Duncan, Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott, Lillian Walker and Walter McGrail.

"Every week one of these famous stars will be available to the exhibitor, according to this schedule, and every six weeks each one of them will return.

"This means that Greater Vitagraph has a definite service of known value to offer the exhibitor, which he can depend upon both as to the regularity of the releases and the drawing power of the stars. It not only makes possible a long step toward standardization, but also provides the material for forceful advertising which the exhibitor can do.

"By reason of this schedule it is possible for him to set aside definite Anita Stewart days, Earle Williams days, Edith Storey days, etc., so that the public, with whom these stars are such favorites, will grow to look for them at these times and set aside the nights on which they appear to see them.

Plan Benefits All

"This plan," Mr. Irwin states, "forms a circle of benefit to all. The exhibitor can count upon a consistent patronage, and the public upon definite quality.

"The productions in which these stars will be seen have been selected with the idea of their fitness for the individual stars and for their variety of theme.

"Space will not permit me at this moment to describe each in detail; but a list of the subjects and their authors will give exhibitors conception of their high average quality.

"They are as follows:

"Anita Stewart in 'The Glory of Yolande,' by Mary Heikes Justice; 'Mary Ann and the Grand Duke,' by Molly Elliott Seawell; 'Babette,' by F. Berkley Smith; 'The Human Desire,' by Violet Irwin.

"Earle Williams in 'The Soul Master,' by James Oliver Curwood; 'Arsene Lupin,' by Paul Potter; 'The Hawk,' by Francis de Crosset; 'Apartment No. 29,' by Edward Montagne.

"Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno and William Duncan in 'Money Magic,' by Hamlin Garland; 'Aladdin from Broadway,' by Frederick Isham; 'The Captain of the Grey Horse Troop,' by Hamlin Garland; 'The Magnificent Meddler,' by Lawrence McCloskey; 'Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger,' by Hamlin Garland; 'The Lady Sheriff,' by Alvah Milton Kerr.

"Alice Joyce, Harry Morey and Marc MacDermott in 'Whom the Gods Destroy,' by J. Stuart Blackton and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

"Alice Joyce and Harry Morey in 'The Countess,' by Adrian Gil-Spear; 'Northward Ho,' by Harry James Smith; 'The Doctor of the Mines,' by Scott Darling.

"Peggy Hyland and Antonio Moreno in 'The Little Brown Sparrow,' by Paul West.

"Peggy Hyland and Marc MacDermott in 'The Grand Duke,' by Mabel Heikes Justice; 'The Green God,' by Frederick Arnold Kummer; 'The Agony Column,' by Earl Derr Biggers; 'The More Excellent Way,' by Cyrus Townsend Brady; 'If it Were You,' by Garfield Thompson.

"Lillian Walker in 'Indiscretion,' by William Lathrop; 'Sweet Kitty Mackay,' by Catherine Chrishom Cushing; 'Sally in a Hurry,' by A. Van Buren Powell; 'Princess of Park Row,' by Paul West.

"E. H. Sothern in 'An Enemy to the King,' by Robert Neilson Stephens; 'A Man of Mystery,' by Archibald Clavering Gunter.

"The above are either all completed, or in the course of production. In addition, there is scheduled, as previously announced, those Special Blue Ribbon Features: 'The Girl Philippa,' by Robert W. Chambers, in which Anita Stewart leads a cast of notable players; 'The Battle Cry of War,' 'Within the Law,' with Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, and 'The Secret Kingdom,' the Louis Joseph Vance serial starring Charles Richman and Dorothy Kelly.

"No company has ever been able to go before its exhibitors with such assurances of profit for so long in advance, as the above list represents. It is a guarantee to the exhibitors using the Vitagraph product consistently, that that product will never fail them, regardless of season or circumstance."

Rogers Resigns from Fox to Buy and Produce Features

Seven Years with Fox Enterprises—Work on First Big Feature Already Under Way—He Has Thorough Acquaintance with Film Conditions

L. T. ROGERS, for several years affiliated with William Fox's film enterprises, has resigned from the Fox Film Corporation as contract manager for the United States and general Canadian manager. He has already started the formation of his own company and will in the future produce pictures and buy special states rights productions for the state of New York. Mr. Rogers is located at 218 West 42nd street, New York City, in the offices of the Rogson Film Company of which he is president.

There is probably no man in the motion picture business that has such a thorough acquaintance with existing conditions as Mr. Rogers. As contract manager for the Fox Film Corporation he has met practically every exhibitor of importance in the United States. He has made several trips into Canada and knows the majority of the film men there. On his last trip he successfully fought several bills of adverse legislation that were pending before the houses of the various provinces.

When seen by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week Mr. Rogers said, "I have already formed plans for the production of special features. My first will be a version of a widely known Broadway play and I have engaged Thomas Dixon to make a screen version of it. Next week I will be able to announce the cast for this production which I assure you will be no ordinary thing.

"After the company gets running I intend to produce no less than twelve big features a year. These will be of five, six or even seven reels and based on popular successes of the stage and current literature. Besides producing I am in a position to purchase rights for New York State on large feature productions. Everything I book must be a departure from the ordinary program feature. The smaller stuff will be released by the Rogson Film Company of which I am president. The feature company will be known by another name probably the Rogers Film Company."

BOOKINGS ON HULETTE PICTURES PLEASE PATHE

Pathe Exchange reports unusual business on the Thanhouser features starring Gladys Hulette—namely, "The Shine Girl" and "Prudence the Pirate." The sixteen-year old Thanhouser favorite has come into her own and in parts calling for the impersonation of youth, buoyancy and sunny individuality, her rivals are very few indeed.

Exhibitors who booked these features played the star up strong. The results were flattering to their judgment. Her name was found to have real drawing power. Incidentally, these two pictures indicate forcibly the contention that the public prefers pictures with a high moral tone and no sex element. Another picture starring Miss Hulette, entitled "Her New York," is coming, and will probably be released some time in January.

Live Wire Exhibitors

"The 'News' wishes to include under this heading novel advertising ideas, successful schemes in management, decoration and equipment of the theatre—everything in fact done by the exhibitor to stimulate his trade. We invite every exhibitor to send for publication the successful ideas that he has worked out, also to come to us for suggestions or information. Address the Editor."

Projecting the Idea in the Picture on the Street

By M. Kashin

MOST theatres pay very great attention to the projection of their pictures upon the screen inside. Has it ever occurred to you that if you could project your pictures on the street, to catch the attention of passers by, and then show a more complete picture inside the house there would be a profit in it? Let me make clear what I mean. In my previous articles on utilizing the lobby to draw patrons into the theatre, I touched on the psychology of appealing to the masses; of diverting their attention to your business for a moment; on making use of the public's willingness at all times to stop anywhere, anytime, to see something new. I called attention to the way in which the public wants to find something to interest them in the shopping displays of the local stores, and in the lobbies of the theatres when these lobbies are made to present an attractive appearance. I told you how I compared notes with a local window dresser and learned from him that the seemingly unnecessary expense which the big stores often go to in making their window dressing appeal to the artistic sense, is repaid because the people search for such displays and reward the enterprise that calls them forth.

This week I will put this idea of projecting your picture on the street into your thought. Of taking the heart interest of your picture and flashing in out on the broad highway, or as near as you can get to it, by enlarging and displaying it in your theatre lobby. Using for illustration the accompanying photographs of "The Wall Between," "The Celebrated Scandal," and "The Flower of No Man's Land."

Throwing Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne on two sides of a dividing wall, pictures at a glance to the man on the street the big idea of this play—"the wall between?"

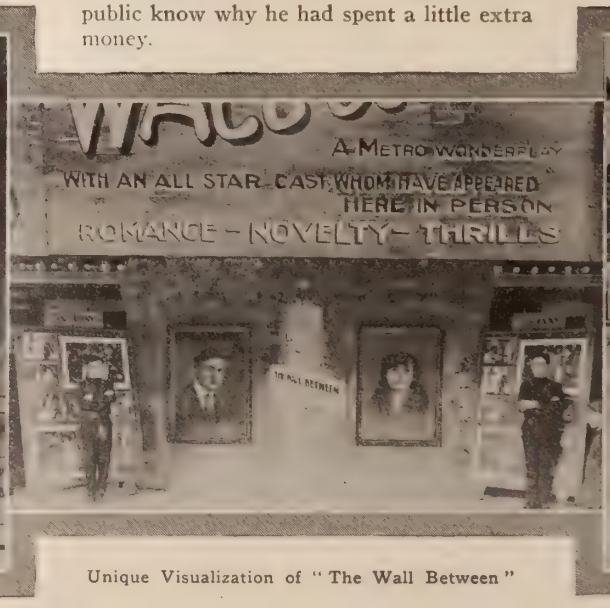
What was the wall between? To find out you will have to see the picture "The blood of a redman's heart cries out for love of a white woman! Did she answer it?" What more vital question could one ask than this—and the big red heart with the inscription "pierced to the heart by the poisonous arrow of treachery" brings a partial picture to any man's mind that he will want to see completely told in detail. Betty Nansen, in the "Celebrated Scandal," is likewise pictured for him who runs to read, with the elaborate throne, crown, and other royal insignia which appeal to the people who like to see pictured royal scandal. None of these displays cost a one-tenth part of what they brought the house in cold cash.

CAN YOU BEAT THIS ONE?

Milwaukee folks were startled recently by a plain white card with the cryptic line "Is Any Girl Safe at the Vaudette?" Before the wemen uplifters got too busy, however (one organization was on the point of a serious investigation), George Prendergast, who celebrated his change from the Saxe theatres to the Vaudette and White House with this "stunt," let the public know why he had spent a little extra money.

LUCILLE LEE STEWART AND HUNTLY GORDON AT WEBSTER THEATRE

Every seat in the house taken and the audience packed ten rows deep in the rear, was the greeting accorded Lucille Lee Stewart and Huntly Gordon, Vitagraph stars, at the New Webster theatre in the Bronx recently.



Despite the inclement weather people came from all directions and gave Miss Stewart a rousing reception.

She gave a short talk on her experiences on the screen and followed with a vocal solo. Miss Stewart has a beautiful soprano voice and if she had not decided to devote all her time to the screen, could easily make a "hit" on the concert stage.

Huntly Gordon, the leading man, was also accorded a tremendous ovation, and addressed his audience in a delightful and educational manner on the film business, and the work and requirements to reach the top of the profession.

Four Selznick Companies at Work in Three Studios

Herbert Brenon Nearly Completes "The Queen Mother," a Story of Italian Life, Starring Florence Reed—Clara Kimball Young Begins "The Price She Paid," Under the Direction of Charles Giblyn—"Panthea" to Follow "Foolish Virgin"

FOUR producing companies are at work in three studios on Selznick-Picture productions for release in December and January. The success that followed the presentation of the first Selznick-Picture, Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law" and Herbert Brenon's production, Nazimova in "War Brides," has brought Lewis J. Selznick's new trade-mark into prominence.

The third Selznick-Pictures will present Clara Kimball Young in an adaptation of Thomas Dixon's powerful novel, "The Foolish Virgin." Albert Capellani, director general of the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation and producer of "The Common Law," finished the final scenes of Miss Young's second picture this week at the Biograph studio, and is now cutting and assembling the film. It will probably be released in seven reels, and will be ready for its private exhibition in another week or two.

In "The Foolish Virgin" Miss Young has a strong dramatic role. In the cast will be seen Conway Tearle, who made such a decided success as Miss Young's leading man in "The Common Law," and Paul Capellani, who has been seen in powerful characterizations in a number of Miss Young's greatest pictures.

The Selznick-Pictures offering to follow "The Foolish Virgin" will be, according to the present plans, Joseph M. Schenck's presentation as the president of the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation, of Miss Talmadge in a film version of "Panthea," the drama by Monckton Hoffe, that scored such a tremendous success as presented several seasons ago in Europe and America on the legitimate stage. Miss Talmadge has been working for several weeks on this production under the direction of Allan Dwan at one of the Willett studios, Fort Lee, N. J., and the reports indicate that the picture will be finished by next week.

In "Panthea" Miss Talmadge plays a role of intense emotional character. The part was originally created on the stage in this country by Mme. Olga Petrova.

"The Queen Mother"

Herbert Brenon, whose presentation of Nazimova in "War Brides," has been received with acclamation, is nearing the completion of his second Selznick-Pictures offering, a drama of Italian life in the Middle Ages, temporarily entitled, "The Queen Mother," at his studio on Hudson Heights, N. J. Florence Reed, the brilliant dramatic star of the legitimate stage, becomes a Selznick-Pictures star in this production which for lavishness of settings as well as for its dramatic quality is said to be a worthy successor to "War Brides." It is expected that Mr. Brenon's second contribution to the Selznick output will be ready for release in January.

Robert Warwick, who recently left the World Film Corporation to organize his own producing company of which Harry Rapf is president, is well under way with his first Selznick-Picture, an adaptation of "The Argyle Case." This was the play by Harvey J. O'Higgins, Harriet Ford and the noted detective, William J. Burns, in which Robert Hilliard starred with brilliant success a few seasons ago. Mr. Rapf obtained the picture rights by special arrangement with the authors and Klaw and Erlanger, producers of the original drama. It is a sensational detective story of the realistic sort, and Ralph W. Ince, who has been specially secured by Messrs. Selznick and Rapf to produce this picture, is confident of turning out the best feature of his long career. The Warwick Company is working at the Biograph studio, and is expected to complete the picture in time for its release late in January.

Miss Young begins work this week on the third of her new productions, a film version of the novel, "The Price She Paid," by David Graham Phillips. For this picture Charles Giblyn, formerly with Triangle, was engaged as director in order that Miss Young's time should be continuously occupied, and her output of features increased.

By the time Mr. Giblyn has completed "The Price She Paid," Director General Albert Capellani will not only have finished "The Foolish Virgin," but will have the scenic settings for Miss Young's fourth picture, "The Easiest Way," the famous Eugene Walter play recently secured by Mr. Selznick for the largest sum of money ever paid for the picture rights to a novel or drama.

UNIQUE RAILWAY IN SWISS ALPS CAUGHT BY CAMERAMAN

One of the most celebrated tunnels in the world is that used by the railway through the Alps from Switzerland to Italy, known as the St. Gothard Tunnel. A Gaumont cameraman has followed this twisting, turning railway line and pictured the magnificent views one obtains from the train window, as well as many pictures of the railway itself. Since practically everyone is acquainted with this celebrated feat of mountain engineering, the pictures will make a popular appeal none can resist. The pictures are shown in the new Gaumont single-reel, "Tours Around the World," No. 4, released November 28. They are so beautiful and so important that the entire reel is devoted to them.

The Screen as a Political Weapon

Much of the Success of Governor Whitman's Re-election Due to Griffith's One-Reel Play, "A Day with Governor Whitman"

THE motion picture has proved itself an instrument of strength in politics. In an accounting made last week by John C. Flinn, who was in charge of the distribution throughout the state of New York during the three weeks preceding the recent election of D. W. Griffith's film, entitled "A Day With Governor Whitman," announcement was made that approximately 900,000 persons saw the picture. It was the first time in the political history of New York State that a governor running in a presidential year led the head of his ticket by more than 40,000 votes. To what extent the propaganda, through the channels of the motion picture theatres throughout the state played part in this prerogative, of course, no one can say, but the managers of Governor Whitman's campaign for re-election declare that the industry's tribute to the governor was a most important factor in the campaign.

D. W. Griffith, for years one of the champions of the free screen, was so pleased at the attitude towards the governor's Christman Wheeler bill that when he came to New York early this autumn he volunteered to produce for exhibition throughout New York State a one-reel pictpre entitled "A Day With Governor Whitman," which showed the intimacy between the chief executive at Albany and the men and women citizens of the state. The entire movement for the printing and distribution of this film sprung from a desire on the part of a dozen or more men prominent in the industry to show their appreciation of Governor Whitman's veto of censorship.

Among the companies which participated by contributions, which were collected by Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for the expense involved in printing and distributing the picture, were Metro Pictures Corporation, J. E. Brulatour, Paragon; International Film Service, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Pathe, Triangle, and Universal Companies.

The plan of distributing the film was devised by John C. Flinn and resulted in the exhibition of 100 prints in 790 theatres of the state during the three weeks preceding election. This is considerably more than half of the houses in the state and included the principal theatres of the big cities, such as New York, Buffalo, Albany, Rochester, Syracuse and Utica.

ALICE HOWELL IN RUNAWAY BALLOON

Last week while taking Balloon scenes for the L-Ko's latest feature "The Balloon Bandits," featuring Alice Howell, the balloon with Miss Howell in it, broke away from its hanger and Miss Howell had some joyride in said balloon for over five miles. Due to Miss Howell's presence of mind she was rescued by some kindly farmers by throwing a rope to them and they helped to get her down.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

MAVERICK TERRELL, one of the men responsible for some of the wild gyrations of Charlie Chaplin, will be remembered as having led this page off once before. This time the news to be imparted isn't half as funny as Terrell's biography. Maverick has been married to Rachael E. Marshall. It happened on October 26, and there may be more to be told, but we don't know it.

Where is the man of yesteryear?
Who to his listeners poured
Tales of woe and a trembling fear
That folks would quit Mary Pickford.

Perhaps he is under the same ban with the fellow who said George Cohan would never enter pictures.

Director Paul Powell has been playing the gentle game of "Follow My Leader" with Douglas Fairbanks, and would still be doing it perhaps but a tree got in his way. It all came about from a bet made by Paul that he could emulate any of the agile comedian's tricks. All went well until Doug jumped from a hill to a tree and swung to the ground via a branch. Paul was game and started the trick but he never got further than the tree. He attempted to catch a limb but instead all the limbs caught his limbs and Paul is now spending his time limbering up.

Gloria Payton wrote all the way from California, scoring this paper for calling her a character actress of twenty-seven summers. Our apologies for the mistake and for that which follows are offered:

An ingenue of seventeen
Upon the News doth vent her spleen,
For adding ten long years
To her's. And jibes and jeers
Because she says we meant it.

And so we take this bit of space
To clamber back into her grace.
"Mistakes are bound to happen, see?
But seventeen you'll always be
With us. Miss Payton."

David Horsley has been shocking the Los Angeles natives by traveling about on an autoped which he purchased in New York with the idea of giving to his son. Young Horsley is wondering when his turn will come.

The numerous stories that have appeared in various magazines since the opening of the quail season in California to the effect that Bud Duncan, of Ham comedies, caught the limit of quail the first day of shooting has been verified. Duncan did not kill a bird but found one that someone else had shot and failed to locate. All of the miniature comedian's friends agree with him that his success for the day was the limit, but not flattering with respect to his skill as a hunter.

F. Xavier Bushman and Helen Holmes have allowed us to proceed unmolested even after those reprinted English interviews; so here's another on Grace Cunard:
"When were you born?"
"In the years of Grace—no matter."
"You were born in Paris—how did you come over?"
"Cunard line."
"How are you feeling?"
"Like a square Peg in a round Ring."
"What form of photoplay do you prefer?"
"To be continued in our next."

Reggie Morris, the Keystoner, is bemoaning the fact that his director insists on his kissing Cecile Anderson for the camera, despite the fact that he is married. A discussion of this question might comprise a chapter in "Trials and Tribulations of a Motion Picture Actor."

A drug clerk in a Los Angeles store recently refused to sell Fannie Ward alcohol because he thought her under eighteen years of age. It is said the smile that Miss Ward bestowed upon the clerk is still imprinted on his feverish brain.

Leslie T. Peacocke recently produced seven of his own comedies at Universal City in two weeks' time and by so doing has hung up a new record. The original part about this item is that the pictures are good.

Henry Cole, Vice-President of Bronx Local No. 2, M. P. E. L. of A., introduced all the stars at the reecnt ball given by this organization. Henry's string of trained adjectives never came to its end the whole evening and as a result he is receiving attractive offers from a dozen odd producers to act as press agent.

Will some kind director please bury forever the-pistol-in-the-desk-drawer. It's really getting painful to see—say a broker who has just lost his all in the market stagger into his office or his den, open the drawer and extract a pistol therefrom without even looking to see where it is. If a director who thus exposed his lack of originality went to see his own picture shown to the public, he would speedily reform, for his mortification would be overwhelming as he staggered from the theatre, derisive laughter ruining the dramatic effect of his scene.

Just for the fun of it, the other day we slowly opened our own desk drawer and groped for the pistol. We almost ruined one perfectly good hand on a pair of scissors. Not contented we thought we'd try again when the boss was out, and that time tackled his desk drawer. But instead of a pistol we came upon a cigar—which may still be there for all we know. Pretty soon we're going to take a canvass, a sort of straw vote as it were, and find out how many business men have made all arrangements for easy suicide.

J. G. BLYSTONE

DIRECTOR-GENERAL—L-KO KOMEDIES

Creators of the Greatest C

Mr. J. G. Blystone Director-General of L-KO Komedies, is the man that has been described as "The Man with a million comedy ideas." Mr. Blystone's versatility in the producing of film comedies is amazing. Looking Ahead With The Producers

Universal Program for the Week of November 27 Includes "The Mainspring," Red Feather, Five-Reel Feature, and "The White Turkey"

LEADING the Universal Program for the week of November 27 is the five-reel Red Feather feature production "The Mainspring," with Ben Wilson in the leading male role. The play was scenarioized from a stirring story by Charles Agnew McLean, the editor in chief or rather the supervising editor of all the Street and Smith publications, by William Parker, and the direction by Jack Conway leaves nothing to be desired in any respect. In the supporting cast appear such well-known names as Francelia Billington, Thomas Jefferson, Marc Robbins, C. Benson and R. Whitaker. "The Mainspring" grips from start to finish and contains among other features a wonderfully staged shipwreck that is uncanny in the accuracy of its detail.

Sharing the position at the tops of the program is the sixteenth episode of the serial "Liberty." In this the story is brought just a little nearer to the close, although as yet there is not the slightest indication as to what the end will be. Marie Walcamp, the featured star, in the part of Liberty Horton continues the sterling work that has marked her performance so far. Owing to the illness of Jacques Jaccard, "Liberty" is now being directed by Henry McRae, who will continue with the direction until the close as Jaccard will not be able to finish the film. Among the actors who support Miss Walcamp are Neal Hart, L. M. Wells, Jack Holt, Eddie Polo and G. Raymond Nye.

On November 27 besides the Red Feather already mentioned there will be released under the Nestor Brand a Thanksgiving Special called "The White Turkey," featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. This production which was written by Bess Meredyth and produced by L. W. Chaudet, illustrates the policy of the Universal to be always timely in the choice of subjects for the program.

The Gold Seal three-reel drama to be released on Tuesday, November 28, is entitled "Should She Have Told?" an underworld drama. The players are Edward Hearn, Ruth Clifford and George Beranger.

Wednesday, November 29 is the release date of "The Last of the Morgans," a Laemmle two-reel feature directed by William V. Mong. The play was scenarioized by Mr. Mong from the story of Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude and serves to present Mong himself in a character part. Others in the cast are Nellie Allen, Harry Holden and Wm. Carlock. On the same date there will also be released a one-reel L-Ko comedy called "Eat and Grow Hungry," featuring Phil Dunham. As usual this Wednesday is also the release date for the Universal Animated Weekly with its topics of the day told in an interesting manner.

The Thursday Victor will be omitted on November 30, but the loss will be more than made up for by another Thanksgiving Special entitled "The Mother Call," starring Dorothy Davenport. The story of this one reeler was written by Universal Director Lynn Reynolds and produced by Ruth Ann Baldwin, a newcomer to the Universal staff. In support of Miss Davenport, in this appropriate play, are Mary Talbot, Charles Cummings and George Pearce. Under the Powers Brand on this date there will appear a comedy called "The Fascinating Model," featuring Ed Sedgwick and Belle Bennett with Jay Belasco in the supporting cast. In the same reel will be a short piece of Educational film called "At the Top of the World," showing the beauties of Alaskan scenery. On this date there will also be released a two-reel Special Imp drama of the underworld with King Baggot and Jane Gail in the leading roles, entitled "The Heel of the Law."

"The Mansard Mystery" is a two-reel mystery drama which will be released as an Imp on Friday, December 1. The scenario was by Harvey Gates of the Universal staff from the story by Sylvester Jones and the direction is by Stuart Paton. This is the first Paton production to appear on the program since the completion of the great under water feature, "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." In the cast Neva Gerber is featured and the supporting cast is a strong one, including Howard Crampton, William Quinn, Joseph Girard and Wadsworth Harris. There will be no Rex released on this date, but the L-Ko will be an excellent one reeler entitled "Tattle Tale Alice," starring Alice Howell in the title role. This is well up to the unusually high standard that the L-Ko company strives to maintain.

As a special feature on the above mentioned date there will be released a Special Big U, an Indian drama entitled "The Circle of Death," featuring Mona Darkfeather the Indian actress.

The feature for Saturday, December 2, is a two-reel Bison drama, entitled "The Greater Power." The cast includes Harry S. Griffith, Katherine Griffith, Alice Beice, Ernest Van Pelt and Ervin Denecke. The Laemmle on this date is to be omitted, but the Joker will be released as usual and will be "Scrappily Married," written by Harry Wulze and produced by Universal Director W. W. Beaudine. The featured players are Gale Henry with her inimitable antics and William Franey. A novel plot gives these two great opportunities to make merry as well as showing the rest of the Jokers, Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti, to good advantage.

ARABIAN PICTURE FOR LENORE ULRICH

As its next Lenore Ulrich subject on the Paramount Program, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces "The Road to Love," a story of Algeria, by Blanche Dougan Cole, adapted to the screen by Gardner Hunting.

In this production the popular star of the screen and stage appears as Hafsa, the daughter of an Arabian chief who loves a young American against the wishes of her father. Her love is reciprocated but her sweetheart is captured by her angry father and sent away to be sold as a slave. The unfolding of the story displays many dramatic situations in which Miss Ulrich is called upon to put forth her best histrionic efforts.

Various artistic effects have been secured in the elaborate Arabian settings of the story and sunset desert scenes.

Scott Sidney produced "The Road to Love" with the assistance of an expert technical force, including James Van Trees, who supervised the photography.

In the chief supporting character to Miss Ulrich is Colin Chase. Lucile Ward appears in the role of Lella Sadiya. Others in the large cast include Estelle Allen, Alfred Vosburgh, Henschel Mayall, Joe Massey and Alfred Longsworth. The photoplay will be released on the Paramount Program early next month.

VIOLA DANA GOES TO WILKESBARRE FOR LOCATION WORK IN NEW METRO PLAY

Viola Dana and the company supporting her in the forthcoming Metro-Columbia feature, "Threads of Fate," have gone to Wilkesbarre, Pa., to take scenes incidental to the struggle between capital and labor, as shown in the play. Eugene Nowland, who is directing the production, made the choice of a location, considering Wilkesbarre and its environs ideal for the purposes of the Richard Barry play.

Mr. Nowland's assistant director, Harry Franklin, with Cameraman John Arnold and Assistant Cameraman Cunningham, went ahead to make arrangements for the party, which consists of Miss Dana, Nellie Grant, who was seen with the star in "The Flower of No Man's Land"; Helen Strickland, Augustus Phillips, the Elder Joseph of Miss Dana's Metro-Columbia production, "The Gates of Eden," directed by John H. Collins, and others.

Convicts Get Cash for Criticizing "Bought and Paid For"—Think Murder of Mother Would Add Realism

THIRTY-TWO inmates of Great Meadow Prison, at Comstock, New York, wrote and submitted criticisms of "Bought and Paid For," the World-Brady picture play which had its initial production in that institution on Election Day. These criticisms had been invited by William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, who offered a prize of $50 for the best review of the picture, $25 for the second best, $10 for the third, and $5 each for the next three.

Most of the manuscripts were highly laudatory, but one writer thought it was wrong to produce the play in such a place, where "about five per cent. of the men understood the rottenness displayed in the character of the leading man." Another criticism was written in quite good German. The briefest was a "knock" as follows:

"When the mother while posing dead, her heart was beating," showing a sad oversight on the part of Director Harley Knoles, who probably never thought of ordering the actress to suspend her vital organs during the scene.

In thanking Mr. Brady on behalf of the men, the librarian of the prison wrote: "In over three years of picture shows at Great Meadow, 'Bought and Paid For' is the best picture we have ever seen. May I congratulate you on what you are doing for the motion picture business in raising such a standard of quality?"

The winning reviews, in their order of merit, as decided by Mr. Brady and James L. Hoff have been announced.

"Tours Around the World," No. 3, Takes Spectators to Cairo, Egypt; Antwerp, Belgium, and the Gorges of the Vesubie River

THE third issue of "Tours Around the World" presents three interesting sections for travelers who view the world from a comfortable chair in a motion picture theatre. First come pictures of Cairo, Egypt. This city leads itself admirably to representation on the screen, since the architecture, the varied street life, the costumes of the various tribes and races, and the markets are full of pictorial color. The view includes Opera Square, the Citadel, erected in 1166; Mosque of Saida Zenab, Arab types, and typical streets and street scenes.

Antwerp, Belgium's chief seaport and a center of commerce before the war, provides entertaining scenes of city life before the present conflict. Since the city has been spared the horrors of a siege, the pictures portray it architecturally just as it is today. One of the best pictures is of the Cathedral, a building begun in the fourteenth century. The Furniture Market and the Dog Market are places of interest for all visitors. There are pictures of the Corporation Houses and of the celebrated harbor, and many more of ancient and historical note.

IRRIGATION THE THEME OF "'FRISCO" EPISODE

The billion dollar Los Angeles Aqueduct forms a realistic background for the episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco" on which Director James W. Horne is now at work. Marin Sais and True Boardman will be the leads in this story, "The Fight for Paradise Valley" which has for its theme the marvelous irrigation systems in Southern California. Director Horne has secured some wonderful photographic gems in the picture, and it is promised that without detracting from the story a thorough idea of the immensity of the irrigation projects of the Southwest is given in the action of the two reels.

Others in the cast of the "'Frisco" episode in addition to the two stars include Ronald Bradbury, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, Hart Hoxie and Karl Formes, Jr.

EDISON'S "THE COSSACK WHIP" IS SET IN LAND OF MYSTERY AND INTRIGUE

Russia, the land of mystery and intrigue, furnishes the background for Edison's latest feature success "The Cossack Whip," in which Viola Dana is starred. As the first scene flashes on the screen, a long line of prisoners is seen winding across the snow-covered Russian steppes toward Siberia. A band of Revolutionists attacks the Cossack guard, and in the confusion a number of prisoners escape. Turov, Prefect of Police, orders the whole district raided that he may capture and punish the perpetrators of the attack.

Among the victims is Katerina Sasha, but her younger sister Darya escapes the raiders. Over her dead sister's body, Darya swears revenge, and then follows a story of unusual gripping force, telling how Darya, having become a favorite dancer of the Imperial Ballet, brings the brutal Turov to her feet and accomplishes her revenge; and how, a little later, she flees Russia and makes her way to America with the man she loves. The story is replete with beautiful scenes.

Dorothy Gish, Clara Williams, and William Desmond Triangle Stars for Week of December 2

DOROTHY GISH, Clara Williams and William Desmond are the stars of the Triangle feature releases for the week of December 2nd. Dorothy Gish appears in a Fine Arts production of life among the Virginia mountains, entitled "Children of the Feud," written for her by Bernard McConville and directed by Joseph Henabery. Clara Williams and William Desmond are co-starred in a Kay Bee drama from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Criminal," directed by Reginald Barker.

In "Children of the Feud" Miss Gish takes the part of Peggy Clayton, the daughter of a moonshiner. Peggy's father has engaged her to his partner and nephew, Jed Martin. Peggy, however, falls in love with a young doctor, the son of Judge Cavanaugh. The illicit still operated by Clayton and Martin is raided and they are sent to prison. Upon completing their sentence, however, they come out vowing vengeance upon their ancient enemies, the Jacksons, who furnished the information leading to their arrest. Dr. Cavanaugh pleads with Peggy to prevent her father and cousin from carrying on the feud, but she quarrels with him. Martin swears that he will "get" the doctor for interfering. Peggy sends a message to the sheriff to prevent Martin from carrying out his threat. Martin kills the deputy who comes to arrest him. As a result the court is shot up and the Judge himself killed. A reign of terror ensues. The doctor, forgetting his law-abiding principals, pursues Martin and is only prevented from shooting down the murderer by Peggy, who quotes his own words to him.

"The Criminal" is a story of Naneta, a beautiful Italian girl, born outside the pale of conventionality, and consequently destined for a life of petty persecutions. She is sent to America by her hard-fisted foster parents to enter the employ of an old restaurant keeper of the East Side of New York. A ray of sunlight and happiness comes into her life, however, when Donald White, a young short story writer, played by William Desmond, decides to gather atmosphere and eat spaghetti at Lupoli's. One night, when returning home, Naneta discovers a baby that has been left in the hallway by its mother. She adopts the little mite, and shows the note that its mother had pinned on the baby to White. Several children are kidnapped and Naneta is arrested on suspicion.

Pauline Frederick Is Chief Star on Paramount Program for Week of November 27—All Star Cast in "Martyrdom of Philip Strong"

CANADIAN woods will serve as a background for the thrilling photoplay "Nanette of the Wilds," a Paramount picture produced by Famous Players, in which Pauline Frederick will be starred and hold sway on the Paramount program for the week of November 27. The other feature for this week will be "The Martyrdom of Philip Strong," which is founded on the works of the Reverend Charles M. Sheldon, "In His Steps," and "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong."

This week marks the return of Pauline Frederick to the screen under her new contract recently signed with the Famous Players, and it will be the first time that she has been seen since her exceptional production of "Ashes of Embers." "Nanette of the Wilds" is a tale of the celebrated North West Mounted Police, written by Willard Mack, the well known author and actor who plays opposite Miss Frederick, the production having been made under the direction of Joseph Kaufman.

The role of Nanette is one of the most difficult that Miss Frederick has ever been required to play, it being that of a girl of the wilds, uncouth, unkempt, dressed in rags with her hair streaming, lacking all the little feminine touches and adornments which are so dear to the heart of every girl, and upon which so many of them rely for a large measure of their personal attractiveness.

In addition to Mr. Mack, those who appear in support of Miss Frederick are, Charles Brand, Frank Joyner, Wallace M. Dudley, Macey Harlan, Daniel Pennell, Jean Stewart and Robert Courville.

The adaptation for the screen of Rev. Charles M. Sheldon's two famous books, to be featured under the name of "The Martyrdom of Philip Strong," was made especially for Paramount with an all star cast, directed by Richard Ridgely and tells the story of Philip Strong, a rising young pastor of a fashionable church who symbolizes the spirit of Christ on this earth and addresses his fellow men, "Man, you are a living lie," which phrase he suddenly realizes the force of, while surrounded by luxury and lionized by a wealthy congregation.

The character of Philip Strong is portrayed by Robert Conners who is supported by the following all-star cast: Mabel Trunnell, Janet Dawley, Bigelow Cooper, Helen Strickland, Frank Lyons, William Wadsworth, Herbert Prior, Olive Wright, Edith Wright, and Brad Sutton.

Surrounding the Paramount Program for the week of November 27, are four "little features"; the 42nd edition of the magazine-on-the-screen, the Paramount Pictographs; the 43rd of the series of the "Weekly Trips Around the World," personally conducted by Burton Holmes, the world's greatest traveler, in which he gives intimate scenes of the "Real Streets of Cairo"; a Paramount-Bray cartoon from the pen of L. M. Glackens, entitled "What Happened to Willie," and the Paramount-Black Diamond comedy, "Their Counterfeit Vacation."

Four subjects are treated in the Paramount Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen" this week, the leading subject being the war pictures secured exclusively for Paramount by Donald C. Thompson, the most successful of war photographers, who recently returned to this country with the most intimate views of the "war of nations."

Another subject in the Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, is shown in "Why the Apple Tree is Crooked," and picturing how trees are grafted, and mothered, from the time of their youth in the modern nursery. There is also a section showing that in Nature's garden there are enemies more vicious than those in the world of men, the principal victims being the valuable shade trees in America, which are pestered each year by insect depredations. The closing feature is the picturing of the manner in which New York and other large cities in the United States are kept supplied with water adequate to meet the demands of drinkers and those who take daily baths, and also to keep a sufficiently large supply in case of fire.

TRIANGLE-KAY BEE TO FILM "SUDDEN JIM"

Clarence Budington Kelland's "Sudden Jim," the serial which has been attracting wide attention in the Saturday Evening Post, is to be visualized at the Triangle-Kay Bee studios. The screen rights have just been secured.

The story of "Sudden Jim" deals with the strenuous and red-blooded life of the lumber country of the Northwest. A rich man's son has been given the choice between accepting fifty thousand cash, or taking over the clothespin, wooden bowl and potato masher factory established by his father. The spendthrift has shrewdness enough to realize that the fifty thousand will not go far, and so he decided to devote his life to clothespins. This brings him to the scene of the factory, a frontier town, unpainted and forlorn, on the edge of the big Northwestern forests.

The action revolves around his fight with the wooden ware trust. His enemies fill his logs with iron spikes to break his saws, and finally they burn down the trestles of the railway which carries his logs from the forest. But the rich man's son meets every obstacle with promptness and courage, such promptness, indeed, that the Northwesterners name him "Sudden Jim." It is distinctly a story of the strenuous side of life, the love interest being but a minor thread of the theme.

ETHEL GRANDIN RECEIVES MUCH PRAISE

In the sixteen episode photoplay "The Crimson Stain Mystery" Miss Grandin, in the role of Florence Montrose, daughter of the scientist whose discovery is responsible for the great city's chaotic conditions, has been accorded the greatest histrionic opportunity of her entire career. The role of the motherless daughter calls for some exceptionally fine acting, and it is only to the credit of Miss Grandin to say that she has risen ably to her part.

Miss Grandin has received expressions of delight and appreciation of her work in "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

"THEIR COUNTERFEIT VACATION" IS A BLACK DIAMOND COMEDY

The next single-reel comedy release to be issued by Paramount will be on November 27, when "Their Counterfeit Vacation," a Black Diamond Comedy produced by the U. S. Motion Pictures Corporation, will be issued. The story of the comedy has to do with two men who are in the employ of the city, a sweeper and a dirt collector.

"Wrath," Fifth Offering in McClure Series, Unusually Strong Emotional Story of Russian Life and Intrigue

RUSSIAN bureaucracy, statecraft, mystery, cruelty, chivalry, wrath and tenderness are all present in "Wrath," the fifth of the McClure series, Seven Deadly Sins, and all are portrayed by H. B. Warner, the latest McClure star, who plays the dual role of a Russian grand duke, the chief exemplar of "Wrath," and his son. The latter spurns a Russian countess to marry a beautiful American girl, and in the end achieves with his young wife a victory for American principles.

The action of "Wrath" opens in a remote Russian province, where the wild life of the Tartar tribes furnishes a weird and novel setting for this romance of an adventurous American girl, who is rescued from a savage khan by the grand duke's son.

The two fall in love. There is an intercepted elopement. The grand duke, infuriated at his son for rejecting the high-born bride he has chosen for him, sentences him to imprisonment in a dungeon. The young wife is sent to America, and she and her child are kept under espionage by secret agents.

Years pass. By a strange series of events, mother and child come into control of a company that has secured immense war orders from the Russian government. The fulfillment of these contracts is vitally necessary to the Russian government in a crucial stage of the great war, and so the power of the Russian grand duke, backed by the might of the Russian government, is hurled across the Atlantic in an attempt to crush the women, who holds the fate of Russia in her grasp.

The tremendous episodes, and the wide range of emotions portrayed make this role perhaps the greatest part a male actor has ever played for the films, and those who have seen Mr. Warner's work in Alias Jimmy Valentine, on the legitimate stage, and in The Beggar of Cawnpore, The Market of Vain Desire, The Vagabond Prince, Shell 43 and The Raiders in the films, are confident that in both acting and play, film history will be made.

BRADY TO ANNOUNCE NEW STAR

William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, expects to announce the engagement of a beautiful star of international celebrity within the next few weeks. This picture producing company will specialize in female stars hereafter, and has a very good start with Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton, Gail Kane, Marie Dressler, Gerda Holmes, Muriel Ostriche and June Elvidge.

HEARST PHOTOGRAPHER GOES TO JAPAN AND CHINA

C. J. Hubbell, one of the foremost scenic photographers in the country, sailed from San Francisco last week on an extended tour of the Orient, where he will make moving pictures for the Hearst International News Pictorial.

Mr. Hubbell will visit Honolulu, Japan and China. In all of these countries he will penetrate the interior, securing pictures of places that have never before been shown on the screen. Pictures will be made of Pali Mountain in Honolulu, of the wonderful chrysanthemum gardens of Japan, the celebrated Fujiyama Mountain, Picture Island, declared to be one of the most beautiful spots on earth, and scenes of the copper mines, the mausoleums and temples of former rulers of Japan and the Sacred Bridge of Tokyo. There will be pictures from Korea and Manchuria, as well as from the mysterious cities of the interior of China, many of which have never before been visited by a white man.

The negatives will be forwarded by Mr. Hubbell as fast as they are taken, and will soon be shown in the Hearst International News Pictorial.

FIRST "ADVENTURE" THRILLER, ONE OF CIRCUS LIFE

"The Jockey of Death," the first of the International's Adventure Series, will be released throughout the country on Nov. 15. "The Jockey of Death" is a story of circus life, but it also tells in a clean, wholesome way a beautiful romance in which a little circus rider, who is in reality a countess, is restored to her ancestral estate, of which she has been deprived by an unscrupulous relative.

The principal roles in "The Jockey of Death" are portrayed by Mlle. Evelyn and M. Arturo, both of whom before their entrance into motion pictures were members of one of the most famous circuses in the world.

"THE TRAVELLING SALESMAN" TO BE PRODUCED BY KAUFMAN

Contrary to the erroneous report that he was directing Pauline Frederick in "Nanette of the Wilds," Joseph Kaufman is presiding over Frank McIntyre's screen debut in the Famous Players adaptation of that well-known star's stage success, "The Travelling Salesman." Mr. Kaufman originally intended to direct the Frederick production, but after he had worked several days in preparing the script and determining upon locations, it was found expedient to place him in charge of "The Travelling Salesman," as McIntyre found himself at liberty to begin work on the adaptation sooner than he expected.

JUNE CAPRICE BEGINS FIFTH VEHICLE FOR FOX

June Caprice completed her fourth photoplay for William Fox last week, and began work on her fifth. With a single exception, Miss Caprice's supporting cast will be entirely new to William Fox pictures.

Stuart Holmes is another William Fox star, who has commenced acting in another photoplay—one which will be, without question, a really notable production.

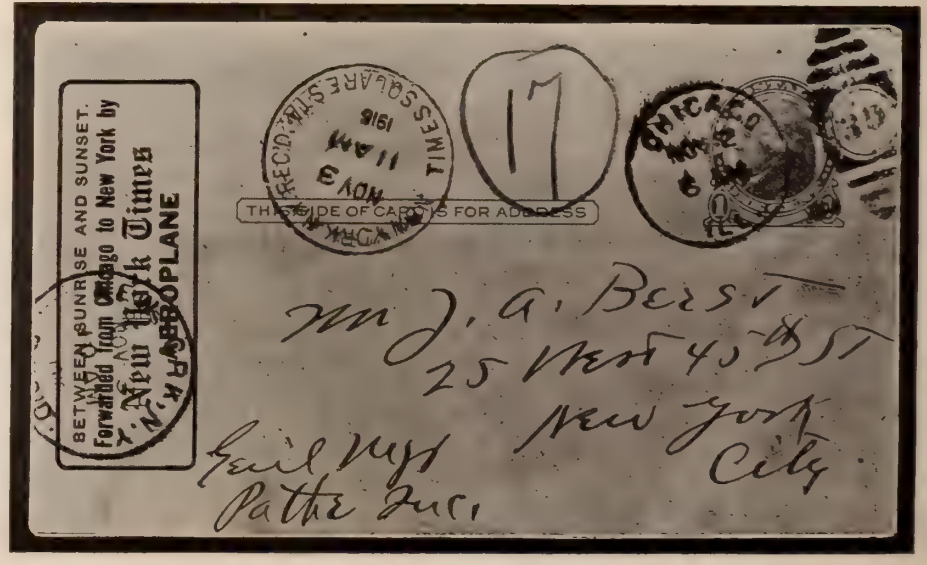
Mary Nash in Pathe's "Arms and the Woman"

IN "Arms and the Woman," the Gold Rooster Play for November 26, Mary Nash is seen for the first time in a Pathe picture. Miss Nash, who is now starring on Broadway in "The Man Who Came Back," is recognized as being one of the most talented leading women of the day. Under the able direction of George Fitzmaurice, she proves herself to be a screen star of unusual merit.

Miss Nash is an Albany girl and though young in years her natural dramatic ability has been ripened by experience in some of the best plays and with some of the best theatrical companies of recent years. She was leading woman with Andrew Mark in "Arrah Na Pogue;" she played the "girl" in "The Lure" and had the title role in "The Woman;" she was in "The Truant" and starred in "The Ohio Lady." She made her big hit in "The City." She also played a season in repertoire with Grace George at "The Playhouse."

"Arms and the Woman" is a story of to-day, tense and timely. It is based upon the manufacture of munitions in this country for the European nations at war and tells of a young Hungarian girl who emigrates to this country and through the kindness of a wealthy manufacturer lifts herself out of her sordid surroundings and becomes a talented charming woman.

Falling in love with her benefactor she marries him and then comes to realize that his business is that of furnishing guns to the enemies of her country. Her brother Carl, a man of anarchistic tendencies, is delegated by his countrymen to kill his sister's husband. From then on the girl is the prey of conflicting emotions. How she finds herself at last and wins happiness is most dramatically told.



Mr. Fitzmaurice has, as an Astra director, made a picture which ranks well with his previous successes, "Via Wireless," "New York," "At Bay" and "The Test."

TRIANGLE-KAY BEE PLAYERS WILL ENJOY MUSIC WHILE THEY WORK

In filming the first Enid Bennett vehicle —a story that tells of a blind girl who lives in a world of her own ideal creation—Director Charles Miller of the Triangle-Kay Bee studios has found it necessary to keep an orchestra in almost constant commission to assist in producing the delicate and elusive atmosphere associated with the acting of a fairy tale.

CHANGE IN CHRISTIE BUSINESS PLANS

Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, who is at present in New York, announces that in future all business for the Christie comedies for New York City will be transacted from the headquarters of the concern in Los Angeles. "A MESSAGE TO GARCIA" FILMED

George Kleine announces the coming of Edison's film version of "A Message to Garcia" through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, week of December 11. The photoplay is based on the preachment of that name by Elbert Hubbard, the famous American writer and philosopher, who lost his life in the sinking of the Lusitania. The picture story is said to have adhered closely to the spirit of the widely read bit of literature upon which it was founded.

The exterior scenes of "A Message to Garcia" were made in Cuba, where a company of Edison players, headed by Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness, spent several months under the direction of Richard Ridgeley.

BALSHOFER TRIES NEW LIGHTING EFFECTS

The Belasco idea of staging certain scenes in different lights, thereby suggesting to the audience the spirit of the action, be it sombre or cheerful, is being introduced in motion pictures by producer Fred J. Balshofer, and will be seen in the Metro-Yorke production of Harold McGrath's "Pidgin Island," starring Harold Lockwood and May Allison. In the underworld scenes the dingy, congested atmosphere is suggested by lighting that symbolizes this description, and is greatly contrasted with the exterior sea coast scenes. Mr. Balshofer is a photographic expert, having started in the profession first as a cameraman.

FOX STAR WILL GO HOME TO BALL!

Because of the unusual popularity of the popular Stuart Holmes and June Caprice in Boston, these two William Fox stars will appear in person at the annual ball of the New England Exhibitors' League on November 22.

Miss Caprice, as all the world knows, is an Hubbite (or an Hubbess) herself.

Police and Newspaper Stuff in Films Praised by Those Who Know

A GATHERING of New York police reporters last week placed their O. K. on "Grant, Police Reporter" the one-reel Kalem series, featuring Daredevil George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby. The press men were the guests of Robert Welles Ritchie, author of the series, at a private exhibition of four of the episodes in the Kalem projection room. Mr. Ritchie, before becoming prominent as a writer of fiction, was on the staffs of The New York Sun and The New York World.

"Grant is a sure-enough reporter in appearance and actions," said F. H. Denny, of the Newsfeatures Syndicate, in expressing the opinion of the gatheing. "Your printed newspaper inserts and handling of the newspaper office scenes are the best that I have ever seen on the screen. Newspaper men usually get a good laugh when they see a picture director's idea of what a reporter looks like and a bigger laugh at the near-city editors and local rooms. Kalem appears to be the first company to discover that there are such things as a morgue room, rewrite men, and so on. There's only one thing wrong—you'll have to show me the reporter who will do the dare-devil stunts that you put up to Grant in each story. I'll resign my job to-morrow if they call on me to risk my neck and bones in that reckless way."

The newspaper men were particularly pleased when they saw that each episode of the series was based on real happenings in New York newspaper records. Most of those present had themselves worked on the different cases used as the basis of the film plots. The episodes presented at the private exhibition included "The Rogue's Pawn," "The House of Three Deuces," "The Wizard's Plot" and "The Trunk Mystery."

Among those present at the showing were Fred Sullivan, L. H. Hall, Redfield Ingalls, Frank Malloy, F. H. Denny, William Clark and James McGrath. The gathering included men from the World, Herald, City News Association, Sun and Journal.

Marguerite Clark Again to Star in "Snow White"

ONE of the biggest film events of the year will be the presentation by the Famous Players Film Company of Marguerite Clark in an adaptation of "Snow White," the Grimm fairy tale in the dramatization of which she created a veritable sensation on the stage. In accordance with its annual custom of making some special recognition of the Christmas holiday season in its release schedule, the Famous Players Company has set Christmas Day as the date for the appearance of the picture on the Paramount Program.

It will be remembered that Miss Clark appeared in an adaptation of Mark Twain's great story, "The Prince and the Pauper" last Christmas, and that the year before found Mary Pickford starring in "Cinderella" at that season of the year.

It was under the personal direction of Winthrop Ames that Miss Clark starred in the stage version of "Snow White," and it is therefore of particular interest to note that Mr. Ames has consented to give his personal assistance and advice in the converting of the play into a motion picture. The first tangible instance of the interest which Mr. Ames is to take in the picture may be found in the fact that he is going to supply the Famous Players with the original costumes which were used in the stage presentation. As these costumes were especially commended for their appropriateness and beauty at the time, they will undoubtedly form an effective part in the beauty of the production.

When "Snow White" was produced at the Little Theatre, Marguerite Clark was declared by the critics to have been an ideal Princess, her personal charm making her immeasurably attractive in addition to the delightfully useful little character which she portrayed with such vivacity.

"Snow White" is of course a story that appeals directly to the young at heart, for it is delightfully unsophisticated and completely untheatrical in its tenor. Though the story was a great success on the stage, the wider latitude afforded the motion picture director in the staging of a fairy story and the fact that he can employ the camera in obtaining many effects which even the genius of the stage producer cannot evolve, will insure an even more satisfactory photoplay adaptation of the Grimm story than the stage version proved to be.

It is predicted by the Famous Players that "Snow White" will prove one of the greatest drawing cards that the exhibitor has ever had, especially for children's matinees. Miss Clark, after "The Prince and the Pauper," "Little Lady Eileen" and "Molly Make-Believe," is as great a favorite with the kiddies as she is with the grown-ups, and the story being one which the great majority of them have read and love, the production will undoubtedly prove universal in its appeal.

The harsher portions of the tale have been modified somewhat and everything has been done to enhance the beauty of that part of the story in which Snow White appears in person.

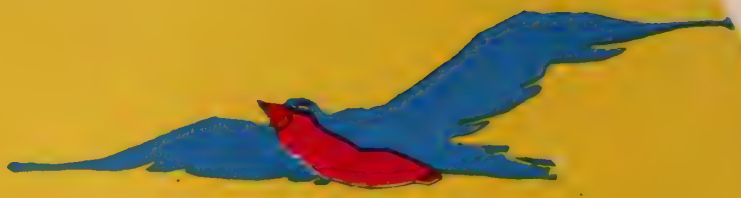
FRANK DANIELS COMMITS LESE MAJESTE

A forthcoming picture from the Vitagraph studio will be a comedy in which Frank Daniels takes the stellar role. The celebrated comic opera humorist will play the shoemaker of Koepenick.

A dozen years ago the world rolled in mirth at the antics of an obscure shoemaker of a small German village who in a moment of unparalleled daring dressed himself as a high officer of the German army, visited a garrison, took charge of it, had himself wined and dined by the burgomaster and elite of the town and, to cap the climax, had the payroll of the garrison turned over to him—everyone believing him to be what he was. After a riotous week of fun the exposure came, and the poor shoemaker was stripped of his shoulder straps and replenished purse and thrown into prison. But universal laughter greeted his escapade, and his delicious adventure made him a general hero.

Van Dyke Brooke has written a scenario based on this actual happening and is directing Daniels in it. Supporting the star are Anna Brody as the shoemaker's wife, and Miss Mildred Manning as a pretty, flirtatious village girl.



"WAR BRIDES" IN SECOND WEEK

HERBERT BRENON'S photodramatic presentation of Nazimova in "War Brides" has entered its second week at the Broadway theatre, New York. Since its opening, this Selznick picture has created a sensation, playing to two large audiences each day. In fact Nazimova's entrance into motion pictures under the direction of Herbert Brenon has caused demonstrations of approval seldom witnessed in New York.

Marion Craig Wentworth's original play has undergone considerable expansion in the hands of Mr. Brenon. The story has been made into a social and domestic panorama of war's effects upon life behind the battle lines—upon its women, children and disabled men.

"He (Mr. Brenon) seems to have succeeded in imparting a swiftness of action to the production which carries it on wonderfully and carries the spectator with it.

"THE ROGUE'S PAWN" IS FOURTH OF "GRANT" EPISODES FROM KALEM

DARE-DEVIL George Larkin featured in the "Grant, Police Reporter" series with Ollie Kirkby, is now dividing attention in the Kalem list of releases with the "Girl from 'Frisco" series presenting Marin Sais and True Boardman in the leading roles. Kalem announces that two late November releases in the newspaper series are now in final shape.

"The Rogue's Pawn," fourth of the "Grant" episodes, is scheduled for Friday, November 17, on the General Film program. Ollie Kirkby is seen in this one-reeler as the daughter of the police commissioner. She is the innocent tool of Chitsworth, a well-known gambler, and becomes trapped in the gambling place when fire breaks out.

One of the thrilling scenes finds Larkin, in an effort to rescue Miss Kirkby, swinging hand over hand across the telephone wires stretched between the roof-tops. In mid-air, the wires snap under his weight, and Larkin is catapulted into the flaming building.

The Kalem thriller is followed on the "Grant" schedule by "The House of Three Deuces," released Friday, November 24. In this, the fifth episode of the one-reel series by Robert Welles Ritchie, one of the sensational moments comes when Larkin and Robert Ellis, the latter in a "heavy" role, are seen struggling on a fire escape which suddenly collapses under their weight. Larkin, by his work in this series, seems certain to eclipse his past record for daredevil screen performances.

"The Girl from 'Frisco" episodes released in mid-November also contain their quota of thrills. "The Mystery of the Brass Bound Chest," issued on Wednesday, November 15, finds Barbara Brent, portrayed by Marin Sais, enmeshed in the activities of an Armenian secret society. It is preceded in the "Girl from 'Frisco" list by "The Witch of the Dark House," in which a counterfeiting gang is the center of the activity.

"Rival Fakers" and "The New Salesman" are two novel "Ham Comedies" found on the November schedule. Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch are seen in the principal parts in these subjects. "Rival Fakers" finds Ethel and Henry as rival sellers of a miraculous syrup, while Ham and Bud as hotel bell-hops play an active part in their schemes. Ham and Bud as salesmen in a department store furnish a surplus of comedy for "The New Salesman."

The two-year-old "Hazards of Helen" series celebrates anniversary month with the release of "The Runaway Sleeper" on Saturday, November 18, and "The Forgotten Train Order" on Saturday, November 25.

RAOUL WINS JEWEL FROM FAIRBANKS

Jewel Carmen, lately associated with Douglas Fairbanks in photoplays, who has just joined the William Fox screen forces, has been assigned to a leading part in a new production which director R. A. Walsh is making on the Pacific Coast.

This is Director Walsh's first picture since he completed "The Honor System."

Jane Grey, Star of the International's New Golden Eagle Feature, "When My Ship Comes In," from the Novel of Gouverneur Morris

"WITHIN THE LAW" IS COMPLETED AT VITAGRAPH STUDIOS

Work has been completed at the Vitagraph studio on the picturization or film adaptation of "Within the Law," the great legitimate stage success by Bayard Veiller. It is now ready for production by Director Wm. P. S. Earle, with a notable cast of Vitagraph screen stars, headed by Alice Joyce and Harry Morey. The task of writing the scenario has been in the hands of Eugene Mullin of Scenario Editor J. E. Brady's staff. Mr. Mullin, who has also served Vitagraph as a director of Broadway Star features, speaks in glowing terms of the possibilities of the story for screen presentation.

The well-known parts of Inspector Burke and Detective Cassidy will be played by two recruits to the screen drama who had conspicuous success in those roles in the stage production, respectively, Eugene O'Rourke and Johnny O'Meara.

Four-Chapter Sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" Scheduled for Release on Mutual Program November 27

A FOUR-chapter sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," the big sixty-reel photonovel of 1914-15, is announced by the Mutual Film Corporation. The first chapter of the sequel will be available to exhibitors on and after November 27. Each chapter is in two parts.

The American Film Company, Inc., producers, is to pay the author of the sequel idea the sum of $10,000 for the plot. The winner, chosen some weeks ago, will be announced to the public on the screen coincident with, and in the fourth chapter of the sequel.

The total scenario costs of "The Diamond from the Sky" and "The Sequel to the Diamond from the Sky" are thus brought to the remarkable total of $20,000—which is declared by the Mutual to be the highest sum ever paid for a motion picture script. It will be recalled that Roy L. McCardell, of New York, was paid $10,000 for the script of "The Diamond from the Sky," when his manuscript was selected out of a total of 19,301 submitted in the contest.

The sequel contest resulted in more than thirty thousand scripts, hundreds among them offering unique and acceptable ideas. The decision of the judges who represented the American Film Company, Inc., the Mutual Film Corporation and the Chicago Tribune, was a particularly difficult one, reached only after long sessions and hot debates.

The Chicago Tribune will publish and syndicate the novelization of "The Sequel to the Diamond from the Sky." "The Diamond from the Sky" was published in serial form in more than three hundred of America's leading newspapers. It is probable that all of these newspapers will publish the sequel, since because of its remarkable exploitation the "Diamond" and the "Sequel" have an extraordinary publication value.

Second Dickens Novel to Be Adapted by Paramount Producers —"Great Expectations" by Famous Players

THE late Charles Dickens seemed destined to enjoy as great a popularity upon the screen as he did in type. Following the announcement that the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company would make an adaptation of "Oliver Twist" with Marie Doro in the stellar role, there comes the news that Lasky's ally on the Paramount Program, the Famous Players Film Company, will co-star Louise Huff and Jack Pickford in an adaptation of "Great Expectations." The latter novel has, like "Oliver Twist," been dramatized and presented on the stage, W. S. Gilbert having adapted a play which was first presented at the Court theatre in 1871.

The adaptation of "Oliver Twist" revives the memory of the ancient controversy between George Cruikshank, the celebrated caricaturist who illustrated the original "Adventures of Oliver Twist" as they were printed in Bentley's Magazine in 1837 and 1838, and the staunch admirers of Dickens. It will be remembered that the illustrator, upon the death of the author, claimed that it was his pen and ink pictures of the characters in the tale which inspired Dickens to write the completed version of the story.

This assertion on the part of Cruikshank has always been vigorously denied by the admirers of Dickens and remains to this day a matter of debate. Regardless of the truth of the artist's claim, it is not to be denied that the drawings which he made are indeed almost photographic replicas of the characters as Dickens described them and that they portray the people of the book to the very life.

Because of the unusual interest which has always centered about the Cruikshank drawings, the Lasky Company procured a copy of the first edition of the book and used the drawings as models for the make-up of the principals in the cast—Marie Doro, Tully Marshall, Hobart Bosworth, Raymond Hatton, James Neill and some of the other notables who are included in the list—while some of the minor characters were selected because of their conformity with Cruikshank's sketches.

The settings for many of the scenes are replicas modeled from the original drawings and other authoritative data compiled concerning London at the time of which Dickens wrote. Pursuing the same course a step farther, Director James Young has produced in his groupings on the screen the actual scenes as they occur in the illustrations of the book, notable among them being the famous incident in which Oliver is depicted in the act of asking the master of the poor house for more gruel.

CLIFFORD BRUCE CHOSEN FOR STAR PART IN McCLURE'S "PASSION"

The sixth of the McClure series of pictures to be released under the general title of "Seven Deadly Sins," will be called "The Sin of Passion" and Clifford Bruce has been selected to portray the chief role, that of Passion. Mr. Bruce was chosen because of his extraordinary masculine qualities and physique.

Mr. Bruce's role in the play goes under the name of Leonidas. The story has to do with the fascination that the giant Leonidas exercises over a beautiful and refined young girl and with her endeavors to free herself from an influence which her better self tells her will result in degradation. In the end Leonidas meets his Waterloo and the giant stands revealed to the girl as a pigmy of moral purpose.

There are several big scenes in the picture, one of them being staged in Madison Square Garden, New York, where Leonidas appears as "The Masked Marvel" and before the eyes of the captivated girl wins the wrestling championship of the world. Shirely Mason and George Le Guere have the other leading roles in this episode.

Large Array of Names in Lasky Release, "The Victoria Cross"

THE Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company's Paramount release for December 14 will come to the screen flanked by a remarkable array of names. The picture itself is an adaptation of Paul Potter's celebrated play "The Victoria Cross," which has been tremendously successful on the stage and represents only one of many well-known plays by this distinguished author.

The great Lou-Tellegen is the star and among the supporting cast there appear the names of at least two players who are stars in their own right—Cleo Ridgely, who has been co-starring successfully with Wallace Reid, and Sessue Hayakawa, the celebrated Japanese star who recently appeared in "The Soul of Kura-San." Mabel Van Buren and Ernest Joy are two other well-known names that appear in the cast. The production was staged under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint.

The events of the story are based largely upon actual historic occurrences during the famous Indian Mutiny of 1857. It is a thrilling tale, full of action, and has been very effectively staged in the hill country of California, which is so ideally suited to serve as an "Indian" background.

Ralph Seton, the young British officer played by Lou-Tellegen, has been stationed at Cawnpore so long that he is becoming frightfully bored and is gradually slipping into the ways of the natives. He is fascinated by the Princess Adala, the half-sister of the Mahratta, who is very attractive after the manner of the native.

Azimoolah, the native commander of troops, is very active in the fomenting of the rebellion against the British conquerors and sees in the princess a chance of getting at least one British officer out of the way when the time for the revolt comes.

Azimoolah's plans work perfectly and the Sepoys get possession of the stores, only to be driven out by the unexpected arrival of Sir Allan Strathallan, his daughter Joan, and a large bodyguard. Seton is in disgrace for having been tricked and John heartily disapproves of the fact that his interest in the princess was one of the chief causes of his downfall. The crafty Azimoolah, having perfected plans for coping with the garrison in full now treacherously surrounds the barracks and coops up the entire English colony. Joan has been captured and brought before the Mahratta, who has cast envious eyes upon her fair white skin, but Seton has rescued her and they are among the besieged.

The natives promise free conduct if the garrison will lay down their arms and they accept the pledge, only to be fired upon and killed. Joan and Seton are captured, and he is sentenced to be shot, but is rescued by a servant and goes in search of help. Joan is reserved for the Mahratta's harem. Seton comes upon Strathallan and a relief column in time to save Joan from the Indian, and is rewarded the Victoria Cross instead of the court martial with which he had been at first threatened.

ANITA LOOS WILL WRITE FAIRBANKS CAPTIONS

Anita Loos of the Triangle-Fine Arts scenario department will henceforth write the subtitles for all screen plays in which Douglas Fairbanks is starred.

This arrangement has been made at the special request of Fairbanks himself, who is convinced that the drawing power of the features in which he appears can be greatly affected, favorably or otherwise, by the caption writer.

"Time and again," says Fairbanks, "I have sat through plays by Miss Loos, and have heard the audience applaud her subtitles as heartily as the liveliest scenes. There have even been cases I could mention where her comments outdid the scenes themselves. This has convinced me of the great value of the kind of work she does.

KALEMITES WILL ENTERTAIN ON SPEAKING STAGE IN JACKSONVILLE

George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby and their fellow members of the Jacksonville Kalem company will return to the speaking stage for a "one night stand" on Thanksgiving eve. The Kalemites have consented to appear as the headline attraction at a monster benefit performance in St. Augustine, Florida, for the Catholic church there of Father Connally. The players are now busily rehearsing in a sketch "A Night at the Movies."

George Larkin, who lists among his varied accomplishments that of being a professional dancer, has arranged to give an exhibition waltz with Miss Kirkby, as a specialty. Among the others who will be seen in the sketch are Director Robert Ellis, William McKey, Mary Taylor-Ross, Storm Boyd, Fred Schierbaum, O. A. Zangrelli, and T. Justin Dow.

RITCHIE IS WRITING "GIRL FROM FRISCO" ON WYOMING RANCH THIRTY MILES FROM RAILROAD

Robert Welles Ritchie, author of Kalem's series "The Girl from Frisco," arrived last week in Buffalo, Wyoming, where he has gone to take up the task of writing the ten additional episodes demanded by the extension of that series.

Local color in the series of the West, featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, now starts with the postmark on the envelopes bringing the scenarios to the Kalem office. Author Ritchie is devising the adventures of Barbara Brent, heroine of the series, on the "Lazy H" ranch amidst the same sort of settings used in the filming of the pictures.

Both Thrills and Laughs Galore in Film Making Along the Border

THE Mexican border troubles furnish a lively background for the action of "Border Wolves," a coming episode of Kalem's "Girl from 'Frisco" series scheduled for release on the General Film program on Wednesday, November 29. Director James Horne, a company of nine players and a technical staff of seven were forced to make a trip of over eight hundred miles to the Southern California border to secure the exact locations necessary for this episode. A Mexican rebel army of three hundred, plays an important part in the action.

"Mexican rebels are not at all averse to acting in motion pictures," wrote Director Horne to the Kalem officials in describing his work on "Border Wolves." "But by the time you have greased the officers and met all the demands of the men they cost considerably more than plain every day extras. They also eat up a lot of film, for each of the officers demanded plenty of close-ups when they noticed that we were bringing Marin Sais and True Boardman up close to the camera. They tried to show me that they were real actors, but I won't have the nerve to come down here again after they discover that all these close-ups have been cut out of the picture when released."

"Border Wolves" is preceded on the release schedule for "The Girl from 'Frisco" by the issuance on November 22 of "The Fight for Paradise Valley." The vast irrigation projects of Southern California are the theme of this episode of the Kalem series by Robert Welles Ritchie. Director Horne secured some photographic gems in filming the billion dollar Los Angeles Acqueduct which is made the background of the action of the thrilling story in which Marin Sais and True Boardman wage a bitter battle with the "Water Trust" which attempts to prevent their successful completion of the irrigation project. A run on a desert town's bank and some realistically staged battle scenes are features of the offering.

Ham is on hand in the list of coming Kalem's with two unusual one-reel comedies, "Dudes for a Day," released on Tuesday, November 28, and "Jailbirds" issued on Tuesday, December 5. In both of these laugh-makers the star is supported by Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. In the former Ham and Bud are engaged by a clothes dealer to parade in evening dress as walking advertisements. When they escape the watchful eye of the dealer they become real dudes and have some exciting adventures with a newly-rich bricklayer and his pretty daughter Ethel. In "Jailbirds" Ham and Bud are laughable, if not capable, jailers with Murdoch their most bothersome prisoner, and Ethel Teare the adventuress who seeks to effect Henry's escape.

A surplus of thrills is given to the Kalem releases through General film by the coming "Grant, Police Reporter" and "Hazards of Helen" episodes. "The Trial Run" is the "Hazard" scheduled for release first in December, being issued on Saturday, December 2. Helen Gibson contributes a dare-devil feat to this one-reeler by her leap from a speeding automobile to a runaway freight train. In "The Forgotten Train Order" issued on the preceding Saturday, Helen overtakes a speeding train on a motorcycle which she runs within inches of the train before leaping to the hand rail.

"The Wizard's Plot" and "The Trunk Mystery" are two episodes of the "Grant, Police Reporter" series issued on the first two Fridays of November. Daring feats aboard a ship are features of the first-mentioned offering with George Larkin, Ollie Kirkby and Robert Ellis taking the reckless chances. Included in the support in the two episodes are Mary Taylor Ross, William McKey, G. Chira, Arthur Albertson, Harry Gordon and many others.

TECHNICOLOR PICKS JACKSONVILLE FOR PRODUCTION

The Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation of Cambridge, Mass., has announced its intention of spending the winter months in Jacksonville.

The Technicolor Company produces pictures in their natural colors, and selected Jacksonville as the place for production after visiting various Southern cities.

Having secured a release for its pictures through the Unity program, the Eagle Film Company has started the erection of a large indoor studio in connection with its plant in Jacksonville. This company has one of the most modern open air studios and laboratories in the South, and has long felt the necessity for a closed studio. General Manager Billy Dunn of the Eagle Company has returned from an extensive trip to New York and Chicago, where he completed arrangements for the release of the "Tweedledum" comedies, which are replete with novel and stirring situations and would prove big winners.

Journalistic Students to Be Taught the Making of a Newspaper Exchange Managers Hold Special Meeting by Paramount's Pictograph

THE students of the School of Journalism of the University of Nebraska will have some of their mental food visualized in the near future when Prof. M. M. Fogg, Professor of Rhetoric of the institution, will show the journalistic students "The Making of a Newspaper" as pictured in the Paramount Pictographs.

The high cost of living may have reduced the purchasing power of a dollar bill, but when you buy a newspaper you get the biggest value in the world for a cent.

These pictures show how the facts from every section of the world are gathered with exceptional speed, and put into cold type, almost before the incident written about has actually happened. To do this, there are nearly as many operations required as it is to manufacture the average automobile.

Starting with the "Sherlock Holmes" reporter, who gets a clue that a news story is "breaking," you travel along with him, in the pictures and watch him secure a "beat" on the others news "hounds," and then race against time to get into print. Everything is orderly confusion; every nerve on edge as the story is lashed into shape; rewritten, edited, set up on the linotype machines, proofs taken, proofs read, revisions made, a matrix stamped from the "set up" form, molten lead poured over the mat, which is held in molds; all this to secure the curved plates that slip into the wonderful presses that turn out 100,000 newspapers in a single hour.

The combination of speed, magnitude and importance of these operations make the production of a newspaper, one of the most thrilling stories ever screened.

"FOLLOWING THE FLAG" FROM SELIG THROUGH GENERAL ON NOV. 27

The Selig Company on Monday, November 27, will release through General Film service "Following the Flag" in three reels.

"Following the Flag" presents Pershing's column crossing the border into Mexico in pursuit of Villa. It shows the transportation of troops from the various States to the Mexican borderland; it tells the story of the gravitation of National Guardsmen into real for sure soldiers of Uncle Sam; it presents the soldiers at mess; while engaged on long "hikes"; in fact the production shows almost every detail of the making of Uncle Sam's soldiers.

While "Following the Flag" is in every respect a feature picture-play it will be released in regular service. The production will add class to any program, for it is not only timely but educational.

"BLAZE DERRINGER" TO FOLLOW "MATRIMANIAC," TRIANGLE

The Douglas Fairbanks feature to follow the Triangle production of "The Matrimaniac," which is nearing completion, will be a screen version of Eugene P. Lyle's novel, "Blaze Derringer," to be done under the direction of John Emerson.

Miss Anita Loos and Mr. Emerson are now putting the finishing touches on the scenario of the story, which should make an unusually strong Fairbanks plot. It is said that "Doug" will be given full opportunity to utilize his well-known strength and agility amid remarkably picturesque settings.

The tale is that of a young American who goes to a Central American republic of imaginary location in the company of a couple of notorious jail-breakers to get the deposed president out of jail.

"Blaze" is the son of a wealthy father who has sent him out into the world with a certain allowance which he has succeeded in scattering on the four winds of irresponsibility—hence his eagerness to join forces with the jail-birds to get the reward of $100,000, which the incarcerated president has offered any one who will effect his release.

The manner in which this ambitious undertaking is carried out furnishes the novel thrills in what is said to be a sure-fire Fairbanks drama.

TEN TWEEDLEDUM COMEDIES READY FOR RELEASE

Fernandez Perez, better known as "Tweedledum," the star of the "Tweedledum" series of comedies being made at the Jacksonville studios of the Eagle Film Manufacturing Company, and released through the Unity Sales Corporation, is one of the pioneers in the comedy field though still a young man. Perez began his career with Pathe in Paris, under the direction of George Hatho, and together they produced "The Novice Chauffeur," one of the most successful comedy dramas of the time. It marked one of the first attempts to inject the comedy almost into a pretentious photoplay, and its popularity enabled Hatho to found the Eclipse Company and to engage Tweedledum for his comedy star. "The Near-Sighted Cyclist" comedy was the result of this combination, and the Eclipse Company sold 950 copies. Later Tweedledum produced comedies for the Eclair and Ambrosia Companies.

Here Tweedledum decided to come to America he was immediately engaged by Billy Dunn, supervising director for the Eagle Film Company, for whom Tweedledum has appeared in a series of comedies, ten of which are already completed and are now being offered to exhibitors through the Unity Sales Corporation.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Foland Springs Live Stunts for His Customers

"JIM" FOLAND, traveler for Pathe in the Kansas City territory, renders little helps in so many ways, that one would have to write a book to get them all in. Recently a customer went into the office and booked the "Iron Claw." He hadn't been doing very well and thought maybe some suggestions might start him toward the prosperity that other people in the motion picture business were enjoying. C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the exchange, jumped at the chance. If there is anything he likes, it is to find a man that wants to increase his business, for they are the live ones, whether they have been doing well in the past or not. So "Jim" was put on the case. He found that the little local newspaper ran only five columns of news a day—not much leeway for motion pictures. After much conservation and argument, the editor was converted; he asked for six columns of plate matter a week—which is some large proportion of the paper to give to one industry, but the innovation proved its worth.

This end of the publicity disposed of, Mr. Foland turned to means of getting the people going to this theatre. He saw it was necessary to interest the kids. It is a potato country; and the farmers are all in town on Saturdays. He had the exhibitor advertise that the kid that brought the largest potato any Saturday afternoon, would get a season ticket to the serial. The exhibitor received enough potatoes every Saturday to more than pay the cost of the season ticket. The crowds got coming so fast that the exhibitor was delighted—and booked "Who's Guilty?" on the spot.

ESCHMANN IN CHARGE OF WORLD IN CLEVELAND

E. A. Bloch, manager of the World Film Corporation, Belmont Building, Cleveland, has resigned to become the Ohio and Kentucky representative of the photoplay, "It May Be Your Daughter." E. A. Eschmann, who has been connected with the World for some time, is in charge. Eschmann has been studying the Ohio field for the last six weeks with headquarters here.

ONE FEATURE A WEEK IS DE LUXE-LASKY

The De Luxe Film-Lasky Corporation of San Francisco and Los Angeles, California, announces its program policy which will consist of one feature a week, to be drawn from the best producing companies on the open market and to be sure-fire box office attractions with a touch of the spectacular.

CHARLES KNICKERBOCKER SELLING INDUSTRIALS

Charles Knickerbocker, Kansas City representative of the National Film Publicity Corporation, was formerly booker for the "Yellow Menace" in the Kansas City territory of the United Film Corporation. Mr. Knickerbocker has been with the National Film Publicity Corporation for three months. The company makes animated film advertisement reels of twenty to fifty feet, for any kind of business. One of the recent advertising films which Mr. Knickerbocker produced was for Pitkin-Comer Brokerage Company of Kansas City, who are executive agents for the "hang up match" in the Middle West territory. The "hang up match" is a box with two compartments, one filled with matches which come down one at a time and when used can be thrown into the second compartment for used matches.

Growing business, particularly since they have begun handling the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, has compelled five of George Kleine's distributing offices to take larger quarters. The new addresses follow: Minneapolis, Rooms 304-310, at No. 16 North 4th St.; Denver, 729 18th St.; Indianapolis, Lyric Theatre Building; St. Louis, 3315 Olive St.; Detroit, Peter Smith Building, Griswold and State Sts., and Washington, Sixth and F Sts., N. W. The facilities of these exchanges are now ample to take care of the business involved in handling the sixty-odd features which they already have in service as well as the continued output of the Kleine, Edison, Selig and Essanay studios.

Kleine-Selig Feature Scores, Is Report of Exchanges

THE twenty-three distributing offices of George Kleine, now booking Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, report tremendous success with the first release of the new program, Selig's "The Country That God Forgot." This feature is booking heavily in all parts of the country, and the various Klein offices are receiving many commendatory letters from exhibitors who have already played it. Among these is a message to the Cleveland exchange from John D. Petrou, of the Grand theatre, Zanesville, O., in which Mr. Petrou writes: "It pleased 100 per cent. of our patrons. We think so well of your picture that we kindly ask you to let us have your open dates for a return engagement."

J. W. Rubenstein, of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, writes to the Chicago office "I showed your first production, 'The Country That God Forgot,' at our theatre three consecutive days, and can frankly say that it is one of the best western dramas that I have exhibited since 'The Spoilers.'"

It is worth while noting that "The Country That God Forgot," has scored several of its greatest "hits" in theatres that broke their standing rule of "no westerns" in order to play it.

Standard in Detroit Opens a Branch—Koppin Company in Breitmeyer Building

THE Standard Film Service of Detroit, Mich., is expanding and announces the opening of a branch exchange at Escanaba, Mich., which will be for exhibitors in the northern part of the state. This new exchange will be in charge of George R. Keppie, a well-known newspaper man who has been associated with the Standard for the past year at the Cleveland office.

The Koppin Film Co., of Detroit, Mich., has opened offices in the Breitmeyer Building. Bert Williams is the general manager. Mr. Williams is also the general manager of the Woodward Theatre Company controlled by the same interests, and which operates a chain of theatres in Detroit.

Art Blankmeyer, Campau Building, Detroit, Mich., reports a splendid business on the Christie Comedies, for which he has the Michigan rights. Mr. Blankmeyer has also taken over the Ohio rights for these comedies and he is now negotiating to open exchanges in Cincinnati and Cleveland. Mr. Blankeyer has been long in the motion pictures business, and was one of the founders of the Detroit Universal Film Exchange, and is a pioneer exhibitor in Detroit.

COLEMAN PALMING BUSINESS IN THE THUMB SECTION

The Universal Film Service Company has discontinued its Saginaw, Mich., office, but F. A. Coleman, formerly manager there, will continue to represent the Universal in the thumb section, giving more personal attention to the demands and needs of exhibitors than he formerly did. In the future and under the new arrangement, all film will be shipped directly from Detroit to thumb district exhibitors.

Year Proves a Prosperous One for Gold Roosters

Authors Represented During Last Twelve Months Include Richard Harding Davis, Paul Armstrong, Winchell Smith, William J. Locke, Henry C. Rowland, George Barr McCutcheon—The List of Directors Include George Fitzmaurice, Edward Jose and Herbert Blache

OVER a year ago it was announced by Pathe that on the Gold Rooster program would be placed features adapted from the best plays only, with stars of national reputation in the casts, and with the ablest direction procurable. That this was no mere idle statement is shown by mention of some of the titles and stars of the Gold Rooster Plays of the past year: Florence Reed in "At Bay," "New York" and "A Woman's Law"; Bruce McRae and Gail Kane in "Via Wireless"; Pearl White and Bruce McRae in "Hazel Kirke"; Edwin Arden in "The Beloved Vagabond"; Dorothy Donnelly in "Madame X," and Robert Edeson in "Big Jim Garrity." The complete list of real stars featured in various Gold Rooster Plays is too long to be given here, but it embraces some of the most famous in the land.

The authors represented during this year of achievement include Richard Harding Davis, Paul Armstrong and Winchell Smith, Wm. J. Locke, Henry C. Rowland, Geo. Barr McCutcheon, Henry C. Rowland, Webster and Samuel Merwin, John McIntire, Alfred Sutro, Richard Dehan, Mrs. Maravene Thompson, Clyde Fitch, Rudyard Kipling, W. J. Hurlburt, Rupert Hughes, Alexander Bisson, Geo. Scarborough, and Owen Davis, a most noteworthy list.

The directors include George Fitzmaurice, William Parke, Edward José, Donald Mackenzie, George Marion, Frederic Sullivan, Eugene Moore, Henry King, Sherwood MacDonald, Ernest Warde and Herbert Blaché, men whose names count for much in the motion picture business.

That exhibitors thoroughly appreciate the great effort that is being put forth by Pathe to give them absolutely first class features is proven by the numerous letters of commendation received from exhibitors who are showing Gold Rooster plays. John R. Elliott, manager of the Hippodrome, Youngstown, Ohio, writes as follows: "Pathe Gold Rooster features are the most popular moving pictures we have had and that is saying a great deal, as we have played nothing but the best, or what we thought was the best, until we adopted Gold Rooster films. Without wishing to speak disparaging of any service I must praise Pathe's, and am grateful for the aid they have given in putting over winning combinations in the picture line. I have said kind things of other services, all deserved, too, but I must take off my hat to Pathe's. Our patrons have never boosted any pictures as they are boosting these."

James R. Black of the Luvella theater, Rice's Landing, Pa., writes as follows: "Pathe film service is the best I ever ran and can't be beaten. My receipts have doubled using it." These two letters are picked at random from scores of similar ones, many of them from nationally known exhibitors.

Will Make Pictures of High Quality

Not content with the large business already being done on Gold Rooseter Plays, Mr. Berst is exerting every effort to make them even better, and in this he has the hearty co-operation of Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra, Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, H. M. Horkheimer, president of Balboa, and W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow, these four companies making the Gold Rooster Features.

In forthcoming Astra productions will be seen, among others, William Courtney, Mary Nash, Mollie King, Montagu Love, Cooper Cliffe and Lumsden Hare. Every theater-goer will appreciate the value of these names.

In Thanhouser productions, in addition to Gladys Hulette and Florence La Badie, will appear Charlotte Walker, Jeanne Eagles, Frederick Warde, and Victor Serrano, stars of Broadway reputation. Baby Marie Osborne, now known as "Little Mary Sunshine," the phenomenally successful baby star, will be presented by Balboa in a number of super-excellent features.

On November 26th will be released "Arms and the Woman," starring Mary Nash, a picture produced by George Fitzmaurice, admittedly one of the greatest directors in the business. Rarely has a picture received such commendatory notices from the reviewers as this. Five solid reels of continuous action, marked by superb acting and sumptuous sets is the universal verdict on this picture. Pathe is proud of it and confident it will do big business.

On December 3rd Florence La Badie will be presented in "Divorce and the Daughter," a play by Agnes Johnston, author of the very successful "The Shine Girl" and "Prudence the Pirate." The way the divorce question is handled in this play will excite much comment.

On December 10th will be released an A. H. Woods play adapted for the screen. "The Challenge," directed by Donald Mackenzie, and featuring Charles Gotthold, Montagu Love and Helen Chadwick. Helen Chadwick is a "find" of Mr. Gasnier's and is rapidly developing into a real star. Messrs. Gotthold and Love are well known actors and the play is full of thrill and dramatic action.

"King Lear" on December 17

On December 17th Frederick Warde, the famous Shakesperian actor, will be seen in "King Lear." Mr. Warde has a large following all over the country, and is seen at his best in "King Lear," in which he appeared in practically all the cities and towns of America during a period of ten years. His acting in this Thanhouser production is described as superb.

On December 31st Little Mary Sunshine will be seen again, this time in "Joy and the Dragon," a piece which gives her ample opportunity to display the winsome baby charms which have captivated the country and made her almost a household word. These Sunshine pictures have been hailed everywhere as something new and refreshing and have played many return dates in the best theaters.

On January 7th Thanhouser will present "A Modern Monte Cristo," with Vincent Serrano, the well-known star, in the lead. The story is dramatic, adventurous and novel and will find a wide appeal.

On January 14th comes "Kick In," the famous A. H. Woods stage success, which played to phenomenal business. George Fiztmaurice produced the picture for Astra, and in it is starred William Courtney, who is supported by a stellar cast, including Mollie King and Suzanne Willa. The story has an action which never lets down for a moment, and the suspense is well sustained until the very end. "Kick In" will be one of the great pictures of 1917.

On the 21st and 28th of the month will follow in the order named Valkyrien in "The Image Maker of Thebes" and Baby Sunshine in another picture, yet to be named. The first has a story, dealing as it does with previous existence and a love that lasts through the centuries. It strikes a new note and one that will be appreciated.

"CIVILIZATION" INAUGURATES FIVE DOLLAR FILMS AT BUENOS AIRES

"Civilization" the great Ince spectacle has started on a career in the South American republics, quite as spectacular and triumphant as that which distinguished it on Broadway, New York.

J. Parker Read, Jr., general manager of the Harper Film Corporation, exploiting the picture from the Times Building, has received the following cablegram from the company's representative in South America, J. Parker Read, Sr.:

"Civilization house packed, wild enthusiasm, all seats five dollars, am pushing sales buyers insist on ownership films end five years."

"Civilization" thus ranks as the first spectacle to attract a five dollar audience on the American Continent. The seating capacity of Arturo Cairo's theatre at Buenos Aires is over 2,400. On Sunday night, November 12, when the picture opened there, this audience each paid $5 in Argentine money, which is approximately $2.50 in United States currency. Even at the equivalent this would be the highest price ever paid by people to see a motion picture spectacle.

From Argentine the picture proceeds to the other South American Republics.

HANOWER IS ASSISTANT MANAGER FOR FOX, NEW YORK BRANCH

Irving Hanower of the Fox Film Corporation, has been promoted from the position of salesman in the Bronx territory, New York City, to the post of assistant manager of the New York branch.

FREDERICK WARDE HAS HAD LONG SHAKESPEAREAN CAREER

Frederick Warde, star of Thanhouser's production, "King Lear," has had one of the most extensive and interesting dramatic careers of any actor now living. Mr. Warde's experience as a Shakespearean star covers a period of thirty years. When he was touring the United States "King Lear" was one of his most notable roles and it was because of this that Edwin Thanhouser selected this play in which to present the actor on the screen.

Mr. Warde's Shakespearean experience has been wide. He played "Romeo" to Adelaide Neilson's "Juliet," Macduff to the Lady Macbeth of Charlotte Cushman and alternated with Edwin Booth in the roles of Othello and Iago. His other Shakespearean performances have been numerous and include appearances with Lawrence Barrett, E. L. Davenport and Mrs. D. P. Bowers.

BELIEVED TO BE CLIQUE OF FILM THIEVES ABROAD

An international clique of motion picture film thieves may be revealed as the result of an investigation instituted by the Universal Film Company. This investigation already has resulted in the arrest of two men, one charged with stealing a valuable photoplay and the other accused of receiving stolen property—being the "fence" for the film filchers.

The Universal Company places the losses due to inroads by theft, at thousands of dollars and one official of the company yesterday pointed out that it was altogether probable that other producers had suffered in the same way The thefts first were noted about Ocober 1, and an inventory disclosed that several valuable reels had vanished. Detectives immediately were called and began a thorough investigation.

About October 15 Sam Zierler, manager of the Twenty-third Street Exchange, is said to have apprehended Aaron Breyer, a shipping clerk, as the latter was making away with fourteen reels of the photoplay serial, "Peg O' My Heart." Zierler immediately had Breyer arrested and the clerk is alleged to have confessed stealing film. The object of the Universal is to enlist the co-operation of all film concerns in stamping out this newest and dangerous menace to the industry.

MARY PICKFORD NEARLY LOST IN SCHOONER SCENE

Mary Pickford was rescued from drowning the other day. Director Tourneur, with other members of the Artcraft Company, went out to sea a few hundred feet on an old fishing schooner, "Eddie Miner," and just when the cameraman was starting to crank, the craft sprung a leak forward and the boat settled rapidly at the bows.

For a few minutes the crowd on shore enjoyed the sight, assuming that the foundering was intentional. Then somebody screamed realistically, boats put out hurriedly and the players who had gone overboard were picked up. Miss Pickford came ashore registering slightly different emotions from those which have earned her the title of "America's Sweetheart."

The picture concerns Scotch fishermen's life. Miss Pickford was at the helm when the accident happened.

Youngest Director General Plans New Conquests

J. B. Blystone Signs New Contract with L-Ko and Will Direct Alice Howell in Newer and Bigger Comedies

J. B. BLYSTONE, one of the youngest directors in America, if not, in point of prominence, the youngest, has signed a contract with the L-Ko Kompany as director general of that concern for a period of two years. Mr. Blystone, who is only twenty-four years old, has had an unusual amount of success in the four years that he has been associated with the film industry.

He has specialized in comedy, and writes many of his scripts. Among his successes, the following have brought him the greater part of his fame: "Pirates of the Air," "How Stars Are Made," "Gertie's Joy Ride," "Alice in Society," "Unhand Me, Villain," "Murdered by Mistake," and others.

While Mr. Blystone's connection with the L-Ko Kompany only calls for his supervision of the sub-directors, he personally directs all plays in which Alice Howell appears. One of the most notable of these was "Alice in Society," which is said to be enjoying record showings in all parts of the country.

Director General Blystone follows the accepted rule in the making of comedies of this type—that is, of building the story as he goes along. He follows the script until the possibility of some ingenious and original fun-making presents itself, when he departs from the typed story and puts his imagination to work.

His ability to sense possibilities, which is the true test of director genius, gives an explanation for his complimentary title, "The Man With a Million Comedy Ideas."

The L-Ko Komedy Kompany has plans laid for a series of new comedies featuring Miss Howell, and directed by Mr. Blystone, details of which will appear in these pages as soon as final arrangements are completed.

All of Art Dramas' Producing Companies Active

Formation of New Releasing Organization Brings About Increased Production Activity—Frank Crane, George Terwilliger and Ralph Dean Engaged as Directors

PRONOUNCED activity is apparent at the studios of all of the producers of the Art Dramas program, as that company is making ready for its first release, which is scheduled for the beginning of December. Although all of the producers have maintained suitable companies heretofore, the new Art Dramas' arrangement, which calls for the release of one feature each week, has made it necessary for them to add considerably to their acting and directing forces.

Frank Crane, who has produced many successful feature pictures for other companies, has been obtained by the U. S. Amusement Corporation. Mr. Crane has been with the World Film Corporation for the past two years. Mr. Crane will undertake the direction of Jean Sothern, who was discovered not long ago on the vaudeville stage by William Fox, who featured her in a number of his pictures.

Charlotte Walker and Director John O'Brien of the Thanhouser Film Corporation

The Van Dyke Film Production Company has engaged George Terwilliger, who has also made a number of highly successful pictures. Mr. Terwilliger was originally a newspaper man, and established the present motion picture department of the Morning Telegraph. He was the original Gordon Trent of that paper, as is indicated by his initials G. T.

The star of the Van Dyke production which Mr. Terwilliger is directing is Gertrude McCoy. Miss McCoy is, of course, one of the best known screen actresses, and has a large following throughout the country.

Ralph Dean, who has been with the Frohman Amusement Corporation for the past two years, will direct the productions of the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation. Mr. Dean is a pupil of the Frohman school, which has graduated so many notable artists to the screen. He was connected with the Frohman family, Charles, Daniel and Gustave, for fifteen years, both as an actor and a producer. In addition to Mr. Dean, the Sherrill Company has under consideration the services of Mabelle Trunnelle, Dorothy Bernard, Florence Deshar, Elinor Woodruff, Jack Sherrill, and many other notable performers, whose work has stood out in the past.

The Erbograph Company has not yet made an announcement of the people it has engaged for its Art Dramas productions, but it is known that several prominent people are under consideration. A definite statement will probably be forthcoming in the course of the next few days.

BILLY WEST COMEDIES GO BIG

The Billy West series of comedy pictures which is being produced by the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, has, according to Ike Schlank, president of the concern, taken the entire country by storm. It is stated by Mr. Schlank that the Marcus Loew's circuit has booked the entire series of 16 episodes following the premier showing at the New York theatre on the sixteenth of November. Mr. Loew was so much impressed with the merits of the Billy West series that he decided to make it the feature attraction in the opening of his new theatre, "The York" at 116th street and Seventh avenue.

The first of the Billy West series, which were directed by Edwin McKim is entitled "His Married Life," and shows this newest of comedians enduring the trials and tribulations of a newly-wed.

GAUMONT TOURS AND ODD COMICS ADDING TO MUTUAL SINGLE REEL SERVICE

The Gaumont Company is gradually building up a list of single-reel releases that will result in a film library of remarkable excellence. The subjects are both scenic and pictorial narrations of various industries, processes and customs. There is also a due appreciation of the demand for humor on the screen. This is satisfied by the Gaumont Kartoon Komics, animated for the screen by Harry Palmer, and by the Gaumont Shadowgraphs, also devised and directed by Mr. Palmer. The three series of travel interest and magazine character are "See America First," "Tours Around the World" and "Reel Life." In addition, there is the Gaumont screen newspaper, The Mutual Weekly.

TIMELY ICE PEAK VIEWS FROM WESTERN AMERICA

The "See America First" No. 64 is Mount Hood, the highest peak in Oregon. It will be released November 29. This will be a popular scenic, since the mountain is the most climbed of any snow-capped peak on the American continent. Those who have made the trip will be glad to live it over again, and for those who have never seen the beautiful mountain the picture will be a revelation.

The pictures show general views of the mountain, Government Camp, the glaciers, the ice cascades of Zigzag glacier, Reed glacier, the Crater, Crater Rock, and a general panorama from the summit, showing the sun shining on the snow and the rugged peaks to the South, while in the North the lowering clouds show where a storm is gathering.

AN APPLE A DAY KEEPS HER DOCTOR AWAY

Bebe Daniels, whose winsome personality shines in each of Pathe's "Luke" comedies, has taken the advertising slogan, "An apple a day keeps the doctor away," seriously. Bebe a while ago thought she was getting too plump, but lately has been making over her clothes. Now she confesses to have lost ten pounds by a secret treatment. At last the secret is out—the Rolin star orders apples by the box and eats nothing else. Oregon apple growers please write.

Spoor Announces Two Special Lines from Essanay

One Will Be Known as the Black Cat Brand, Consisting of Photoplays Founded on Stories Taken from the Magazine of That Name

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, has just announced two special lines of features to be produced by that company. One will be known by the brand name of the "Black Cat" features and the other will be a series of stories under the general title of "Is Marriage Sacred?"

Mr. Spoor has purchased the rights to 100 special stories which are being put into photoplay form and released through the General Film Company as "Black Cat" features. Each story is complete in itself, bearing no relation to the other stories on the program except all will have the same distinctive style. Each one of these features will carry a thrilling plot and intense dramatic interest. The screen time of these features will be approximately 33 minutes each.

They will be released every Tuesday, beginning with December 5. Mr. Spoor has announced the first four of these features to appear in December as follows: "The Egg," released December 5; "As in a Looking Glass," released December 12; "The Little Brown Mole," released December 19 and "The Girl God Made for Jones," released December 26.

There are two very strong reasons why Mr. Spoor decided to place a distinct brand on these photoplays. The first naturally evolves from the fact that the stories were purchased from the Black Cat magazine which carries a distinctive style. His other reason is to aid both the salesmen and the exhibitors; the salesmen to present to the exhibitors a special brand of photoplays; the exhibitor to announce to his patrons every Tuesday, or whatever other day he chooses to elect, a special series of photoplays.

Dainty Anita Stewart as "Philippa," Soon to Be Seen in Robert W. Chambers's Story for Vitagraph, "The Girl Philippa"

Mr. Spoor is planning, and in fact has already started a special line of advertising on these features. The "Black Cat" will appear in all advertising; it will appear on the paper; and the exhibitors will all be able to hang out a "Black Cat" cutout on the night the feature appears in his theatre.

This will enable him to announce to his patrons when the "Black Cat" features are to be shown. It is firmly believed by Essanay that these features possess exceptional merit, and that when the first few are viewed by the public there will be constant demand for them. In this way the exhibitor is aided in securing patronage by the cumulative effect of his weekly announcements.

Outside of the fact that the series of stories on "Is Marriage Sacred?" appeal to Mr. Spoor as exceptionally attractive, the same ground of reasoning leads him to announce this series.

There are twelve photoplays in this series, each of these also complete in itself, carrying a separate title, but bearing on the subject "Is Marriage Sacred?" The first release will be December 16 through the General Film Company and will be released each Saturday thereafter until completed. Another series of stories under a general title will be announced after these are finished. The screen time will be approximately 33 minutes.

This series touches the home of every individual and is of deep interest to every man, woman and child. They are not being produced as problem plays but bear such an intimate relation to the home and to the present day marriage laws and customs that they will be of interest to all.

While dealing with this delicate subject, Essanay announces that every photoplay is clean and wholesome and morally uplifting. Their first object is to entertain, to give fascinating entertainment, but at the same time leaving the spectator with a feeling of the cleanliness and beauty of life rightly lived.

Although the screen time of these two special brands is announced as approximately 33 minutes, it was decided to call them features, because it was believed that the merit of the photoplays warranted it. Mr. Spoor's idea being that the merit of the play rather than the screen time should determine whether or not a picture should be called a feature.

Essanay stars will appear in all these productions.

DROWNING MAN FEATURED IN WORLD FILM

Robert Warwick and Mollie King in "All Man," a World-Brady picture, will reach the public December 4. One of the stirring features of this play is a realistic rescue from drowning, through which the hero becomes acquainted with the rich man's daughter, to whom he is married after he has acquired fame and wealth through his own exertions.

Harry A. Sherman Buys "The Garden of Allah"

Lays Plans for an Ambitious Future, But Believes That Some Types of Films Are Doomed to an Early Grave

HARRY A. SHERMAN, President of Sherman-Elliott, Inc., has just returned from one of his numerous trips to Chicago and Minneapolis, where it is rumored he purchased Selig's new production, "The Garden of Allah."

Mr. Sherman is a trained investigator of the motion picture industry. He got his experience in the investment of over $1,000,000 in the purchase of feature films.

Concerning the industry, Mr. Sherman says: "It is approaching a fork in the road—one course leading down toward partial obscurity, and the other, upward toward a new prestige.

"The effort for sensational novelties has come pretty near exhaustion. The illustrations are lively and frequent. It is pitiful to see the dying efforts of the sensational, spectacular, and salacious.

"The practical use of the film in various propaganda in educational and news reporting, and in the genuinely artistic drama is in its infancy. I honestly think that I am on the right track. I know I have the real artistic drama in "The Crisis" and will possibly have something new to announce in the immediate future with the firm of Sherman-Elliott in the producing end."

Lesser Expands in the East

In Association with Leon D. Netter, Establishes New Offices and Makes Purchases of States Rights Features

ACCOMPANYING the announcement that Sol Lesser, in association with Leon D. Netter has begun activity in the east, is the news of the buying of other features and the opening of a buying office in New York, and branch offices in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago, to handle the business of eleven western states.

Of the latest acquisition of Lesser and Netter, is the contract with the Triumph Film Corporation, which gives the Masterpiece Film Corporation control of twenty-four states on "The Libertine."

In conference with Lewis J. Selznick, Lesser has negotiated the purchase of "War Brides" for his western coast territory. This is the second deal which Lesser consummated with the Selznick enterprises since his entry in the business.

It will interest exhibitors, who desire to book "Purity," which is controlled by The Masterpiece Film, Inc., for New Jersey, to know that the Newark Board of Censors has passed this film after a six weeks' delay.

NEW SERIAL WELL RECEIVED IN ADVANCE SHOWINGS

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation, through its president, Mr. Ike Schlank, has considerable to communicate to exhibitors concerning the acquisition of a new sixteen episode serial.

Mr. Schlank announces that his concern will release under the title of "Jimmy Dale, Alas the Gray Seal," this production of the Monmouth Film Corporation and that the story is based upon magazine contributions of Frank Packard, who also wrote "The Miracle Man," in which George M. Cohan appeared some seasons ago.

Mr. Schlank also states that Mr. Jules Burnstein and Myron C. Fagan of the Monmouth Company have toured the country and established an understanding with twelve hundred newspapers which will publish the serial simultaneously with its release throughout the twenty-eight Unicorn Exchanges.

Both the traveling gentlemen named above who arranged private advance showings of the first three episodes of "Jimmy Dale" in the principal cities during November, report tremendous enthusiasm at each and ever exhibition.

"WHERE D'YE GET THAT STUFF?" IS A TEAR PROVOKER

There is nothing pathetic or sympathetic in the name "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" Nevertheless, the audience that gave it its initial looking over at the Stanley theatre is said to have wept. But the tears were not those of sadness. While the picture is funny in itself, a great many of the laughs are due to the facile pens of H. C. Witwer, of Saturday Evening Post fame, and H. H. Van Loan, who, some claim, has not stopped laughing since he returned from an interview with the governor of the Bahamas.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" is the first production to be released by the Argosy Films, Inc., on a states rights basis. They are endeavoring to enlist the aid of newspaper cartoonists in popularizing the film's title.

THANHOUSER DECEMBER RELEASES INCLUDE "LEAR" AND "DIVORCE"

Florence La Badie in "Divorce and the Daughter," and Frederick Warde in Shakespeare's "King Lear," are the features that the Thanhouser Film Corporation will release through Pathe in December.

"Divorce and the Daughter" is a play by Agnes C. Johnston, based upon the ideas of "free" marriage advanced by the modernists. Miss La Badie plays a girl whose parents find that the old, tried and true marriage is a failure. Seeking happiness, she turns to a man who preaches of the "marriage" advanced by his cult. She finds, almost too late, that the old way is best.

The story is an arraignment of the so-called "advanced thinkers" who would disrupt the home by their unwholesome ideas of "freedom."

Frederic Sullivan directed "Divorce and the Daughter," which is to be released on December 3.

Miss La Badie is supported by Edwin Stanley, J. H. Gilmour, Kathryn Adams, Sam Niblack, Zenaide Williams, Ethelmary Oakland and Arthur Le Vien.

Shakespeare's "King Lear" is to be issued to exhibitors on December 17. Frederick Warde, the star, is so widely known throughout the United States that Thanhouser, Pathe and Mr. Warde himself have been besieged with inquiries regarding the release date of this production.

Edwin Thanhouser, Frederick Warde, and Ernest Warde, his son, who directed the feature, have taken infinite pains in making "King Lear."

The adaptation, By Philip Lonergan, follows the original play in detail. Frederick Warde, himself an authority upon Shakespeare, helped Ernest Warde in staging the drama.

A CORRECTION FOR GLORIA PAYTON

Gloria Payton, ingenue at the Balboa Studios protests against being listed among the character actresses in the Motion Picture Studio Directory, and adds most emphatically that she is seventeen and not twenty-seven. And a typographical error credited her with playing Little Lord Fauntleroy in "King Richard III." Quite obviously the correct wording should have been in "Little Lord Fauntleroy and in "King Richard III." Our sincerest apologies for a regrettable mistake are extended to Miss Payton.

First Time Photoplay Serves as Basis for Opera

Original Film Story, by Hector Turnbull and Released by Lasky Last Year, Put to Music by Camille Erlanger, French Composer

FOR the first time in the history of the motion picture industry an original photoplay is to serve as the basis of an opera. This is "The Cheat," which was written by Hector Turnbull, and produced by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company with Fannie Ward as the star. It was released on the Paramount Program last December, and made a distinct sensation in this country and abroad.

So great was the success of the photoplay in Paris that it attracted the attention of Camille Erlanger, the well-known composer, with whose name is associated such successful operas as "Aphrodite," "Le Juif Polonais" and "La Sorciere," which has played one hundred times at the celebrated Theatre de l'opera Comique.

After a careful study of the photoplay, Erlanger wrote Mr. Turnbull suggesting that the picture was ideally suited for adaptation as an opera and making the author a handsome offer for the operatic rights to the story. Negotiations which have been pending from that time have just been completed, and the work of preparing the production for operatic presentation is now nearing completion.

It is as yet undecided whether the premiere will be staged in New York or Paris, but the operatic adaptation is to be named "La Forfaiture." Since this is the first time that a motion picture scenario has ever been made the basis of an opera, it arouses the natural inquiry as to the reason for the selection of this particular script for so unique an honor.

CHICAGO'S BUSY DAY FOR WORLD-BRADY PICTURES

In Chicago one day last week nine World-Brady pictures were on view in ten theatres, as follows: Clara Kimball Young in "The Dark Silence," De Luxe and Marion; Clara Kimball Young in "Without a Soul," Beautiful Rose; "Paying the Price," Kozy; Lew Fields in "The Man Who Stood Still," Crawford; "The Weakness of Man," Wiley; Alice Brady in "The Gilded Cage," Harmony; House Peters and Gail Kane in "The Velvet Paw," Harding; Edna Wallace Hopper and Frank Sheridan in "The Perils of Divorce," Austin.

ONE WINS OUT OF ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND

One hundred thousand people including a large number of America's foremost writers, submitted ideas for the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," the $10,000 prize sequel to the Mutual's great chapter play of last year, "The Diamond from the Sky," which was itself a $10,000 prize photo-serial, according to Dennis J. Sullivan, assistant general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, who supervised the merchandising of "The Diamond from the Sky."

The sequel, which is to be released in four chapters of two reels each, will go out to the public on and after November 27. But the 100,000 contestants for the prize, and the hundreds of thousands of people who have been besieging the office of the American Company, Ind., producers, with inquiries will have to wait until December 17 and 18 to find out who the winner of the prize is. Not until the release of the fourth and last chapter, will the prize winner be made known. The name of the picture will appear in the newspaper versions of the sequel, syndicated by the Chicago Tribune and used in 800 leading newspapers, on December 17, Sunday, and on the screen the following day.

MILWAUKEE THEATRES RAISE ADMISSION PRICE AGAIN

Special to Motion Picture News.

Milwaukee, Wis.

Milwaukee is once more in the midst of a twenty-five cent photoplay epidemic, and two houses have already announced that admission price for the coming week. More will no doubt follow.

The Vaudette, which has heretofore never charged more than five cents, opens Sunday with "Is Any Girl Safe?" while the Alhambra opens on the same day with Mary Pickford in "Less Than the Dust." The result has been some unprecedented advertising in the local papers and the legitimate houses are decreasing their advertising.

DENVER BRANCH OF WORLD LIKES ALICE BRADY FILM

The manager of the World Film Corporation's Denver branch sent to William A. Brady the following epitomized report of the first showing of "Bought and Paid For" in that city: "Best of all Brady plays. All seeing this screening proclaim the picture on a par with the original stage play. Work of Alice Brady best of her career in pictures. Picture as perfectly cast as was the original play. May we have more like it!"

Many Changes in Staffs of Mutual Producing Companies

Directors, Photographers, Leading Players and Publicity Men from Various Sources Are Gathering in the West and Will Aid and Abet Productions

A NUMBER of interesting additions have recently been made to various departments of several of the Mutual Film Corporation's producing companies the past few weeks.

Doris Schroeder, formerly general assistant to Rollin Sturgeon, Vitagraph director of the West Coast, has been added to the staff of American scenario writers at Santa Barbara.

Marie Frances Kierman, the child player, has become a member of the Pollard Picture Plays Company, and is working with Margarita Fischer on her third Mutual production, "The Butterfly Girl."

Della Pringle, for many years a star on the legitimate stage, is also supporting Miss Fischer in this picture, which is being produced under the direction of Henry Otto, another recent addition to the Pollard forces.

In "The Butterfly Girl," Miss Pringle will be seen in the role of a performer in one of the amusement tents at the street fair which offers a great deal of unusual color of the picture and has promise of a brilliant future.

A third addition has recently been made to the Pollard Picture Plays Company. Jack B. Timms, formerly connected with the editorial department of the Los Angeles Times, has been engaged as secretary and assistant to Henry Otto.

Walter Lundin, the well-known cameraman, has also accepted a contract from Harry Pollard.

Harry Poppe, formerly press representative for David Horsley productions, has returned to his old post after an absence of several months. He has gone to the studios at Los Angeles, and will handle press copy from there.

Lone Thief Appears and Opposes "The Vampires" in Third Episode

WITH the appearance December 7 of the third episode of "The Vampires," a chapter called "The Ghost" in this Gaumont photo-novel, a character who dominates the story for four episodes makes his appearance. This is Enrique Moreno, skilfully played by the French Matinee idol, Jacques Hermann. Mr. Hermann has the role of a thief, who attempts to operate in opposition to the organized Crime Trust of the arch criminals of Paris known as The Vampires. The daring ingenuity he displays is a tribute not only to his own ability as an actor, but also to the directing genius of the photo-novel, Louis Feuillade, who shows considerable skill both in the writing and directing of the production.

PLAN FORMATION OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE IN LOS ANGELES

News of a big meeting of Los Angeles' Producers and Exchange men looking toward the formation of an Advisory Committee in California reached the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry this week.

Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, a member of the Board of Directors of the National Association, is in charge of the organization of the California Advisory committee. He wired to the Association's headquarters in New York City, Times building, of a meeting in Los Angeles and of the interest aroused. The great Producers and Directors who make their headquarters on the coast were all present at the meeting and have sounded a key-note which is arousing echoes from one end of the coast to the other.

Judge A. P. Tugwell is taking up with the exchange men and the supply men the advantage of forming a strong committee on the coast along the lines of the Chicago Advisory committee.

It is expected that news of the actual organization of this committee will be presented to the Board of Directors at its meeting in New York on November 29. Los Angeles is the second Advisory Committee to get under way and the third will undoubtedly be Boston. Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott is arranging a meeting of the exchange men, and supply an equipment in Boston. This will probably take place within the next ten days and the activities of the Boston committee will include all of New England.

SOL LESSER ACQUIRES "CIVILIZATION"

The All Star Picture Distributors, Inc., of San Francisco, of which Sol Lesser is the presiding genius, have shown their astuteness once more. They have acquired state rights for Thos. H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization" for California, Arizona, New Mexico. The deal was effected last week. Mr. Lesser has returned to the coast to make arrangements for the booking of the picture.

There were several bidders for this piece of territory, the allotment of which leaves very little left.

The transaction was, as usual, supervised by J. Parker Read, Jr., general manager of the Harper Film Corporation.

SIDNEY GARRETT ARRIVES IN NEW YORK

After an association with Alec Lorimore in the Canadian film business, Sidney Garrett has recently arrived in New York from Montreal. Mr. Garrett's experience has so far been Canadian, but he is to be permanently located in New York City, and has in hand several important picture propositions.

His commercial experience in Great Britain and the United States fits him to occupy an important executive position in the film industry. He is young, being only 31 years of age, and has a knowledge of the intricacies of the business which is a credit to himself and his mentor, Mr. Lorimore. Mr. Garrett's present address is c/o "Civilization," Suite 1401, Times Building.

"Civilization" Goes to Europe for Long Tour

Reels Are to Be Shipped via Spain to Avoid Submarines—France, England and Russia Territories to Be Sold

A NEW and heretofore unusual method of marketing an American made picture in foreign countries has been evolved by J. Parker Read, Jr., personal representative of Thomas H. Ince. The remarkable fact about the whole plan is that it is the simple and obvious method of putting a picture of the size of "Civilization" upon the European market.

Mr. Read when seen by a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, said: "Now that the rights of 'Civilization' have been practically disposed of for the United States, I am turning my attention to the world market, and have evolved a plan of sales distribution which is not only the most effective but the simplest that could be devised.

"It is nothing more or less than taking the picture to Europe, showing it to the various buyers, and then seeing what they will offer. In selling any product the main point is the goods that are to be disposed of. One can't take a sample of a picture, therefore the only thing to do is to take the picture itself.

"With this end in view I have sent William J. Hanley to Europe with a copy of 'Civilization.' He sailed last Friday on the Spanish line for Barcelona. I had him go to Spain first rather than to London or Paris, because in that way I overcome all danger of 'Civilization' being sent to the bottom of the ocean by a German submarine.

"He will give trade and private showings of the picture in Madrid, Lisbon, Rome, Paris and London. I expect to sail in about three weeks, and will meet him in London, and will then take up the active work of disposing of the rights to the picture for all of Europe and Russia. I do not believe that it will be necessary for us to go to Petrograd, as I understand that all of the big Russian buyers are now making London their headquarters.

"This sales plan is an elaboration of the one which I worked out for South America, and which is meeting with the greatest possible success. In every case where we have disposed of South American rights, the price has been greatly in excess of the highest price which I had put upon the picture for that territory.

"In every case where the rights of 'Civilization' have been sold the price obtained has been carefully worked out in proportion to the amount of business which it was possible for the picture to do in that territory. By working in this manner we have not only been able to obtain a better price for the picture, but we have also had the satisfaction of knowing that the man or men who bought it had a large enough margin to make their profits satisfactory and to make them pleased and satisfied customers.

"I believe that the same method of procedure can be pursued throughout Europe, and it is with this idea in mind that I am making this extended trip. I believe that more can be done for all concerned by a few hours' personal talk than through months of leter writing. Most of the pictures which I have disposed of in the past in the European market were sold through letter writing, and I know just how unsatisfactory this is for all concerned. I believe that this new method will work out more equitably."

Big Stories for Their Big Stars Is What Flying A Asks

American Companies in Need of Real Virile Dramatic Material Which Can Be Made Most of by Their Stars and Directors

THE American Film Company is in the market for scenarios. "We want great big compelling stories written especially for our stars," said R. R. Nehls, manager of the American and the other producing companies, Vogue and Signal, with which S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American, is associated, at the Chicago plant of the American the other day.

"We want scenarios for Mary Miles Minter. Do you know that out of about 2,000 scenarios sent in and designated as especially fitting for her the past three weeks we have not found one that stood out sufficiently above the others to warrant our buying it?

"We want scripts for William Russell. None of the ordinary wishy-washy kind, but stories replete with situations that will make the blood tingle, that call for genuine artistic appreciation and that will never for a moment tax the credulity of the picture audiences.

"We want dramas for Helen Holmes, filled with opportunity for her own peculiar kind of dare-devil playing. These should necessarily be railroad stories, or tales of other industries, the romance of which lends itself to picturization in punchy situations and thrilling plot, for instance, the lumbering industry, which has been made the basis for Miss Holmes' latest series, 'The Lass of the Lumberlands.'

"Our demand for comedies is small, since we have a large scenario staff to prepare material for Rube Miller, Paddy McQuire and Ben Turpin at the Vogue studios. But that should not discourage authors with good scripts. Everyone is always ready to snatch up anything that is really good."

"YELLOW MENACE" TURNS TO FIGHT SCENES

The Unity Sales Corporation will release the Eleventh Episode of "The Yellow Menace" this week, under the title of "The Half Breed's Hatred." As its title implies, this episode shows the awful character of the Oriental nature when once it starts out after vengeance on its enemies.

The fight scenes in this episode are remarkably well done, and are calculated to make any audience forget that the scenes are not taking place in real life.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"THE WAGER"

(Metro-Rolfe—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

EMILY STEVENS gives us a splendid character role in this unique comedy drama. She is at once the clever woman of quick wits, and the exact opposite, the woman of ideals and real moral character. She distrusts and in fact is unable to believe in the sincerity of the proposal which is made to her to pull off a diamond robbery for the fun of the thing. And she splendidly registers her fear, her doubts, and the terrible ordeal she is forced to endure when she decides to "go straight" in the face of a tempting offer to earn, by using her crooked wits just once more, enough money to pay for the restoration to health of "Slippery Jim," her sweetheart.

The story is this: Slippery Jim and "Diamond Daisy" have done many a crack job together, and we are shown how they "lifted" a swell ring by the chewing gum process. The ring sticks in the gum under the counter, while the girl is being searched and the accomplice removes it unsuspected. The jeweler who has been the victim in this robbery is ridiculed by his rival, and a bet is arranged between them and their friend the chief of police, that the same clever crooks shall be put up to steal ten thousand dollars from the jeweler who is so smart HE could not be caught.

The game devised by Diamond Daisy is simple. She has her pal ordered by the court to be committed to a private asylum, where force and straight jackets are resorted to. Convincing the head doctor that the patient will resist, and has the hallucination that he is being robbed, she arranges to bring the patient there. The patient, of course, is the jeweler instead of her pal. She tolls him there to "show the jewels to her wealthy father." He is thrown into a padded cell, while she escapes, and an added interest to the plot is gained by having the police chief himself think he has been duped after all, and that his reputation will be ruined because he has promised her immunity.

A more enjoyable plot, nor more sincere and well sustained acting, has not been offered in pictures for some time. We believe it is the kind of picture which will please greatly the average audience. The star and the title ought to bring business. The real substance to this plot, even though comedy so largely, should be much appreciated.

The excellent work of the cast is not limited to Miss Stevens. Lyster Chambers as "Slippery Jim," Hugh Jeffrey as the "Bonehead" Detective, Daniel Jarrett, Frank Currier, and Charles Bowser, as the Chief of Police, and the two rival jewelers, respectively, carried their roles admirably. George Baker directed the picture and we wish to commend him especially on the extremely funny scenes in the padded cell. There was plenty of realism there. He fully appreciated the relative values of his comedy and dramatic situations, and balanced his action carefully between them, so that each supports the other, rather than proving a detriment.

"THE BUGLER OF ALGIERS"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THERE is a cart load of sympathy in old age—perhaps that is why "The Bugler of Algiers" is one of the greatest five-reel dramas of recent date. It deals with the friendship of two old soldiers, friendship that lasts beyond the grave. It makes tears come to the eyes and what's more you don't feel at all ashamed about the tears. No mawkish, outlandish sentiment brings them but true, sincere, heart interest. We can take our old piece of phraseology "It tugs at the heartstrings" by the hand without any gloved veneer in the description of "The Bugler of Algiers." It is a great five-reeler.

There are thrills besides in this picture. The chief one which comes in the early part when the principals are yet young is wonderful. Imagine if you can the French bugler standing on the desert sands, a captive surrounded by the Moors. Beside him stands his companion. The bugler is commanded to sound his regiment's retreat. He will die unless he does. But instead he raises his instrument to his lips and gives the call to charge. His companion saves his life. What a chance there is here for appropriate music. But with or without it, you feel the thrill. It is real drama.

The picture is an adaptation by E. J. Clawson of the original story by Robert H. Davis and Perley Moore Sheehan, entitled "We Are French." Pierre and Anatole are soldiers in the French army. Anatole becomes a hero in the Moorish wars by his act of sounding the bugle charge when commanded to give the retreat. The companions return home to find Algiers a ruin and Gabrielle, Anatole's sister gone. Fifty years pass and the soldiers are old men. Then at last France decides to reward her hero, the bugler of Algiers, and with Pierre, Anatole sets off for Paris. But he never completes the trip. Pierre journeys on and impersonates Anatole at the reception. Receives all the honors for the sake of his dead pal and again meets Gabrielle who has been found. And that is the end. The bugler never meets his due.

As produced by Rupert Julian, "The Bugler of Algiers" has a wonderful setting. The costuming and scenes are correct. There are some fine pictures of desert fighting. There is realism in each scene. Julian himself carries the role of Pierre to perfection. Kingsley Benedict is exceedingly good as Anatole and Ella Hall completes the cast of principals as Gabrielle.

"DIVORCE AND THE DAUGHTER"

(Thanhouser-Pathe—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

WE have seen several pictures dealing with divorce, one just last week. We have seen enough of them in fact to come to the conclusion that divorce is poor picture material. The solutions reached in the picture fail to solve the divorce question even half way. But what is more important the pictures dealing with it are not dramatic. A series of incidents are presented, but they lack suspense. It is that way with "Divorce and the Daughter."

Now "Divorce and the Daughter" is a good drawing title. Of that we are quite certain. And perhaps the name of Florence

"The Instinct of the Brute Seems Always Present in the Drunken Varley"—The "Plow Girl" (Lasky)

La Badie will add a certain box-office attraction to this release. But aside from that we must confess to be at a loss for something praiseworthy to say in behalf of the picture.

A family after inheriting a small sum moves to the country. The father takes up painting, and there is a woman who makes a bet that she can win him from his wife. She does and shatters the happiness of the family. The daughter instead of marrying a young doctor hies herself to a man who has preached free love to her. He gets a little too free on her arrival, and she stuns him with a piece of antique masonry. Then she realizes that love and a home are everything, and the mother and father realize that their temporary separation must not be for the sake of their children, and so we leave the group happy once more.

Miss La Badie as the daughter does no creative work, but fares averagely well. Others are Edwin Stanley, Sam Niblack, Kathryn Adams, J. H. Gilmour, Zenaide Williams, Ethelmary Oakland and Arthur Le Vien. The production tendered the picture by Frederick Sullivan is adequate. The work of the cameraman is poor in a minority of the scenes.

"THE YEARS OF THE LOCUST"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

ONE'S first impression of this picture that a great deal of pains has been taken to dress up a story which has little sincere appeal to the dramatic sense, or to the deep sympathies of an audience. Too many fine drawing room scenes, for example, are devoted solely to illustrating the home life of an unhappy woman who marries for money and has all that luxury can give her but lacks the love and companionship of her husband, Aaron Roth, who meantime spends his money on another woman.

Beautiful settings and fine registration on the screen of stately agony by Miss Ward, varied by lonesome waiting of the lover who has exiled himself in South Africa and there become a wealthy diamond mine owner, introduce the only seriously dramatic theme in the first three reels of the picture, viz., the selling of fake oil stocks by Roth and the wrecking of his office by the infuriated mob of distracted investors, chiefly the poor and needy.

Continuing the narrative, Roth stows away on a vessel and is discovered. He jumps overboard and is rescued, but is reported drowned. Mead, the real lover of Lorraine, comes to America and takes her home with him to South Africa, where after a few happy months Roth returns to disturb their happiness.

Even at this point, with the dramatic reappearance of the supposedly dead husband, the proper thrill is not registered. Roth only demands money. And almost before we have begun to suffer suspense and feel the sympathy we should for the troubled wife, he turns crook again and is summarily killed, after a chase as the leader of a band of bandits who attempt to rob Mead of a big diamond he is taking to Kimberley for safe keeping. This "hold-up" and chase will pass as a fine Western thrill, and the scenes in the diamond mine are doubtless absolutely true to life, as claimed.

Miss Ward's personal admirers, and Paramount patrons who have learned to enjoy the artistic presentation common to all Lasky productions, will doubtless be pleased with this picture. It is not up to the usual standard of this star, however.

"THE PLOW GIRL"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

WHEN a Lasky star cast assembles to present a play with the requisite number of "situations" to work on, something worth while is sure to be produced, and this is what has happened in "The Plow Girl." Mae Murray, in the role of Margot, the abused little wait who suffers even the sting of the lash at the hands of the maliciously cruel Varley, a drunken South African farmer, impersonated by Theodore Roberts, has our sympathy from the first minute she appears on the screen. Elliott Dexter, as John Stoddard, the hero who comes to Margot's rescue, and fights for her in a style that leaves no doubt of the earnestness of it, makes an incomparable manly man. Edythe Chapman, as Lady Brentwood, and Billy Elmer as Kregler, who supplies the whiskey to Varley and also has to be licked by Stoddard for his part in the oppression of Margot, are wonderfully well handled character roles.

The original story of Edward Morris has been converted into strong drama. To be sure, without the perfect handling of the character parts the main interest of the play would be lost, but from the time the audience is introduced to the little plow girl who is lashed to her work by the drunken brute, a sustained sympathy is aroused and every development of the plot is followed with feverish interest.

Several unusual scenes are worth special comment. The plowing in the field, by Miss Murray and Mr. Roberts, seems to conform to the real thing, the deep straight furrow. The fights between Stoddard and Varley and Stoddard and Kregler reveal the stuff that men are made off. The scenes between the dignified but love-starved Lady Brentwood and the waif, Margot, first the meeting and acceptance as the missing granddaughter, then the recognition after denial of her right, before the picture of her mother, are thoroughly well acted and natural.

This play will appeal powerfully to any class of audience, but especially to audiences that understand the value of restraint in acting. Theodore Roberts as the South African farmer, in the many important scenes in the play, and later in the vision of the ghoul robbing the dead on the battlefield, gives us the most remarkable, though not the most lovable character he has yet portrayed.

"THE CHAPERON"

(Essanay-K-E-S-E—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

COMEDY is the dominating note in "The Chaperon," and as a light picture it makes an offering that the exhibitor can accept with little criticism. True, if you are looking for suspense, intense situations and the like you will not find them here. "The Chaperon" stands on its humor and lets the above elements alone. Luckily the humor is sufficient to bridge over five reels and make them entertaining and not tiring. It is an entirely human picture and the fun in it is the result of natural situations enacted with corresponding feeling.

The story was written by Marion Fairfax. She has put plenty of comedy in the house-party scenes when the butler, the cook and the chauffeur all quit for one reason or another. The manner in which the four girls and their respective lovers stave off the advances of a mercenary Duke who is searching for his runaway wife is done humorously and pleasingly. The production tendered by Arthur Berthelet is satisfactory in every major degree.

The story opens with Madge being forced into a marriage with a Duke by her ambitious mother. There is never any happiness in the affair and shortly afterwards Madge returns and happens to fall in as chaperon to four girls who have been left alone by their parents. When Madge's old suitor appears on the scene things start to hum. They go for a paddle on the lake, are stranded on a desolate island and are forced to remain there over night. The Duke finds them in the morning and threatens to enlarge on the situation by suing for divorce. However, he is quite content to accept a sum of money and let his wife take the divorce action.

Edna Mayo is quite charming in the title role. Eugene O'Brien is a gentlemanly hero, and Sydney Ainsworth a lukewarm heavy, which is just as he's meant to be. Others are Frankie Raymond, John Cossar and Marion Skinner.

Roth, the Husband, Reported Lost at Sea, Reappears to His Wife, Who Has Married Another.—"The Years of the Locust" (Lasky)

"AN ENEMY TO THE KING"

(Vitagraph—Six Parts)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is E. H. Sothern's second picture done for the Vitagraph and is considerably better than "The Chattel." It is a costume drama laid in France when the Huguenots were heavily persecuted by the Catholics. The costume drama is Mr. Sothern's forte and he is a much better hero of olden times than he is of modern. At that he is not a figure romantic enough to measure up to plenty of picture heroes. And this for the simple reason that he is old and that the screen reveals more than the stage.

Like as not though, the advertising worth of "An Enemy to the King" will pull it through despite any or all of its shortcomings. It is an adaptation of Robert H. Stevens' well known play, and this with the added attraction of Mr. Sothern should stamp it with the seal of success. Mr. Stevens' play, however, contains certain subtitles and intricate situations which in some cases have not been clearly put in the picturized version of "An Enemy to the King." De Launay's clever scheme to foil de Berguin for instance is rather clumsily drawn out.

A glance at the picture's merits though reveals much. The duel scenes are skilfully done, the comedy that Roland Buckston furnishes is genuine, this despite the fact that the actor's voice is a great laugh in itself. The performance of Mr. Sothern is careful and studied and is convincing. Edith Storey as Julie De Varien scores effectively in a big part embracing several big scenes, bigger so its seems than in many of Mr. Sothern's. The support which includes Frederick Lewis, Mildred Manning, John Robertson and Brinslew Shaw is entirely capable.

The plot centers about Julie De Varien who to free her father from prison undertakes to lure De Launay, an enemy to the King, to his adversary's hands, and that gentleman himself. Julie falls in love with De Launay not knowing who he is. She tells him that she desires to meet the king's enemy and he undertakes to lead her to him, finally, of course, revealing himself as the party she searches for. This stuns her as she has planned his capture and hastening to the king's underling she tries to straighten matters out. De Launay learning of her duplicity follows and arrives just in time to save her from treachery.

There is considerable byplay that we have not mentioned. Some of it is quite entertaining, sometimes even thrilling, some of it is rather superfluous. The scenario was done by H. W. Bergman and directed by Frederic Thompson. The production including costumes, settings, etc., is excellent.

"MISS GEORGE WASHINGTON"

(Famous Players—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

NOT a single "thrill," not a tear shed, not a bit of "moral" taught, nor famous author nor "best seller" to guarantee the story a box-office value, yet it can safely be predicted that more real money will be taken from admiring picture fans on this picture than anything yet produced by Paramount, and those who pay their money to see Marguerite Clark and Niles Welch in "Miss George Washington" will feel that they get value received, many times over. It has always been noticeable, that Marguerite Clark inspires the best in whoever plays opposite her, but even crediting Miss Clark with the honors in this picture.

The Discovery, from "Divorce and the Daughter" (Pathe)

Niles Welch as Cleverly Trafton surely was a cleverly handled role. Others in the cast, notably "Billy" Wilson, fitted well into the incidental roles.

To say that the comedy in Miss George Washington "gets over" is not doing the star half justice. To add that Marguerite Clark proves once more that in any role whatsoever in which she may choose to appear she has a charm and fascination all her own, does not tell why this particular picture is entitled to favor, so we will give a bill of particulars herewith.

We first see Miss Clark as a light hearted schoolgirl, to whom "veritas" is an unknown word. She wins the favor of her old maid teacher by many a clever prevarication of the "white lie" variety. When she gets permission to call on "Mr. and Mrs. Gardner," she does not see the tangle of embarrassment to come. She has been awarded the "truth medal," much to the amusement of her girl chums, by the hoodwinked "George Washington Truth" society; has been dubbed "Miss George Washington," and finds the medal and the name very convenient in the pursuit of—lies. When Mr. Gardner and "Mrs. Gardner" (for she assumes the latter title for one of her temporary escapes by the untruth route) are brought face to face, as guests under the same roof—and assigned the same room—events transpire with fascinating rapidity. A picture everyone will enjoy to the utmost. The only fault is, it ends just when you've had not half enough.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS"

(Bluebird Special—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

BLUEBIRD believes in Preparedness as well as the Play "The Eagle's Wings" is Preparedness propaganda of a very pronounced sort. But what is more important, it is entertainment besides. It is just what exhibitors need to weaken the supports on their galleries. For it is not likely that the collective feet of the audience will remain quiet while certain parts of "The Eagle's Wings" are on the screen, because the majority of the public is for Preparedness in the theatre whether it is in the heart or not. Incidentally the subtitles of the picture stand as signals for cheering.

The story was written and its production supervised by Rufus Steele. He begins by showing a misguided pacifist Senator at work spreading the doctrine that to arm means to invite war. But said Senator gets mixed up in the Columbus raid, which is such a bloodthirsty, horrible affair that he goes back to Washington and supports the Army and Navy bill. It goes through after the Senator makes his speech, and then the spectator is treated to a reel and a half of scenes showing the manufacture of ammunitions. Between these are interspersed subtitles of an heroic nature.

Mr. Steele's story hangs together very well and, with the raid and manufacturing scenes, there is never a sleepy moment. It will doubtless prove unusually lucrative for the exhibitor and for this reason Bluebird is making a special of it and offering it on the states right market.

The leads are taken by Grace Carlyle, Herbert Rawlinson, Charles H. Mailes, Albert McQuarrie and Walter Belasco.

"THE MEN SHE MARRIED"

(Peerless-World—5 Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

WE enjoyed every minute of this picture. If Harold Vickers' story has been written intentionally for pictures, and to coincide with happenings of the hour and what is in everybody's mind, he could not have done better. It is too bad, indeed, that the title of this story does not indicate the pure gold of its character. From the angle of nicely balanced dramatic force we have seldom seen its equal.

Society blackmail, with a strong sympathy created between the audience and the principal characters, and a plot which unfolds sincerely and evenly from opening to climax, furnishes throb after throb of suspense and interest. The battle of innocents has a wonderful appeal, and a very strong lesson.

Gail Kane, as Beatrice Raymond, rich heiress, is duped by an unscrupulous adventurer and clever check forger, through the hoax of a false marriage (which the audience and the victim believe to be a real marriage, however). Ralph Semple (Arthur Ashley) already married, wins Beatrice's love and then leaves her, after stealing her jewels and ten thousand dollars by a raised check. Jerry Trainer, a widower (Montagu Love) and the kind of man who wins instant admiration, many years later makes life brighter once more for Beatrice, and, receiving what she supposes to be authentic notice of Semple's death, she becomes the wife of Trainer.

Edith Trainer (Muriel Ostrich), Jerry's daughter, jealous of her father's love for Beatrice, refuses to confide in her stepmother, and when Semple, with blackmailing intent, reappears, it is an easy matter for him to intimidate the mother and at the same time arrange an elopement with the unsophisticated little girl.

Semple fails to reckon with the mother's sterling character, however, and the sacrifice she is willing to make when she accidentally discovers that the fiend has his net set for Edith. Semple overplays his cards and is rounded up red-handed, with all misunderstandings cleared away.

Fine direction and camera work, perfectly sustained interest, and dramatic acting at no point overdone but always most effective, deserve real praise and the cataloging of this picture as in the first class of excellence. Especially is it a clean, good story.

"CHILDREN OF THE FEUD"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE Fine Arts Company, through Scenarioist Bernard McConville, has made a better-than-ordinary picture in "Children of the Feud" by the combination of two stock plots, that of the southern moonshiner and that of the southern feud. Mr. McConville has drawn from real life for material for his climax. Perhaps that is why it is so strong and gripping. At any rate conventionality or not, exhibitors can be sure of a good thing in "Children of the Feud."

Sairy Ann Clayton is the daughter of an old moonshiner. Most of her time is spent caring for her six brothers and sisters. In these scenes the Fine Arts kiddies are again introduced to delightful effect. Old Clayton is arrested at last for moonshining along with Jed Martin, a relative who is in love with Sairy Ann. On release Jed swears to get even with Jackson, a deputy prominent in his arrest. The town doctor, who loves Sairy Ann, is also the recipient of Jed's hatred, and the moonshiner sets out to kill him. Instead he kills Jackson, is arretsed again and held for trial.

The trial is made the big scene of the picture, and it is really big without being conventionally tiresome. Both factions gather at Jed's trial and despite precautions Jed's followers bring arms into the courthouse. When they see things going against the prisoner they start shooting up the place and the judge, Sairy Ann's father and a dozen others are killed. After things have quieted down Sairy Ann and the doctor decide to marry.

Dorothy Gish is featured along with the kiddies, while others are A. D. Seard, F. A. Turner, Sam De Grasse, Alberta Lee, Elmo Lincoln and Charles Gorman. Joseph Henabery directed.

"JIMMIE DALE, ALIAS THE GRAY SEAL"

(Monmouth-Unicorn—Sixteen-Episode Serial)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE leading figure in this series, Jimmie Dale, seems destined to wide popularity because of his makeup—his character—and because of the actor, E. K. Lincoln, who impersonates him. Mr. Lincoln is just the right type to bring out the romantic, adventurous and fearless qualities of the role which Frank L. Packard, the author, has created. Jimmie Dale is one of those lawless gentlemen who rob from the rich and give to the poor, but the plot in which he moves is quite remote from anything we have had before presenting such a Robin Hood-like character.

There is plenty of suspense in the first three chapters. Jimmie Dale has the audience right from the start, for no reason in particular other than Mr. Lincoln stamps him with all the earmarks of a hero. And although he is seldom on the side of the law in all that he does you never want to see him worsted. He almost is in each of the three opening chapters and the scenarios are deftly enough arranged to make the spectator feel all sorts of qualms as to his welfare. Mr. Packard's stories are sprinkled sufficiently with mystery to appease the appetite of the serial audience with respect to this element also.

Jimmie Dale is a rich society man who has a passion for cracking safes. On every one he cracks he places a gray seal, hence his mysterious nom de plume. Of course, whatever booty he gets goes to some worthy charitable institution. In each of the episodes Jimmie is to aid some poor person who is oppressed. He does it in the second and third, but not in the first. This one is taken up in introducing the various characters. There is a girl (Edna Hunter) who is menaced by a Crime Society bent on securing her fortune. The band is headed by Paul Panzer, a very villainous villian, as everyone knows. Before much has happened Jimmie discovers that someone has learned of his safe cracking escapades. Ever afterwards he keeps getting mysterious letters telling him just what to do—and he must perforce do it. Every deed he thus commits is really a charitable one, but Jimmie wants to know who it is who posssses his secret. So does the audience.

We think "Jimmie Dale, Alias the Gray Seal," is certain of success. It has all the good points of a good serial. Fast action, mystery, adventure and popular players. The production is adequate in the bargain.

"JEALOUSY"

(Fox Film—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

ALONG with "Jealousy" comes Valeska Suratt, her hair, her sneer, her gowns and her cigarette. This time she takes the role of a woman who marries for money and not for love. An old suitor of her's marries for love and not for money and is very happy and so Miss Suratt in her role of Ann becomes jealous and tries to ruin his happiness. She goes about it in two ways, the two of which easily comprise the five reels, and there is never a moment when the story forsakes a fast and furious pace.

At first she employs a silk hatted and cutaway coated villain to compromise the wife. He is successful up to a certain point, but then a fall that results in mortal injury brings forth a confession. Then she tries to compromise the happy husband but her own husband sees through the trick and casts her off. The last scene shows Miss Suratt shaking her hair to a background of ominous storm clouds.

This melodrama was written and produced by Will S. Davis. It has been produced better than it has been written. Mr. Davis has employed coincidence generously and has introduced a number of situations that are convenient rather than logical, but then he has given his story such a good picturization that these things are covered up, almost buried altogether.

Miss Suratt's support is capable in every instance and includes Joseph Granby, Walter Law, Curtis Benton, Charline Mayfield and George M. Adams.

THE FIRST FOUR ART DRAMAS ANNOUNCED

ART Dramas. Incorporated, the company that was recently formed to distribute the productions of the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation, the U. S. Amusement Corporation, the Van Dyke Feature Production Company, and the Erbograph Company, has announced its releases beginning with the middle of December, and extending through to the middle of February of next year.

The first picture that will be released by the new organization will be a production from the studios of the Van Dyke Feature Production Company, "The Lash of Destiny," written and directed by George Terwilliger. Gertrude McCoy has the leading role. The release date is set for the 14th of December.

A week after the release of "The Lash of Destiny," "Whoso Taketh a Wife," will appear. The production will be released under the U. S. Amusement Corporation brand.

The third of the Art Dramas will be a picturization of a well known Broadway success, "The Rainbow." In the picture version of the play, Dorothy Bernard will play the part created by Miss Chatterton in the stage version, while Jack Sherrill will portray the male lead. The feature is being made by the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation.

The Erbograph Company will contribute the fourth release to the Art Dramas program, a picturization of "The Swinging Gates."

SIN THE SEVENTH IS A McCLURE MYSTERY

THERE is an element of mystery in the "Seventh Deadly Sin." There is also an alement of wise advertising in the mystery. The McClure Pictures have so far revealed the following deadly sins: Envy, Pride, Greed, Sloth, Wrath and Passion. Keeping the public guessing will aid in building up anticipation for the Seventh Sin when it is finally announced. Suspense of this variety worked nicely with a certain brand of chewing gum, regarding which six important things were known.

The exhibitors who are handling the McClure series will help their own cause along by stimulating interest in the mysterious seventh.

"HANS AND HENRI AND THE NEOPHYTE," "THE SNOWS OF MANY YEARS" AND "ODDITIES IN FILM FORM"

(Educational Films Corporation—Three Single Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THREE reels decidedly out of the ordinary are presented by the Educational Films Corporation under the direction of Robert C. Bruce in the above-named subjects, each released separately.

"See America First" will mean much more to anyone fortunate enough to climb Mt. Hood, Oregon, with Mr. Bruce and his real Swiss guides, Hans and Henri; or to make the discovery of an immense glacier, three and a half miles long and a full mile wide, and study it at close range with Mr. Bruce (Eliot Glacier, in Oregon); or to see the varied assortment of American "nuts" collected for us in the third reel.

Mount Hood raises its magnificent snow-capped summit eleven thousand and more feet above sea level, and Alpine climbing has no more fascination than can be enjoyed with real Swiss guides as shown by Mr. Bruce's pictures most vividly. What might be styled to most picturegoers a "new kind of photography" is the stereoscopic effect of the color-toned visualization of the difficulties and dangers of such a trip.

To most audiences the thought of picturing beautiful landscape and snow scenes suggests a monotonous succession of black and white contrasts, far from reproducing nature's grandeur. We have not realized heretofore the possibilities of what has become a reality in these pictures by Mr. Bruce. It is not the colors of nature which have been missed in ordinary "scenics" but the stereoscopic effect which Mr. Bruce has attained through two-toned color effects in all these pictures.

AITKEN AND HODKINSON ANNOUNCE FORMATION OF TRIANGLE DISTRIBUTING CORPORATION

IN answer to many inquiries, H. E. Aitken, president of the Triangle Film Corporation, and W. W. Hodkinson, president of Superpictures, Inc., announce the formation of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, to be owned jointly by their two companies.

The purpose of the new organization is to operate the twenty-two Triangle Exchanges and to handle exclusively in the United States the Triangle-Fine Arts, Kay Bee and Keystone productions, together with the films released by Superpictures, Inc.

Messrs. Aitken, Kessel and Baumann will continue their activities with the Triangle Film Corporation and the producing companies; and Mr. Hodkinson, as president and general manager of the new company, and Mr. Raymond Pawley, as treasurer, will be in charge of the distributing organization, with headquarters at 1459 Broadway, New York.

SCREEN CLUB HOLDS ANNUAL BALL AT HOTEL ASTOR

THE annual Screen Club ball was held in the gold room of the Hotel Astor on Saturday night, November 18.

The grand march was led by Billy Quirk and Norma Talmadge, who were followed by at least two hundred and fifty others.

In the line of march were Pearl White, Virginia Pearson, James Morrison, Mildred Manning, Edward Earle, Violet Mersereau, E. K. Lincoln, Chester Barnett, Barbara Tennant, Herbert Blache, J. Parker Reade, Jr., Edgar Lewis, Phil Lonergan, Agnes Johnston, Paul Scardon, Mabel Trunnelle, Herbert Prior, Carl Pierce and Julian Solomon. There were more who marched and more who did not. Clara Kimball Young graced the floor for a time. Francis Bushman, Alice Joyce, the Drews, Florence LaBadie, Robert Warwick, Carlyle Blackwell, Wally Van, Grace Darmond, Gladys Hulette, Mollie King and Maurice Costello hovered about with heroic effect.

Pete Schmid attended Tom Wiley's party along with one Margie Gans and so he slipped the NEWS representative the names of others present. They were Mr. and Mrs. Whitman Bennet, Mr. and Mrs. Carl H. Pierce, Julian Solomon, Jr. and Miss Lila Stephenson, Jack Larkin, Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Whyte, Mr. and Mrs. George Wiley, Mr. and Mrs. John Climer, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. O'Connor and Mr. and Mrs. E. Lanning Masters. When pressed Mr. Schmidt admitted that he had heard corks popping in the offing, although he refused to be quoted as saying such.

Richard Rowland, Daniel Frohman, Carl Laemmle, Lewis J. Selznick, Pat Powers, B. A. Rolfe and M. H. Hoffman were some of the executive stars present.

The boxes ranged around the mezzanine floor were held by J. V. Ritchey, Herbert Brenon, Bluebird, Universal, Nicholas Power, Metro, Thomas Donovan, Famous Players-Lasky, Edwin Carew, Monmouth, George Terwilliger and Joe Farnham, E. K. Lincoln, Vitagraph, Herbert Blache, William Fox, Owen Moore, Robert Warwick, P. A. Powers, World Film, Barry O'Neil, C. A. Willat, A. D. Kessel, Jr., Paul Scardon, Harry Morey and Lewis J. Selznick.

"FOLLOWING THE FLAG"

(Selig—Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

IN many communities these views of militia life on the border will prove a drawing card. It is reasonable to suppose that the parents of boys now in active service will want to see the routine of their son's daily life. Guardsmen who have been mustered out will want to see their experiences reenacted on the screen.

The various views of troop activities are diversified enough to maintain interest. The editing, barring the leaving in of too many marching scenes, was well done. The photography is as good as the necessarily impromptu camera work would permit.

Among the scenes shown are infantry on the march, cavalry evolutions, artillery practice, and commissary department at work. Other representative views show vaccinating of troops, observation balloon, and the disinfection of horses.

DE LUXE, SAN FRANCISCO, SECURES "CONQUEST OF CANAAN"

THE De Luxe Film-Lasky Corporation of San Francisco have secured the Frohman production, "Conquest of Canaan," taken from the novel by Booth Tarkington. This is their initial release and as the reviewers approved this six-reeler the company is confident of its popularity.

A NEW FILM SERVICE BUREAU FOR CHICAGO TERRITORY

SOMETIME AGO, Messrs. A. J. Balaban and Samuel Katz, both well known men in Chicago film circles, organized a chain of Chicago motion picture theatres, calling it the Amalgamated Theatre Corporation. The success met with by this chain of theatres in dealing with exchanges in Chicago suggested that this organization might be used beneficially by exhibitors who are dependent upon Chicago for their bookings.

Consequently Messrs. Balaban and Katz have opened offices to be run in connection with the Amalgamated Theatre Corporation to take care of the wants of exhibitors in the territory surrounding Chicago. They are prepared to efficiently handle all bookings for out of town theatres, and act as their Chicago agents in dealing with exchanges.

"THE HOCK SHOP"

(Mutt and Jeff Exchange—Half Reel)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

JEFF gets the upper hand in this laughable animated cartoon, which is one of the best of Bud Fisher's drawings for the screen. "The Hock Shop" boasts of more comedy and more plot than is usually found in the conventional one-reel comedy. Mutt tells Jeff he will teach him the game of football and while the little fellow is leaning over his hat waiting for the signal to pass it, Mutt hies himself to his uncle's and pawns Jeff's watch.

Later he goes to hide the money received and gets his head stuck in a tree. Jeff arrives on the scene and after giving Mutt a sound beating steals his trousers and gives them to the pawnbroker in return for his watch. And Mutt is arrested as an ex-convict because he had the misfortune to be wearing striped underwear.

ROTHACKER MAKES TRIP TO NEW YORK

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, president of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company, Chicago, is leaving on the Century Tuesday for New York. He expects to be here until the end of the week on business, stopping at the Hotel Biltmore.

HOPP ELECTED TO THE EXECUTIVE BOARD OF CHICAGO EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE

AT the regular meeting November 3 of the Chicago Exhibitors' League in their headquarters in the Masonic Temple building, Joseph Hopp was elected member of the executive board. Louis Frank, the opposing candidate, was defeated. Mr. Hopp was one of the original organizers of the league and has the entire confidence of every member. Incidentally the November 3 meeting boasted of the largest attendance the league has seen in several years.

Tabloid Reviews for the Busy Exhibitor

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

"Following the Flag." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., Nov. 27.)—Reviewed at length elsewhere in this issue.

"Mistakes Will Happen." (Selig. Sat., Dec. 2.)—This Tom Mix release falls far short of the average Mix picture. The aim was to produce comedy, but only very unsophisticated people will be amused by the action. This comedy ineffectiveness is mainly due to the poor work of Victoria Forde, who is neither physically nor histrionically fitted for her part. Pat Chrisman and Sid Jordan also appear.

Tom Warner and Vicky Mason are about to be married when Tom discovers he has forgotten the marriage license. He rides to town for it, but is forced to change horses with a fleeing horse thief. Tom is arrested by a sheriff's posse and the waiting bride gnashes her teeth until the real thief is caught and Tom is released.

"Unto the Least of These." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 21.)—The well-chosen cast of this picture was given a very weak vehicle. There are, however, many fetching human interest touches which would have put the drama over more effectively if the author had not closed with an unnecesary unhappy ending. Mary McAllister, a child actress, does excellent work throughout. This very pleasing little girl will certainly win a following for herself. The support given by John Cossar and Frankie Raymond is good. The settings and photography are adequate. Helen Brown's parents are devoted to her when the family is in poverty. The father becomes wealthy through an invention and the family changes its standard of living. Little Helen does not like her French maid and finds that her father and mother are too engrossed in their social affairs to take any interest in her. On this account she runs away. Then the father and mother are distracted and resolve to make the little girl happy if they ever recover her. The child returns the next day and is loaded with attentions for a short time. Then her parents again neglect her, and she is very unhappy.

"A Tin Soldier." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Nov. 28.)—This comedy not shown for review; the story follows: Mr. Bridge takes his wife to a masque ball. He is tortured by an aching tooth and a flirtatious adipose matron. He escapes and goes to a dentist. His son takes his costume and returns to the ball, where the heavy vampire, mistaking him for his father, resumes her flirtation. This affair is discovered by Mrs. Bridge, who next day berates her faithless husband. This makes the innocent Mr. Bridge so angry that he orders his son to kick downstairs any fat woman who calls. Mrs. Bridge's second cousin, somewhat fat, arrives for a visit, and the son enthusiastically kicks her into a manhole. In the cast are Geo. Bean, Florence Oberle, Bruce Kent and Florence Barr.

"Dreamy Dud Joy-Riding with Princess Zlim." (Essanay. Split reel. Wed., Nov. 29.)—Sharing the reel with Dreamy Dud's animated cartoon adventures are 500 feet of scenic taken at the Apache Trail and adjoining locality.

"The Final Fraud." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Dec. 2.)—Not shown for review; the story follows: Dick Denton, a young man of uncertain identity, wins the love of Marie Weston. Notwithstanding that Denton refuses to give an account of himself, her father, a millionaire, finally consents to their marriage. Weston is entrapped by LeStrange, the chief of a coterie of international blackmailers. Led to the crook's den, he finds Denton, apparently a crook also. Weston tells his daughter, and forbids the marriage. She is heartbroken. However, when Dick and the blackmailers are arrested finally in a spectacular raid, Marie goes to him at the prison. She tells Dick she will marry him if he will promise to reform. It is then that the chief of the Federal secret service enters and congratulates Dick. For instead of being a crook, Denton is in reality a secret service agent who had disguised himself in order to round up the blackmailers. The cast is composed of Bryant Washburn, Gertrude Glover, Ernest Maupain and John Cossar.

"The Fight For Paradise Valley." Sixteenth episode of "The Girl from Frisco." (Kalem. Two Reels. Wed., Nov. 22.)—This serial is maintaining its high standard most valiantly, notwithstanding the fact that sixteen episodes have been enacted and there are nine more to come. Marin Sais as Barbara Brent performs some wonderful feats of daring, and the manner in which she handles her fire arms throws a scare into one at least of the men working under her, to say nothing of the bad man's keen regard for her grit. It is a wonderfully realistic, true to nature picture and the photography is exceptionally good. The picture of the pistol combat between the irrigation plant hands and the gang hired to impede the progress of the irrigation concern speaks volumes for the excellence of the photography, the landscape being beautifully clean cut and distinct. Ronald Bradbury as Bad Bill leads his gang in genuine "badman" style, but is ultimately routed by armed forces under the girl and her father Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson).

"The House of Three Deuces." Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter." (Kalem. One Reel. Fri., Nov. 24.)—This episode of an intensely interesting serial is crowded with lively incidents, most of which go to show that not only has Grant, of the Chronicle, a keen "nose for news," but also possesses sterling detective qualities, as is evidenced by his trailing an Italian murderer to 222 Kenig St., or the House of Three Deuces, as it is known. The Tie of Ollie Kirkby is delightful in its simplicity and the performance of Robert Ellis as Joe the Wolf, is about all that could be desired. Of course George Larkin as Tommy Grant is the kingpin of the combination, and when he gets a clue he follows it up rigorously, but without due regard for his own safety. The fight with the Wolf on a decrepit fire escape is a fine piece of work, but Joe the Wolf is not taken alive. This episode is one that will appeal strongly to almost every element of motion picturedom.

"The Forgotten Train Order." Episode of "The Hazards of Helen." (Kalem. One Reel.)—Helen Gibson acquits herself most creditably in this episode and is sure to retain the good will she has already earned. With scarcely a breathing spell she is rushed from one hair-raising exploit to another and invariably gets away without a scratch. Perhaps the most remarkable performance is her boarding the engine of a rapidly moving train from a motorcycle, just in time to warn the engineer and avert a headon collision. A remarkably interesting serial that should be well received by all classes of audience. The characters are Benton of the United Press, P. S. Pembroke; Mr. Norton, G. A. Williams and Spug, George Routh. Direction—Walter Morton.

"Dudes For a Day." (Kalem. One Reel. Tues., Nov. 28.)—This picture is one of pure comedy, clean and full of mirth-provoking features. The plot involves the making of a hod carrier into a millionaire and his futile endeavors at aping society, and his daughter's just-as-clumsy antics in the same direction. Two disreputable looking characters, Ham and Bud (Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan) are rigged out in glad scenery as an advertisement for one Kluck, a tailor. In the park they meet the new millionaire and daughter whom they impress with their high sounding titles and whom they promise to escort to the Castorbilt Ball. The trouble of no invitation is overcome by their taking them to the Gas Tank Boys' dance, Ham and Bud consoling themselves with the belief that their guests will not know the difference. Of course, Brique N. Morton (A. Edmondson) can't readily get away from his habits of former days and at the dance he is naturally very much at home among the habitues of the place. Henry Murdoch as Kluck the Tailor creates quite a little merriment with his manouvres.

"His Conscious Conscience." (Vitagraph.)—Written and produced by Lawrence Semon, this comedy possesses a fair story and several humorous touches, but in their picturization the author-director has fallen down. The latter part of the reel is rather hackneyed and depends entirely on the girations of Hughie Mack to put it across. Patsy De Forrest is opposite the fat fellow.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"The White Turkey." (Nestor. Mon., Nov. 27.)—In which two farmhands both endeavor to catch the lost white turkey. They resort to deceit and one paints a brown turkey white, while the other procures a rooster. The girl discovers this but finally they both catch the turkey and so there's a Thanksgiving dinner after all. A very good Nestor is this with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Priscilla Dean and Fred Gamble as principals. Bess Meredyth wrote the scenario. A good atmosphere is furnished by some double exposure work, ringing every scene with stretches of harvest fields.

"A Modern Cain." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Nov. 28.)—John McDermott, author and producer of this picture has made a powerful drama out of the theme of the woman with the past. This time her past is intimately though innocently connected with that of her husband's brother, and when the blackmailer learns of her happy marriage to one of his own blood he goes out of her life forever. The cast includes George Beranger, Ruth Clifford and Edward Hearn.

"The Last of the Morgans." (Laemmle. Two reels. Wed., Nov. 29.)—This subject by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude shows a destitute southern colonel who is forced to sell his old homestead. His negro servant, also a relic of other times, in digging about the place finds some old jewels hidden long ago and so the colonel is able to buy back his property. This stars Wiliam V. Mong and has little else to it but Mong. His continual appearances are apt to tire. The story is rather poorly worked out. Harry Holden, Nellie Allen and William Canfield are others.

"Eat and Grow Hungry." (L-Ko. Wed., Nov. 29.)—A laughable reel in which there are numerous rapid-fire changes of clothing. The janitor loses his pants and steals a lady's skirt. The humor is of a like sort throughout but it is done in a style that does not offend. Some of the photography is a little below average. Phil Dunham leads the cast.

"Mother." (Big U. Thurs., Nov. 30.)—By Lynn Reynolds, featuring Dorothy Davenport. A story of the patience and love of a mother as compared to the unintentional carelessness and neglect of a son and daughter. Both the children have city positions and Mother writes inviting them to be home on her birthday. The son acknowledges the letter, regrets his inability to be present, and encloses a check. The daughter coldly announces that there's a ball on that date and it would be impossible for her to go home. But the mother does not receive the letters and the all important day arrives finding her busy preparing all kinds of goodies for the event. In the meantime the son and daughter meet accidentally at a fashionable restaurant in the city and decide to visit their mother on that date notwithstanding their notes to the contrary. On the other hand, the mother is sure they will put in an appearance and continues making arrangements. When everything is in readiness the two letters are handed to the mother by the doctor, who blushingly admits he has carried them in his pocket for a week. The mother is grieved at the news contained therein, but her grief is immediately turned to joy when her children appear on the scene.

"The Mansard Mystery." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 1.)—A fine mystery story, scenario for which was done by Harvey Gates from an original work of Sylvester Jones. An old colonel has been systemically poisoned and for a time everyone in his household, including the old gentleman's fiance, his son and his ward are believed guilty. But after all it turns out that an Indian is the culprit because the colonel had wronged his sweetheart in his younger days. The suspense in this is good and the staging praiseworthy. Howard Crampton, Francis McDonald, Neva Gerber, Wadsworth Harris and Joseph Gerard are the leads.

"Tattle Tale Alice." (L-Ko. Fri., Dec. 1.)—There is little comedy in this reel which shows the efforts of two old men to win the hand of a young girl and trying to avoid the gossips.

The last few scenes featuring the comic police are really funny. Louise Orth and Alice Howell are in the cast.

"Just Her Luck." (Victor. Two reels. Sun., Dec. 3.)—Written by Constance Crawley and Arthur Maude, this picture attempts satirical comedy and does not fare exceptionally well in the effort. It shows the peculiar misadventures that befall a girl who comes to the city to make her way. Irene Hunt, Lee Hill and Mina Cunard are the principals.

"The Bad Samaritan." (Eclair. Two reels.)—This picture points a moral, warns against the evils of gambling and incidentally shows the many different means employed by different classes of people to secure money. A young man out West falls in with congenial though extremely crooked companions and was about to be drugged by one of them for the small bank roll he is known to have in his possession, but the other man objects to "robbing women and children" and sends the prospective victim on his way. The "victim," however, finds his way into Faro Jim's Emporium, and a few turns of the roulette wheel relieves him of all he has—visions of his wife and child back East unnerve him and he prepares to end it all by suicide, when a cowboy raises the amount lost and sends him on his way with the admonition that he confess all to his wife and never gamble again. The principals are F. G. Hearn, Hal Wilson, Harry Schenck, L. J. Hall, H. A. Alrich, and Herbert A. Myles.

"With or Without." (Vogue. Two Reels.)—It is indeed a hard matter to figure out the relationship between this so-caled comedy and its title, which is from the pen of Robin Williamson. The plot is flimsy and the rough and tumble fight between two women—supposedly of refinement—does not lend dignity to the picture.

"Up the Flue." (Vogue. Two Reels.)—Woven around a blackmailing plot this comedy is one continuity of happenings, and for action and snap leaves nothing to be desired. The main happening perhaps is the throwing out of a dynamite bomb just as it is on the point of exploding, and when the explosion does occur it wrecks a smoke stack on the top of which three men are fighting. Then follows a general upheaving of the ground and about half a score of men and women extricate themselves from the debris. The characters are Rube Miller, Larry Bowes, Roy McCray, Lillian Hamilton, Harry Huckins, Florence Rosee and Owen Evans.

METRO

"Henry's Thanksgiving."—Decidedly appropriate for Thanksgiving release is the latest Metro-Drew comedy, "Henry's Thanksgiving." The idea is conceived by Henry of inviting a nice old lady to grace their lonely board. And an advertisement is inserted, inviting a nice old lady to dinner. Very many nice old ladies accept the invitation, and Henry has to do some tall hustling to provide for the unexpectedly large party. The selection of the members of the Sunset Club, of New York, for the character roles of the unexpected guests, was opportune. Although we understand never appearing before the camera before, no self-consciousness is shown, and the plot is greatly enhanced by having these really genteel old ladies as the guests in the picture.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

"How Matches Are Made." (Split reel.)—The inner workings of a Norwegian match factory are shown in this half reel. It is an excellent educational and highly entertaining besides. On the same reel with "The Island of Kyushu."

"The Island of Kyushu." (Split reel.)—A few attractive scenes of this island in the south of the Japanese group offered in color follow "How Matches Are Made."

"Luke's Movie Muddle." (Rolin.)—Luke as the combination box office man, doorman and usher of a picture theatre cuts an unusually ludicrous figure in this comedy. Humor is extracted from everything to do with a house. Ushering, operating and piano playing come in for burlesque and the whole is done in a highly amusing style. Harold Lloyd and his usual supporting cast appear.

"The Old Fogy." (Three reels.)—A melodrama dealing with the one-time sweetheart of an old bookkeeper. She comes back to town as a circus employee and tries to swindle the old fogy out of a large sum of money that her employer may meet his debts. She discovers the duplicity of the circus man and returns it. The villain comes to a sensational end, being killed by a lion. This is ripe old melodrama and is generally well put on save for some "prop" rocks used in the final scenes. The actor who plays the title part is not good, although his shortcomings are about counterbalanced by the performance of the leading actress.

"The Shielding Shadow." (Astra. Two reels. Tenth Episode.)—The plot develops over considerable space in this number entitled "The Vanishing Mantle" and with the swift action there is a good deal of suspense. Ravengar discovers Leontine in the hands of the crooks headed by Sebastian and rescues her by bestowing upon her his magic mantle which enables her to disappear. An effort on Sebastian's part to kill her proves futile, but just before the chapter closes the mantle is stolen by a member of the band.

JUNE CAPRICE IN THANKSGIVING OFFERING

On November 27 William Fox will release June Caprice's fourth photoplay, under title of "The Mischief Maker," a rollicking picturization of a madcap's deviltry.

The production bubbles over with the Thanksgiving spirit, and is an ideal release for the holiday season.

In the cast with Miss Caprice are Harry Benham, John Reinhard, Margaret Fielding, Inez Marcel, Minnie Milne, Tom Brooke, and Nellie Slattery.

"CHARITY?" WELL RECEIVED BY CHICAGO SOCIOLOGISTS

"Charity?" the special Mutual production produced by Frank Powell, was shown before an audience of Chicago sociologists at the Ziegfeld theatre on Friday, Nov. 10. Bishop Samuel Fellows, one of America's leading clergymen, was present to give a short address on the subject of orphaned children and to express his appreciation of Mutual's big feature.

Slips on which requests for opinions were asked were distributed and the enthusiastic responses received shows that those philanthropically inclined consider "Charity?" a great picture. Among those present were Judge and Mrs. Thomas F. Scully, Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank, president of the Chicago Lying-In Hospital and Dispensary, Mrs. M. L. Rothschild, Miss Caroline E. Hughes of the Child Welfare Club of Philadelphia and Miss Mary Bartelmae. Six hundred attended the showing all told.

McMAHAN AND JACKSON SECURE NEW REPRESENTATIVES

The McMahon and Jackson Film Company announce that they have secured the services of Frank L. Smith, formerly district manager of the General Film Company, as their special representative, and F. L. Leslie, formerly manager of the Unicorn Film Service's Columbus branch as a roadman, Stanley C. Jacques becomes McMahan and Jackson's special representative in Indiana and Kentucky.

This concern has purchased the Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky rights to "Should a Girl Be Told?" which has just completed a long engagement in Cincinnati.

ART DRAMAS PRODUCERS ENGAGE TERWILLIGER

Van Dyke Company gets George Terwilliger and Gertrude McCoy; U. S. Amusement engages Jean Sothern and Frank Crane, Sherrill and Erbograph companies adding players and directors. All seeking stories of suitable strength.

"Satan" Is a Seven Part State Rights from Radio

Deals with the Work of Its Titular Character from the Beginning of the World to the Present Time

THE Radio Film Company is offering on the states rights market a seven part feature entitled "Satan," which in episode form unfolds a drama reaching from the beginning of the human race until the present day. It is allegorical in nature, in that the personification of Satan moves on the screen in each period of the drama influencing other figures of the play to forsake the "Straight and Narrow" for "The Easiest Way."

The first part of the picture deals with the fall of Adam and Eve, who after their capitulation to the wiles of Satan are driven from the Garden of Eden, across a desert of wastes to rear a race of men doomed to suffer "eternal woe and anguish." Succeeding episodes deal with the crucifixion of the Christ preceded by the betrayal of Judas and followed by the resurrection. It is said that these events are portrayed with such dignity that their sight will give no offense to the most sensitive.

The Middle Ages form the next background for the machinations of Satan. He invades the sacred precincts of a monastary and corrupts its inmates with the lure of gold. The picture ends with an episode setting forth a drama of the present day in which the modern folk in their vain pursuit of pleasure encounter the spirit of Evil and go down in the dust before it.

Timely Holiday Features Are Set for Release by Bluebird

BLUEBIRD has done its Christmas shopping, and its token to the exhibitor will be a screen version of the famous Dickens classic, "A Christmas Carol," which E. J. Clawson has adapted to the screen and Rupert Julian has directed. The release will be made December 18 with Mr. Julian, Francelia Billington and Agnes Vernon featured. The Christmas week showing will be "The Shriveled Soul," a Lynn Reynolds production, introducing George Hernandez, Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez in the leads.

The Bluebird version of "A Christmas Carol" takes liberties with the immortal Dickens; the scenes start with Scrooge's early life, and gives Francelia Billington opportunity to impersonate Scrooge's sweetheart. John Cook will be Bob Crachitt; Mrs. Titus will be Miss Fezziwig; Harry Carter will be Marley and Agnes Vernon will play a role listed as Caroline. The ghosts of the past, present and future will be impersonated by Wadsworth Harris, Dick Le Strange and Tom Figee. The spirit of Tiny Tim will prevade the production.

Lynn Reynolds wrote and produced "The Shriveled Soul," scheduled for Christmas week. George Hernandez will impersonate a man who has withdrawn from the world, but through his love for a little child is restored to his originally kindly self. Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez will be featured with Mr. Hernandez in the presentation.

Rex Ingram's production, "Flowers of Doom" on January 1, will bring Cleo Madison back to the Bluebird series for her second feature. She scored a great success in "The Chalice of Sorrow," another Ingram production, and will be supported by the same cast, in the forthcoming feature—Wedgewood Nowell and Francis McDonald leading.

But one more release remains to be scheduled and then Bluebird will have completed its first year. Number Fifty-two will be the attraction for the week of January 15. In selecting releases for the final weeks of the year, Bluebird has been careful to provide attractions that will conclude the period in an appropriate manner, and set the pace for other good features at the outset of the second year.

Independent of the program, "The Eagle's Wings" will be released as a special feature, December 4, to be distributed along state right lines by managers of Bluebird exchanges. This is an industrial preparedness feature, proving in actual photographs of munition plants now operating on European war orders, what captains of industry can do in co-operation with Uncle Sam should war be unexpectedly declared.

Rufus Steele who wrote the story and supervised the production, has written a script to build up the importance of industrial preparedness. Sets, representing the Senate and House of Representatives with Congress in session, were built; there is an authentic representation of the Mexican raid on Columbus, N. M., and more interesting and instructive than all else will be the photographs taken in Government arsenals and in munition plants now at work. Some of the scenes also show activities of the United States land forces.

Gaumont Turns Out Seven Reels Through Mutual Thanksgiving Week

FROM the Gaumont Laboratories and Studios, motion picture theatres will receive through Mutual the week of November 26, seven reels, the second episode of "The Vampires" and four single-reels. The week's installment of the photo-novel is entitled "The Red Notebook." Released November 30, it deals with the efforts of the reporter-hero to decipher the secret code in which the Vampires have set down in the red notebook some of the well-guarded secrets of the predatory band.

"Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, released November 26, will contain four interesting sections. "Gathering Cacao" in Brazil is the first. From the cacao bean cocoa is made. One of the season's fashionable dances, "Taps," is demonstrated next by G. Hepburn Wilson, supreme master of the dancing organization known as the Inner Circle. The third gives scenes pertaining to the scallop.

"BILLY WEST" COMEDIES GOING OVER IN PITTSBURGH TERRITORY

Jacques Spiegel, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, announces that following a screening of the "Billy West" comedies, numerous well-known exhibitors who were present pronounced these reels to be among the best in the comedy line.

Among those making bookings were: William Mason, representing Harry Davis, five days; J. Kirch, representing Clarke and Rowland, five days; A. G. Burg, representing the Aultmeir theatre, four days; Peter Antonoplos, representing the Olympic theatre, two days; Professor Cerechter, representing the Anchor theatre, two days; W. T. Boehmer, representing the Royal theatre, one day.

Similar reports of the eagerness with which exhibitors are booking the "Billy West" comedies, have been received from each of the Unicorn's twenty-eight branches throughout the country. President Ike Schlank announces that the Unicorn will shortly issue another comedy serial, which will equal the "Billy West" series. In the meantime Director Edwin McKim is hard at work on the "Billy West" series.

General Western Representative J. E. Willis wires from Chicago that "His Married Life" scored a sensational success at the Alcazar theatre, 69 West Madison street (in the loop). According to H. M. Miller, manager of the Alcazar theatre, the film was a "big winner." Twice during the afternoon, and even as early as 10.30 in the morning Manager Miller had to "turn them away." The exhibitors who were present at the showing commented very highly on the picture. M. M. Rubens, manager of the Motion Picture Reporting Service, of 814 Schiller Building, states that he would rate the "Billy West" pictures 90 per cent. efficient, and added that he would book all the series for all of his houses.

GREENE WILL MAKE SOUTH AMERICAN FOR NEW COMPANY

Edward Greene, an employee in the film department of the Mutt and Jeff Film Company has been appointed film supervisor for the South American Film Service Corporation, the new distributing company located in Buenos Ayres, Republic of Argentine. Greene is one of the promising of the younger men in the film industry. His work under Harry Grossman who heads both the Mutt and Jeff concern and the South American Company, was so meritorious that he was appointed to this important position in the new company. Greene sailed for Buenos Ayres on November 25.

PSYCHOLOGICAL DRAMATIC TECHNIQUE MASTERED BY FROHMAN AMUSEMENT

The Frohman Amusement Corporation gave a trade showing of "The Witching Hour" at the Strand Theatre, Wednesday morning, Nov. 22d at ten o'clock.

Invitations were sent out to the known exhibitors and reviewers, and many were admitted upon presentation of card.

"Robinson Crusoe" Is Not for Children Only

In Spite of the Impression Which Has Been Created the New Savage Picture Was Made Intentionally for Grown-Ups

THE wrong impression seems to have been created regarding Savage's new production, "Robinson Crusoe." It is not essentially for children. While it will appeal to the younger generation, just as the story itself has appealed to youth for centuries, the filmed story was made with grown-ups particularly in mind.

George Marion, who directed the picture, expressed no little indignation when the rumor reached his ears.

"Of course the kids will enjoy 'Robinson Crusoe,'" he said, "but I hate to have the public imagine that it is only a matinee proposition. We took especial pains to reproduce Crusoe's life accurately. I studied the styles of dress and the types of firearms of the people of Crusoe's time, and I visited the library every night for a week merely in order to reproduce correctly the dress of the pirates. The ship in which Crusoe was wrecked I had constructed from an actual model.

"Youngsters appreciate this detail, of course. But grown-ups insist upon it. And this is a picture for people with intelligence, many of whom have read 'Robinson Crusoe' in their youth."

"Robinson Crusoe," as we go to press, is undergoing the final assembling and captioning. As announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS last week, the picture is to be released on the states rights basis exclusively. A national publicity campaign is being inaugurated, which will be placed within the reach of all exhibitors.

Taking Time by the Forelock Improves

Big Features Made Far in Advance of Release Date So Comparisons and Suggestinos Will Aid

WILLIAM A. BRADY, director general of the World Film Corporation, was questioned a day or so ago regarding the advantages derived by his company from having its photoplays in readiness a full half year in advance.

"The benefits are many and of great importance," said Mr. Brady. "Some of these have been mentioned already, but one of the most vital is that the plan enables us to eliminate possible defects in a picture before its release.

"For example, some time ago at a private view I found that one of our pictures dated for release four or five weeks ahead could be materially improved by certain changes which suggested themselves during the run-off, and I immediately set it back for two months, moving another play up to take its place. Then one evening I went to work with the director of the imperfect picture, and by three o'clock in the morning we had it in such shape that when it was finally issued the success was very great.

"If we had not been in a position to hold this play back it might have been received with disfavor, or at least severely criticized, whereas the comments were very cordial indeed. You see, we are in a position to go over our pictures again and again, examining them from every conceivable angle, and not alone that but to let enough time elapse between these examinations to give us clear minds.

"The late Dion Boucicault, who was both proficient and prolific in writing for the stage, once told me that as soon as he finished a manuscript he locked it in a drawer and busied himself with something else for a full month, so that when he took up his play again he was able to perceive defects which he almost surely would have overlooked while in the spirit of his work.

"The Boucicault system applies perfectly to the preparation of motion pictures, for one carelessly made or unsatisfactory production does more damage to its sponsors than can be undone by three or four exceptionally good ones.

"The improvement which has been very generally noted in World pictures, and which is responsible for the great increase in our business, is not due to the overshadowing genius of any individual, but to the constant, patient, and intelligent application of those who make the pictures and the others who sell them. Regarded from all points of view I believe the World concern at this time is as close to one hundred per cent. efficient as any organization of its magnitude can be.

"I will add that the policy of completing our productions months in advance has worked out so well that it will be continued and probably amplified in the future. We are already worikng on no less than six additions to the list that was published about a month ago."

BUSTER BROWN'S DOG "TIGE" IN SHADOWGRAPH

The policy of the Gaumont Company is to release an occasional novelty. This brings to the screen November 24 a Shadowgraph entitled "Haystack Horace, or A Knight of the Road." It was written and produced by Harry Palmer, who animated the Gaumont Kartoon Komics, and replaces one of these animated funnygraphs on the reel with "See America First," No. 64. A good cast of pantomimists supply the fun in silhouette. Among the players are Jack Bell, well known for his impersonation of animals. He duplicates in shadowland his success as Tige in "Buster Brown." Another animal he visualizes in "Haystack Horace" is a lion. Miss Hope Leslie has the leading feminine role. The comedy is mainly in the hands of Tom Ward as Haystack Horace. Another member of the Shadowgraph company is Joe Lasher, who has appeared in many Gaumont productions.

FRANK EVANS WITH GLADYS COBURN FOR FOX

Frank Evans, who gave a portrayal of the ship's mate in "The Unwelcome Mother," has a part in Gladys Coburn's first picture for William Fox. Evans has played in earlier Fox films, such as "Destruction" and "The Family Stain."

MURPHY DECRIES EXPENSIVE PICTURES AND PRAISES NICKEL SHOWS

General Manager Fred B. Murphy, of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, states that in his opinion the solution of the present disturbed condition in the motion picture world with its attendant high cost difficulty, lies in the supplying and distribution of really good one-, two- and three-reel pictures.

"There is one thing I can say, emphatically," said Mr. Murphy. "The moving picture business is a five- and ten-cent business, first, last and always. In this belief I am thoroughly sincere. The great fortunes of the business were made when it was of the nickel and dime order.

"There is hardly a story that is now being told in the multiple reel feature that cannot be told with greater force and convincing power in one or two reels. Yet the tremendous cost of five, six or more reels is freely indulged in by the producers, and foisted upon the public at great rental cost to the exhibitor and higher price of admission charged to the public, all for the boast of bigness. And the cost of features with its attendant search for effects and rapidly depleting supply of scenario material is getting greater and greater. The tax of the extra cost of living is having its deleterious effect upon all branches of the business."

"INCORRIGIBLE CAPTIVE" IS "SHADOW" EPISODE FOR RELEASE NOVEMBER 26 BY PATHE

The ninth episode of Pathe's serial, "The Shielding Shadow" is entitled "The Incorrigible Captive." It is announced for release on November 26, and deals with the appearances and disappearances of Ravengar, the mysterious.

Leontine is imprisoned by Sebastian in Bianca's gambling house. Again the mysterious Ravengar laughs at his shackles—comes to her aid and shows her the secret stairs to an underground sluiceway.

Bianca discovers her trying to escape and when Leontine is half-way out, turns on the electric switch controlling the sluicegates, and Leontine is caught in a watery trap.

The Shielding Shadow protects her. The switch is clicked back by an unseen hand and from the dungeon below, she shoots through the sluiceway to the river and swims to safety.

Exhibitors throughout the country report great success with "The Shielding Shadow." It is being booked by a number of the best theatres. Two high class houses in Detroit, that have heretofore never run serials, have contracted for "The Shielding Shadow." These theatres are the Liberty and the Knickerbocker.

SOL LESSER LOOKING FOR MORE SELIG FEATURES

Sol Lesser was in Chicago recently to confer with William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, and to transact other business. Mr. Lesser had heard so much anent the forthcoming Selig feature, "The Garden of Allah," that he requested and was granted a private presentation of the production which Mr. Lesser declared to be a winner.

General Film Program for Week of November 27-December 2

"FOLLOWING THE FLAG" the first picture released on General Film Service program for week November 27-December 2 inclusive, is a three reeler of considerable interest. The National Guards of the different states are shown entering McAllen, Mission and other cities near the border. It gives close-ups of the cavalry, infantry and artillery and depicts life as lived by the men on the border. Vitagraph offers "Taking the Honey Out of Honeymoon," a one-act comedy in which Mary Anderson is featured. Then comes the Selig-Tribune, showing pictorially all the big events of the day, followed by a one-reel drama reissued by Biograph "The Influence of the Unknown" in which Mae Marsh and Henry Walthall have the leading parts.

On the following day, George Beane supplies the fun in Essanay's two-reel comedy "A Tin Soldier." "Dudes for a Day," a one-reel Kalem production with an all-star comedy cast including "Ham," "Bud," Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch.

An Essanay cartoon "Dreamy Dud Joyriding with Princess Zlim," and a split-reel scenic will be the first picture Wednesday, November 29. Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby are seen in a Vim one-reel comedy "Hubby's Chicken." This will be followed by "Border Wolves," the 17th episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco" in which Marin Sais and True Boardman share honors. Irene Howley is starred in a Biograph three-reel drama (reissue) "The Wages of Sin" which rounds out the General program for that day.

Selig-Tribune and a Vim one-reel comedy "The Prize Winners" with Babe Hardy and Billie Ruge featured will be Thursday's offering.

A Knickerbocker Star Feature "Butts Casey—Crook," a drama in two parts, featuring Frank Mayo, will be the first picture flashed on the screen Friday, the first of December. The 7th adventure of Kalem's "Grant, Police Reporter" entitled, "The Wizard's Plot," starring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby will follow. Then will be seen a Vitagraph one-reel comedy "Have You Heard About Lillie?" and a Vim comedy of the same length, featuring "Pokes" and "Jabs" in "Ambitious Ethel" will close Friday's program.

Two of Essanay's stars, Bryant Washburn and Gertrude Glover are featured in the first picture shown Saturday, "The Final Fraud," a three-reel drama. Vitagraph's Broadway Feature "Our Other Lives," a drama of three reels in which Adele Kelly and Raymond Walburn have the titular roles, will precede "The Trial Run" an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Series" in which daring Helen Gibson is featured. The program for the day and week will close with Selig's one-reel drama "Mistakes will Happen" in which Tom Mix the cowboy actor is featured.

"The Black Butterfly," War Play, with Mme. Petrova as Star, Will Be Released by Metro on December 4

"THE BLACK BUTTERFLY," the new Metro-Popular Plays and Players production dealing with love and the war in Europe, in which Mme Petrova is the star, will be released December 4. In "The Black Butterfly" Mme. Petrova has one of the most superb screen plays in which she has appeared. Burton L. King directed the play, which was written by L. Case Russell and adapted for the screen by Wallace C. Clifton.

Unusual photography marks this five-act Metro wonderplay. Cameraman Andre Barlatier has achieved some excellent light effects, and in one scene has made a remarkable double exposure of Mme. Petrova as "the black butterfly" and as her daughter.

Rural Russia, peasant France, gayest Paris, and the battle trenches of Europe are shown in this gripping photodrama, which gives Mme. Petrova an unparalleled opportunity for her unusual talents. As simple village girl, as the favorite of Paris music-halls and toast of the cafés, as a carefully brought up child of the convent, and as Red Cross nurse, Mme. Petrova runs the whole gamut of delineation of character. To say that she is more than equal to all her opportunities is superfluous.

Sonia Smirnova falls in love with Gaston Duval, who takes her to Paris, where they are married. Soon after she is led to believe through a letter she receives from a woman, that the marriage was a mock one, and that she is not a wife. Wandering away she is harbored by nuns, with whom she leaves her child Marie. She becomes an opera singer, the toast of Paris. All men worship at her feet, but none interest her until she meets young Alan Hall.

Alan, however, has seen Marie, her daughter, and the two young people have lost their hearts to each other. When Marie fears that Alan will not return to her she attempts to commit suicide by throwing herself into a lake. Sonia reaches her side just after she has been rescued, discovers a photograph of Alan, and tells him she will not see him again.

"The Black Butterfly" mysteriously disappears. She is next seen as a nurse during the battle of the Marne. Gaston Duval, Colonel in the French army, is at death's door. Only blood transfusion will save him. Physicians appeal to the nurses for a volunteer and Sonia offers herself. When she recognizes Duval she steps back in loathing, and at first refuses, but finally consents to give up her blood for the glory of France. When he recovers sufficiently, she confronts him, and is amazed at his loving greeting. He had searched everywhere for her, as the marriage was legal, and the letter she received was from a jealous woman who wanted to marry Duval. Happiness reigns after years of sorrow.

Mme. Petrova's supporting cast is a strong one, including Mahlon Hamilton, Edward Brennan, Roy Pilcher, Evelyn Dumo, John Hopkins, Violet Reed, Count Lewenhaupt, Morgan Jones, Anthony Merlo, and Norman Kaiser.

Some Facts About the Business that Cannot Be Ignored

In reply to the last two editorials which have appeared on this page I have received the two letters as quoted below, which speak for themselves

"MY schooling has been entirely along the line of conservative, solid business methods, by which you take a business and watch it grow and see it increase year by year; but I must say that there are none of the usual standards by which you figure a business that can be applied to the motion picture business. For example, take the law of supply and demand. When there is too much wheat the price of wheat goes down, but with this work it is different. When there is too much film the price of film goes higher and higher. There are too many theatres and yet there are always more and mort starting. There are too many film manufacturers, yet somebody is always aiming to butt in.

TAKE, for example, the new theatre in ———. They came in with a grand and beautiful house. It will last about six months and in the meantime all the other boys are suffering. Men who have been the backbone of the business for years and years and have given it a lifetime of study are getting nothing out of it. A few good business men sell $150,000 worth of stock among their friends and build a wonderful palace—an ideal motion picture theatre—and they give a dollar program for a dime, and right now I know that these words are in the minds of everybody that goes in there. "This place is a wonderful gold mine. Why not start another one just as big, if not bigger?"

"IN reference to my own distribution I haven't been doing a great deal of business this last year, though I am aiming to make the cheapest and the finest that can be made. Even this is more than the exhibitor will pay for especially at the present time when he can hardly pay for anything.

I WROTE the meanest lot of letters last week that I ever wrote in my life and I got very little results except where I started suit. These conditions are simply brought on by the exhibitor being cleaned out week after week by advance deposit and higher price of film service; his equipment gets worse, his projection poorer, and his picture becomes less distinct day by day, and finally, in order to improve something, he buys a new projector, a screen, a pipe-organ or chairs, at a dollar down and aims to pay $1 a week and then cannot meet his payments.

"IT is absolutely wrong. Everybody ought to have something out of it, and the abuses of the Industry will never be eliminated until an agreement between competitive exhibitors is brought about."

These letters are significant—they show conditions in the trade from two angles which must be exposed if the industry is to prosper.

THE backbone of the business is the exhibitor—when we hear that he is not financially able to meet his obligations we know that all those who are dependent upon him cannot meet theirs. What is the answer? It is to a large extent given in the last paragraph of second letter. "The abuses of this Industry will never be eliminated until an agreement between competitive exhibitors is brought about."

THIS agreement does not and cannot mean the elimination of competition, for competition is the life of every trade. It merely means the meeting on a common ground of all theatre owners in a given town or territory so that they may discuss their troubles and with a UNITED front combat them.

THESE men, together as a single unit, must see to it that preference is not shown by manufacturers or any one else to any one of their number to the detriment of another. They must, in other words, have each other's confidence. In doing this they will become a power in the community—they will regulate their affairs by improving their own conditions.

A CONDITION such as referred to in the second letter will usually only occur where conditions are weak and where cut-throat methods are in use—otherwise there is no opening for the outside house. The theatre men are together—they know their own problems—they have definite plans of action—their houses are equipped up to the minute—it is a pleasure for the public to attend their shows—why should a new house be built by an outsider providing those already running are filling all the needs in every way?

The answer is, get together in each locality—keep the public happy, but GET TOGETHER, that's the first step.

A B C of the Motion Picture Operating Room

THE motion picture industry may be divided into two parts—First, the production of films and the manufacture of all necessary equipment, and second, the exhibition of the film. Quality has been raised to a higher standard.

During the past few years there has been a very noticeable improvement in motion picture projection, brought about by the fact that the "Movie" audiences are becoming more and more critical and demanding better pictures. This means better projection. Screens of better quality than ever have been produced, and the projection machines have been greatly improved. Efficient motor generator sets and other transforming devices now make direct current projection possible, and the up-to-date exhibitors demand operators experienced in taking care of such operating room equipment. In keeping with this general advance, carbon manufacturers have raised the quality of their products to such a standard that American carbons have passed the stage where they "are just as good," and are on a par with any of the "imported" carbons, which speaks well for the progressiveness of the American manufacturer.

The subject of motion picture carbons is one of great importance in film projection, since it involves the all important question of light. In exhibiting motion pictures, the operator in charge of the machine makes success possible, for it is he who controls the carbon arc from which the light is omitted to project the image on the screen. Carbon manufacturers are greatly interested in the operation of the machine as well as in the production of first class projector carbons.

Brief Outline of the Manufacture of Carbons

In the manufacture of high grade projector carbons it is necessary to use a specially prepared carbon flour. The flour is carefully mixed with the necessary binding material and forced by hydraulic presses under high pressure into the desired shape. If a cored carbon is wanted a steel needle is suspended in the center of the die. The carbons are then placed on racks to cool and cut into the proper lengths for baking. To insure absolute straightness, correct size, and perfect stock before baking, the cooled carbons are thoroughly inspected before being turned over to the baking department.

In the furnaces the carbons are subjected to the temperature necessary to produce a uniform carbon of certain definite prescribed qualities. After the bake is completed, the furnace is sampled and the carbons examined by the testing department before being sent along for finishing. These tests are even more severe than those to which a projector carbon is subjected by the user.

Upon receiving the testing department's O. K., the carbons are sorted for straightness, examined for imperfection, and if they are hollow shells, made ready for coring. Every precaution is taken in the coring department, where the hollow shells are filled, to see that the material for the core fills the entire length of the carbon. The composition of the coring material is of considerable importance, as it determines largely the burning quality and color of the arc. After coring, the carbons are dried, refinished, pointed, inspected and placed in the shipping stock.

The Crater the Source of Light

As every operator knows, all of the light comes from the incandescent crater of the positive carbon in direct current projection. Fig. 1 shows the limitations of the ordinary D. C. arc. The negative carbon is only slightly smaller than the positive. It cannot be made much smaller without lowering the efficiency of the arc. If it is set too close to the upper carbon there is the probability that some of the light will be lost, while if it is set too far away the arc will travel and this will cause a ghost effect upon the screen. Every operator knows or should know the absolute necessity of keeping close watch on the trim in order to maintain the proper length of arc and keep the screen free from all shadows, due to improper handling of the lamp.

For years carbon manufacturers have conducted experiments in the attempt to evolve a smaller negative carbon that would operate at a high amperage.

"Silvertip" One of the Results of These Experiments

Recently the National Carbon Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, placed on the market a new carbon under the trade name of "Silvertip," which has met with a great deal of approval wherever it has been used. This new carbon is shown in Fig. 2, and it should be worth your while to study the different points involved. This photograph was taken of an arc using 30 amperes of current, with a pressure of 52 to 55 volts, using a ⅝ cored carbon on top, and a 5/16 "Silvertip" on bottom, an ideal set for D. C. Note the perfect crater of the positive carbon, the length of the arc, and the amount of light being emitted.

The "Silvertip" carbon has been developed by the illuminating engineers of the National Carbon Co., to carry a maximum amount of current and give the maximum amount of screen illumination. These carbons are much smaller than the direct current negative carbons formerly used, and their entire length is plated with a coating known as "Silvertip" which combines very low resistance with long life and by volatilizing completely at the arc prevents the spattering of the rear condenser lens with metal beads, which has been the past experience when using other forms of metallic coatings. To take care of the various amperages, the Silvertip carbon is made in four diameters.

Test Made to Show Proper Combinations for Given Amperage

Extensive tests in the laboratories of the National Carbon Co., and in actual practice have shown, they claim, that the Silvertip carbon produces a more intense and whiter light at less cur-

Baltimore Operators' Dance is a Success

LEAVING New York City on Tuesday, taking the Congressional Limited via Pennsylvania Railroad, I arrived at Baltimore, "The Monumental City," 7:30 P. M., and was met at the depot by G. Kingston Howard, president of the Baltimore Operators' Union, Local 181. Brother Howard piloted me to a "jitney" owned and operated by the United Railways and Electric Company, and we made our way to the heart of the city—East Baltimore street—and on our way there who should we meet but Brother Louis Krauss, business agent of Local 307, Philadelphia Motion Picture Operators' Union.

We spent several very pleasant hours with International President Shea, of the I. A. T. S. E., meeting Brother J. A. McDonald, of Detroit, who was at the convention representing the Amalgamated Theatrical Workers of Detroit. McDonald was formerly president of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local 199, I. A. T. S. E., Detroit, Mich.

Leaving President Shea's room about three in the morning Krauss and I sought the downy. The next day I visited several theatres in the city and found that the union had their men in practically every theatre, the most notable exception being the Parkway theatre, located at North avenue and Charles street, but there is no doubt the manager of this theatre will see the folly of holding out and will join the ranks of the other exhibitors who are on amicable terms with the operators' organization.

This being the day of the big event—the Grand Danse, tendered to the delegates to the convention by the Operators' Union—it was only necessary for the weather to be right to make the affair a huge success, the committee having left no stone unturned to excel themselves. Their greeting to the delegates was as follows: Welcome, Delegates! Welcome to Our City; the Latchstring is Out!

In behalf of organized labor, as well as our city at large, we extend to you a hearty welcome. While it would be customary to hand you the keys of our city, we've gone even further. We've unlocked the gates and thrown the keys away. We certainly hope that the course of your deliberations will be smooth, and that the final result will be wise legislation that will redound to the success of the entire labor movement. We've done our best to entertain you, and if we have failed in any little detail, you may feel assured it's the hand and not the heart.

I want to say right here that the Baltimore operators did themselves proud, and they did certainly unlock the gates and throw the keys away. The general time for closing down the dances held in the city, where refreshments are served, is at one A. M., but the committee in charge succeeded in having the Board of Commissioners for the City of Baltimore grant them an extension of time, which permitted them to keep open house an hour longer, or until two A. M., something that has never been done before, so I was informed. At eight o'clock I started for the Lyric theatre, where the danse was to be held, and was surprised on my arrival there at the immensity of the place.

A mammoth big floor for dancing, with boxes on each side running the entire length of the hall, with a balcony taking up the three sides, capable of seating several hundred, and a stage of such large dimensions that it is possible to put on any production that might visit the city. Through some hitch or other the musicians would not start their playing until 9 o'clock, and even though their refusal to play did not dim the enthusiasm of the crowd there were many uncomplimentary things said that would not have pleased Mr. Gaul, whose symphony orchestra furnished the music for the occasion. At 9.05 the orchestra started off with the first number on the dance program, a one-step, "There's Someone More Lonesome Than You and Rosary," and from that time on the fun was fast and furious. Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, with Mrs. Gompers, were the guests of honor and occupied a stage box with a party of friends. Other guests of Local 181, were Assistant International President of the I. A. T. S. E., Martin C. Higgins; B. A. Spellbring, president of M. P. M. O. Union Local 144, Washington, D. C.; Louis Krauss, representing Philadelphia Local 307; I. G. Sherman of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and nearly every delegate to the convention. At ten o'clock it was estimated there were over two thousand present, and the theatres had not let out their quota yet. But at midnight when the operators who had been working during the day, arrived with their mothers, wives and sweethearts, it would not be far out of the way to place the attendance as being somewhat in excess of three thousand.

During the waits between dances a cabaret was held in the basement of the theatre where refreshments were served; those not caring for this were entertained by motion pictures which were projected from the balcony with the Powers and Simplex projectors. The pictures were among the latest releases and found much favor with the young and old folks.

The "shadow dancing" was especially attractive, the hall being darkened and colored lights being played upon the dancers from spot lights located in the balcony; this with the elaborate scheme of decorating the hall was very pleasing to the eye and caused much favorable comment.

The Department wishes to thank the members of the local, particularly Brother Howard for the many courtesies extended, and in return I want to express the hope that the affair was financially twice as great as they might have expected, or that it was socially. The following committees were responsible for the social success of the "Danse":

G. Kingston Howard, Chairman of the Committee; Samuel Isaacson, Secretary; Music Committee, Nicholas J. Ropke, chairman. Program Committee, N. Basil Morgan, Chairman. Decorations Committee, Herbert C. Haefele, Chairman. Check-room Committee, William G. Whitmore, Chairman. Ticket Committee, Carrlo C. Bayne, Chairman. I. A. Visitors Committee, William George, Chairman. Projection Committee, Harry E. Wallis, Chairman. Refreshment Committee, Fred Kirby, Jr., Chairman. Hall Committee, Arthur J. Stewart, Chairman. Press and Publicity Committee, Frank T. Holmes, Chairman.

The Floor and Reception Committee were as follows: Thomas P. Finn, Chairman; David Seamon, Nelson D. Baldwin, George Sohn, Harry Cluster, William F. Evans, Conrad Hagert, Charles A. Teddy, George Debrick, Charles Debrick, Eugene Gamble, F. Clarence Grote, Edgar Hess, James C. Whalen, Charles R. Conner, James Bolen, Harry Warner, David Silver, Lawrence Cannatella, Charles Berthold, James McQuade, and Herndon Edmonds.

The executive officers of the local are: G. Kingston Howard, President; William George, 1st Vice-President; Samuel Isaacson, 2nd Vice-President; Arthur Stewart, 3rd Vice-President; Carrol G. Bayne, Financial Secretary-Treasurer; Otto J. Niquet, Recording Secretary; William F. Evans, Business Agent; Harry Hess, Sergeant-at-Arms, and N. Basil Morgan, Reading Clerk.

LOCAL 306 IN NEW QUARTERS

ABANDONING their old quarters on the ninth floor of the Exchange Building, 145 West Forty-fifth street, Local 306, Moving Picture Operators' Union, have moved into larger and more commodious rooms on the tenth floor of the same building. Occupying an entire suite, there is ample provision for the members, as well as the privacy for the officers.

The executive board will meet in one of the rooms, which when not so occupied will be the official abiding place of that sterling business agent, Harry Mackler. The "man behind the desk" or, in other words, the secretary-treasurer, Fred Stoffregen, will have an office set aside for his use and where he will be pleased to receive the dues of the members at any and all times, and Fred is some collector, too. The members' comfort is assured by giving them a room large enough for some locals to hold their meetings in; this room will be equipped with card tables, writing desk and large library table, where will be found copies of the trade papers and other interesting reading matter that will help to while away the time while waiting for the hour to report on the job.

BROOKLYN OPERATORS TO DANCE

ON Sunday evening, December 31, New Year's Eve, the moving picture operators of Brooklyn, N. Y., known as the Brooklyn Projection Association, Inc., are to hold their second grand annual carnival and ball.

The scene of festivities will be at the Brownsville Labor Lyceum, Sackman street and Liberty avenue, Brooklyn. Music is to be furnished by Dave Halpern, and as the tickets, including wardrobe, can be had for the small sum of fifty cents there is no doubt in the mind of A. Mackler, chairman of the association, that the affair will be a most successful one.

THROPP A PROGRESSIVE MANAGER

ONE of the many pleasant surprises I found in Baltimore was at Nixon's Victoria theatre, on East Baltimore street, of which Mr. Charles Thropp is the manager. The house seating 1,400 has been given over to a policy of showing pictures and vaudeville. The admission price at the matinees is ten cents, while the prices for the evening shows are ten and twenty cents.

It was reported to me that this house had not enjoyed the high-class trade until Mr. Thropp took charge, when he was responsible for the house being thoroughly renovated and redecorated; where the walls had previously been painted they are now covered with silk tapestry, and what had before been bare floors and aisles are now thickly carpeted. The entire cost of renovation runs up into several thousand dollars—I heard the amount but have forgotten it. Another innovation of this up-to-date manager was to employ lady ushers, and with their advent the general tone of the theatre was improved to such an extent that today the patrons are of a better class than is found in themajority of Baltimore picture theatres. Mr. Thropp, before going to Baltimore, was manager of the Colonial theatre in Philadelphia, another of the Nixon chain of theatres, where I have been informed he was giving to Philadelphians some show.

Previous to his taking charge of the Victoria, the picture machines had been supplied with 110 volt current through a rheostat on an ordinary muslin screen. Thropp noticed the difference in the light and the picture of that which he had been used to showing and asked the operator why he didn't use 220. The operator said: "Because I haven't got it." After a visit to the lighting company it was found that there was a 220 volt circuit, but it had been unused. It did not stay so long. Manager Thropp had the 220 volt line put in service, and today the operator, aided and abbetted by Simplex projectors, is putting on a very good picture indeed. I am only sorry that I haven't this operator's name, for when a man is entitled to credit for his work I am going to try and see that he gets it. The show consisting of five vaudeville acts and feature picture was exceptionally good, the Triangle picture, "Manhattan Madness," being well received, as was the different vaudeville numbers.

I came near forgetting a novel stunt in the lobby display, another one of the many clever things put over by this manager. In the lobby were frames containing photos of the acts appearing and pictures being shown, and under each of them was a clock face about ten inches in diameter, and the hands of the clock pointed to the hour each turn would appear; these hands were changed under each frame as soon as each number had finished, thus enabling patrons who wanted to see some one thing in particular to ascertain the exact time it would be shown.

The entire house, interior and exterior, has a refinement about it that makes a strong appeal, and once one visits it they become "regulars," which must be very gratifying to this energetic and progressive manager.

IMPORTANT TO OPERATORS OF GREATER NEW YORK

THE Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local 306, which for the past ten years has taken up the task of bettering the conditions of the motion picture operator within the confines of Greater New York, and who at present writing control approximately sixty-five per cent of the motion picture theatres within their jurisdiction, have developed a plan of action whereby the balance of operators who are not members of the union may become affiliated with it.

In order to furnish an opportunity for non-union operators to meet and hear arguments advanced by prominent labor leaders and others regarding the advantages to be derived through affiliation with the great American labor movement, the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local 306, has arranged for a series of meetings to be held during the month of December. These meetings will be held on each Thursday night during the month at 12 o'clock midnight at the following halls:

December 7, Broadway Casino, 790 Broadway, Brooklyn, N. Y.

December 21, Parkway Inn, 110th street and Fifth avenue, New York City.

December 28, Cortlandt Casino, 585-597 Cortlandt avenue, Bronx, N. Y.

The meetings are arranged so conveniently that it is possible for any and all operators to attend them. Admission to any of the meetings will be gained only by showing your Operators' License.

Regardless of what you may think, feel or say, it will be worth your while to invest an hour and a half of your time in attending any or all of these meetings to which you are cordially invited.

Opportunity Knocks But Once—Will You Open To It?

The above is from an organization that, as they say have tried for the past ten years to better the condition of the operator in the Greater City, and it is a compliment to the entire industry that they have succeeded to a certain extent in doing so, and what is of equal importance is the fact that they have raised the morale of its members to a point where it is no longer a "rough neck" organization, but an organization composed of gentlemen. The local has had many stirring times, but through them all they have conducted themselves as such, and have never resorted to such tactics as are employed by certain other organizations.

The meetings that are announced above, and in the advertising columns should be largely attended, for there is no doubt but what many operators who are outside the organization will welcome the opportunity to learn how they may enjoy life as a human being and not merely exist as a wage slave. By all means attend these meetings and let your slogan be "Non-Union Operators, Wake Up!"

PROJECTION OF "A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS"

SHORTLY after the opening of William Fox's latest production, "A Daughter of the Gods," at the Lyric theatre, on Forty-second street, I was, through the courtesy of Mr. John Zanft, under whose supervision the picture is being presented in New York, permitted to witness the showing of this feature photoplay.

My time being limited I was unable to see it in its entirety, but I hope to do so at some later date. I was out to see what kind of projection was being put over at the Lyric, and imagine my surprise on going to the operating room during the intermission to find that "old war horse" whom neither time nor condition can kill, Thomas Costello, sharing the honors with Ben Leffler in the projecting of Miss Kellermann's latest offering.

I would not dare say to Tom's face what I am going to say here, so here goes: The projection at the Lyric during the time of my visit compares favorably with any theatre in the City of New York, barring none. The equipment which consists of two Powers 6-B's, and Speedco arc controllers, were behaving beautifully.

The close attention of the operators to the projection of the picture is commendable, for the fact that there is a special musical score with the picture, and without the aid of any synchronizing device the operators were timing the picture so closely that the synchronization of music and picture were perfect.

The light was well handled; at no time were there any shadows upon the screen due to negligence on the part of the operators, and it speaks well for the local union of which both these men are members, Costello being recording secretary of 306, that they have and can furnish men who are not only willing to but do deliver the goods.

One suggestion I would like to make is, that more attention be paid by those who are responsible for the assembling of this film, and that they pay particular attention to the splicing of it, so that those little flashes of white, due to scraping off of too great a length of emulsion, will not appear.

IMPROVED ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDE

ONE day last week I visited the offices of the Radio Mat Slide Company, Inc., located at 121 West 42nd street, New York City, and was much surprised to see the great number of these announcement slides that were being prepared for shipment; there was an order for 50,000 of them to be sent to Europe, and many tehousands had to be gotten ready for announcing the election returns.

For many years the operator has had to make announcement slides with either of these two methods; writing on glass with a special kind of ink or covering the glass with an opaque substance, and then scratching in with a sharp pointed instrument the matter to be used in announcement, and as very few of the operators were what might be called pen and ink artists the result was that the slides looked like a cross between a Chinese puzzle and the signature of a Philadelphia lawyer. There was nothing neat or attractive about either way, so it devolved upon the ingenuity of a woman to find some method whereby announcement slides could be made neat, catchy and attractive, which was accomplished by a young woman who had for a number of years been engaged in the business of making photographic slides for medical, advertising, scientific and other purposes. The first plan evolved was to photograph the announcement, which had been first lettered on cardboard and making a lantern slide of it, which was found to be too costly, as the slide could not be used over again. Then by a happy chance this young woman hit upon the idea of making the announcements upon a piece of gelatine and inserting the gelatine between two cover glasses, which would prevent it from curling under the heat from the arc as well as protecting it from becoming smudged by the hands of the operator. The result of the many experiments was the introduction to the trade of the Radio Mat Slide, which consists of a transparent sheet of gelatine placed between a sheet of carbon paper such as used on the typewriter for making copies, this was then placed in a double mat, that is, a mat with the front cut out, or in other words a mat pasted to a sheet of paper the same thickness, which kept the carbon and gelatine in position and acted as a guide for the one making the slide so that is is possible for them to center the wording and make up an announcement slide that would hold the attention of the observer until it had accomplished its purpose. The above illustration shows the appearance of the Radio Mat Slide and the possibility of making catchy announcements by their use. The cost of these

"THE ———— theatre features good films, but I don't go there often because it's so hard on my eyes." How often this remark is heard.

Don't let this be said of your theatre. It's unnecessary. You can project pictures with such clear, steady smoothness that your audience will be unconscious that light is used at all. Projections can be made to appear so real as to be actually restful to the eyes. This result can be obtained by the use of a

RECENT FIRES TEACH OWNERS VALUE OF PREVENTION

THE Crescent theatre, Pendleton, Ind., is installing a new fireproof booth and making other improvements. Brubaker and Rich, owners of the theatre, are looking after the remodeling personally and hope to have the improvements completed in the near future.

The work of repairing the room occupied by the Lyric theatre, Remington, Ind., which was burned recently, is going forward slowly, according to Manager Spencer. He will open the show as soon as the repairs are completed. Fire broke out in the storage room of the theatre early in October, and gained headway so rapidly that for a space it seemed that the whole building would be burned.

NEW BOOKLET BY EXPERT ON PROJECTION AND UPKEEP IS INVALUABLE TO OPERATORS

WILL C. SMITH of the Nicholas Power Company has compiled a booklet entitled "Hints to Operators," in which he explains in a helpful manner a great many projection problems that daily beset the "man behind the machine," and in which he also expounds in great detail his theories regarding the upkeep of all apparatus pertaining to motion picture projection. This booklet is considered invaluable by every operator, and so great has been the demand for it that several large editions have been exhausted. Mr. Smith established the record for long distance projection in May, 1915, when he installed two Power's Cameragraphs in Madison Square Garden, New York City, and obtained a perfect picture thirty four feet wide at a throw of three hundred feet. Mr. Smith as Assistant General Manager of the Nicholas Power Company has, in addition to other important branches of work, direct supervision of the service department of that company which covers installation, maintenance, etc., of the projection machine. Though of a somewhat retiring and quiet personality, always avoiding publicity, Mr. Smith is nevertheless very popular throughout the motion picture industry as a whole, this being evidenced by his recent election to the treasurership of the Screen Club of New York City, of which organization he has been a member for several years.

PERKINS GETS CANADIAN RIGHTS TO POWERS' MACHINES

THE Exclusive Canadian rights for the Powers' Simplex Projections Machines, Minusa Screen Products and Bio Carbons have been secured by the Perkins Electric Company, whose head office is located at 322 Craig, West, Montreal.

To facilitate rapid business the company have opened offices at 11 Temperance street, Toronto, under the management of Mr. J. H. Coleman, and at 217 McDermot avenue, Winnipeg, under the management of Mr. H. D. Sutherland.

Through evolution we advanced—by advancing we were able to fulfill our hopes, our aims, our ideals—to consummate an idea that is winning unparalleled success.

Ever pressing onward to higher levels, the quality of SPEER PROJECTOR CARBON advances—the fact is attested by many thousands of pleased operators.

The Best is not sufficient—Fine must be Re-fined—Two years experience has taught us much.

S P E E R PROJECTOR CARBONS, the realization of a great idea; though unchanged in essential principles, are being refined—polished—cultured, if you please.

Higher standards for Light Producing Qualities—The Life of the Carbon—Exterior Appearance, etc., have been set and these must ever be developed and advanced.

To improve the quality of SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS has ever been our aim and affords inspiration for our present day's work.

Early handicaps have been overcome; the new machinery now works smoothly; our employees are skilled and masterly in their work and the progress we are making is noteworthy.

Seeing is believing—experience is the best teacher—operators must try SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS to appreciate all that we have said. The unprecedented success we have won can not be described in words; it must be seen, experienced and tested.

We would say to the pessimist and skeptic who must be shown—"try SPEER PROJECTOR CARBONS." The trial will place you in the ranks of our pleased customers. To the many friends we already have, we might add: our developments will continue without end, as we feel a carbon can not be perfected too highly for the demand of the exhibitor and operator.

PHILADELPHIA SUPPLY HOUSES ARE ENJOYING A PROSPEROUS SEASON

THAT Pennsylvania theatres in general are experiencing a good fall season is evidenced by the new equipment that the supply houses are putting in all over the state. L. M. Swaab of 1327 Vine street, Philadelphia, has recently supplied the Bijou theatre, Bridgeport, Pa., Wm. J. Winterbottom, proprietor, with two Powers 6B machines, with full equipment; Kalarias & Marakas of Orpheum theatre, Connellsville, Pa., with two Simplex type S machines with motors, with full equipment, also a Minusa Gold Fibre screen. Colver Amusement Co., Colver theatre, Colver, Pa., two 6B Powers with full equipment; George Zeppos, Comique theatre, Butler, Pa., two Powers 6B motor drive machines complete with other equipment. The United Development Co. of Wilmington, Del., had their machines re-equipped with Powers motor drive 6B machines.

The Vine street quarters of the Calehuff Supply Co. are now on the last lap of improvements, and this supply house will soon be "at home" in its new building. The Rembusch Fibre (Gold) Screen distributed by Calehuff in the east is making rapid strides in Philadelphia and vicinity.

Some of the theatres that have been recently supplied with the Rembusch are: Arcadia, 16th and Chestnut; Palace, 1214 Market street; Wayne, 46th and Germantown avenue, York Street Palace, Fairhill Palace, York and Germantown avenue; Benn, 40th and Woodland avenue; Paschall, 71st and Wooland avenue; all of Philadelphia, also the Royal of Atlantic City, N. J.

Most houses use a 12 x 16 screen, but the Royal of which Harry Savage is manager, bought the largest size, 15 x 20.

Charles H. Bennett, motion picture supplies and repairs, has moved from 235 to 240 N. 13th street, near film row. The latter quarters proving too small additional space will be added as soon as arrangements can be completed.

Mr. Bennett makes a specialty of repair work and has amongst his clientele most of the other supply houses as well as theatres large and small. Keith's Chestnut street and Alleghany avenue houses, The Forrest, Garrick and Chestnut Street Opera House, are all equipped by the Bennett firm when they run pictures. Advertising slides are a specialty of this house. During the election week, Thomas Ratcliffe, at 22nd and Wharton, was supplied with a special exhibition. Mr. Bennett makes his own cements and slides as well as a perfume disinfectant for theatres, the "Lilac."

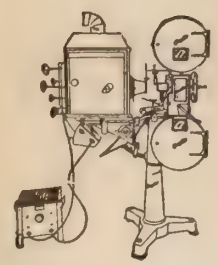
SLIDE MANUFACTURERS AND DISTRIBUTORS ORGANIZE FOR BETTERMENT OF THEIR BUSINESS

ON Monday evening, November 6, a permanent association of slide manufacturers was formed in New York, in the offices of the Novelty Slide Company. One of the main objects of this organization shall be to promote the quality of the lantern slide, and to insure for exhibitors a standard of workmanship in slides.

The slide industry is one of the oldest, if not the oldest connected with the motion picture industry. That it has not advanced as rapidly as motion pictures is due to the fact that it has been neglected by the trade and considered unimportant. The organization of slide manufacturers will not only secure recognition for their industry, but will enable film manufacturers to purchase a more uniform quality slide than in the past, with advanced ideas assured through the co-operation of the various slide manufacturers. This organization proposes to co-operate with the other branches of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry with a view to improvement of the product and the method of distribution.

A permanent organization was effected, articles of association and by-laws adopted, and the following officers have been elected to serve for a period of one year: Joseph F. Coufal, president; B. J. Knoppleman, secretary, and Herbert Wyckoff, Treasurer.

The following concerns have become charter members of this new organization and were represented as follows:



Herbert Wyckoff and John J. West of the Manhattan Slide and Film Company, Fred A. Apfelbaum of the Perfection Slide Co., Mrs. Rose Shack of the Commercial Slide Co., B. J. Knoppleman and A. L. Harst of the Excelsior Illustrating Co., J. E. Long, and W. F. Bete of Long and Heller, Inc., Herman Rosenberg of the Greater N. Y. Slide Co., Thomas G. Wiley and Joseph F. Coufal of the Novelty Slide Company.

The Camera

Hernandez-Mejia's Colorgraph Process—The Colorgraph Camera—Exposures on Two Films Secured with One Lens —How Moving Objects Are Recorded by the Colorgraph Process—Securing Accuracy of Register in Printing

WHAT appears to be the first process for producing natural color motion pictures by the subtractive method is the "Colorgraph" process, this being the invention of Arturo Hernandez-Mejia, a Venezuelan, but for some years past a resident in this country. Preliminary experiments on the Colorgraph process were undertaken as far back as 1910, or thereabouts, and an account of the method as practised at that time appeared in the MOVING PICTURE NEWS of October 5, 1912. Although it has been a difficult and costly operation to perfect the results secured by the Colorgraph process, the inventor, Mr. Hernandez, has stuck to the task, and since many improvements and some modifications in the procedure have been made subsequent to the publication of the article cited, we are pleased to present the following description by Mr. Hernandez of his present methods.

"There are three distinct innovations in the art of producing color motion pictures by the Colorgraph process. One is mechanical, another optical, and the other chemical. All three in combination are necessary to attain motion picture films which show scenes in color when shown on ordinary projecting machines, without any attachments or changes, the color being on the film, sixteen pictures to the foot, the same as with ordinary black and white subjects.

The Mechanical Feature

The Colorgraph camera differs from other cameras in that it provides mechanism for running two negative films of standard width at right angles to each other and moved alternately, first one and then the other—two exposures (one on each film) being given during the 1/16 second period of exposure of the ordinary cinematograph camera when cranked at normal speed."

An idea of the arrangements and operation of the Colorgraph camera will be gained from a study of Fig. 16. A. Fig. 16 is a side elevation of the instrument showing the red and green sensitive films (designated by R and G respectively) threaded through the camera mechanism. They are periodically moved past the exposure apertures by two intermittent sprockets indicated by 1 and 2 in the diagram A. Fig. 16. B, Fig. 16, is a detail view of the manner in which the two intermittent sprockets are operated, this being accomplished by a one pin cam C and two star-wheels S-1 and S-2 respectively. An important and most ingenious arrangement is the combined shutter and reflecting mirror for producing the green sensation image, this attachment being diagrammatically shown at C. Fig. 16. In C. Fig. 16, R is the red sensitive film strip, while G is the green sensitive film. Mounted on a rotating shaft and at an angle between the red and green exposure apertures (and taking filters) is a surface mirror M. In C. Fig. 16 we see the rays from the lens being reflected by the mirror M through the green filter and onto the green sensitive film G. The mirror acts at the same time as a shutter to cover the downward travel of the red sensitive film R. When the mirror M has revolved further an exposure is, of course, made upon the red sensitive film R, the green film being to one side and out of the path of the rays from the lens.

To return to Mr. Hernandez' description.

"In other words 32 exposures are made in the time (usually one second) generally occupied in making 16 exposures with ordinary cameras. If a shutter were used this would be an impossibility, the stumbling block of all color processes being that no color sensitive film is commercially available which will receive developable impressions at 1/64 second exposures (1/32 second being consumed by the dark intervals of the customary shutter). Much less is this feasible under color filters.

But in the Colorgraph camera there are no dark shutter periods. The first half of each exposure interval is utilized in exposing on one film through the red filter. This is a direct exposure, nothing of any nature being interposed between the lens and the red filter, and so the rays from the lens are directed unmolested and undiminished to the red sensitive negative film. Therefore, the length of exposure on the red sensitive film is one full thirty second of a second—ample time for density and detail. During the second half of each exposure interval the mechanism of the camera interposes a surface reflector which diverts the image to the second film which is green (and not at all red) sensitive. Here also a full 1/32 of a second exposure is attained, the green

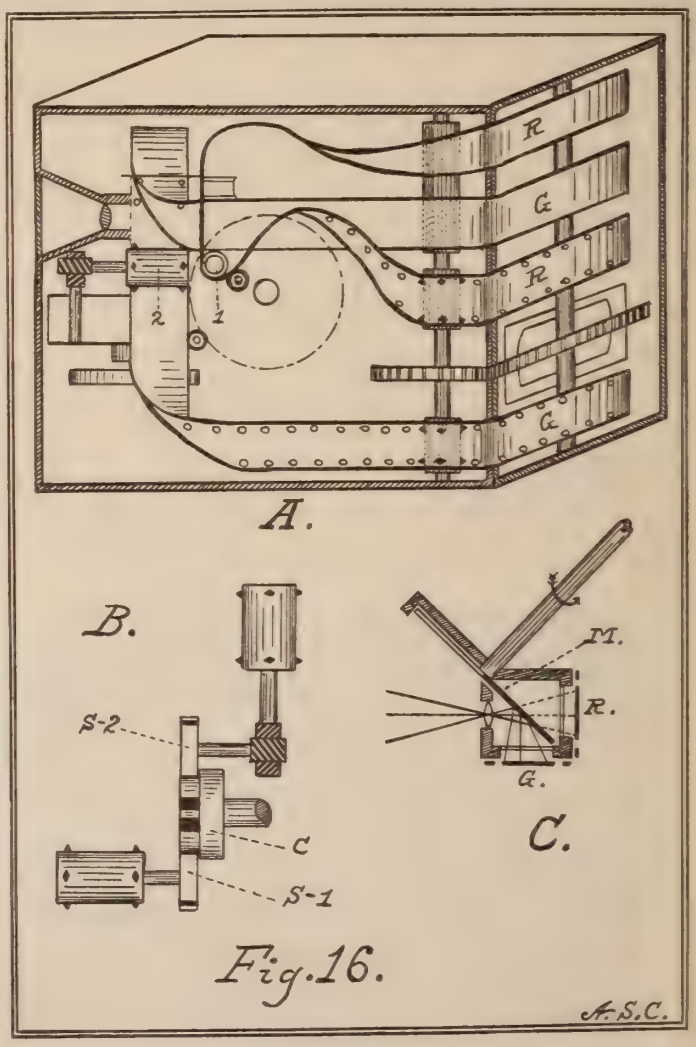

Fig. 16.

A.S.C.

Western Musician Prefers Scene Plots to Printed "Cues"

"Give Player Descriptive List of Scenes in Film, and Intelligence Will Do the Rest—Printed Music Cues Valueless to Pianists and Leaders Who Are Susceptible to Screen Emotion and Will Synchronize Accordingly"

YOUR October 14 number at hand and contents carefully noted. I wish to go more into detail about my previous letter, also offer a suggestion which I feel would be of more real value to the musical end of the theatres than the already printed "Cue Sheet" or "Music Plot."

Your "Plots" are so written that only orchestra leaders or manual players have the least chance of understanding them. The tracker device instruments are becoming more popular every day. Even the Hope-Jones Wurlitzer Unit Organs and the Photoplayer Sales Company's large pipe organs are using tracker device. The music roll companies are cutting special rolls for the organs—also such circuits as Turner & Dahnken and Kahn Greenfield, San Francisco; B. B. Theatres Company, Minneapolis, Minn.; Swanson & Nolan, Salt Lake City, and many other large companies operating from ten to twenty theatres each, are placing these large pipe organs with tracker device in all their theatres.

Hence it goes to show that the managers who watch their music closely and demand exact interpretation of the picture through the music are adapting the one-man orchestra.

Now, the musical suggestion sheets or plots are positively useless in these cases. Take the moving picture theatres as a whole there are far more using one-man orchestras and organs than orchestras.

Therefore—why not—if you are sincere in your effort to help the music for the picture, instead of printing the musical numbers concerning which (if you are a musician you will know) every leader has different ideas.

Cafe Scenes Stir Musicians

No two men form the same opinion of a scene. One man's experience in the world may lead him to feel great sympathy for a character during a certain scene, and the very next leader may run over said scene without thought. What we musicians want and want badly is an exact description of each scene as it appears in the picture. Take for instance a café scene: The dancers are whirling gaily around the tables. Two men sit at a table plotting to kill the hero as he leaves the café. All right! You may select a brilliant number in keeping with the café scene rung into the heavy when they leave. This scene may impress me differently. The men plotting together may appeal to me so strongly that I would suggest a creepy number, dramatic, Erl King for instance, all through the scene. Don't you see—each musician's ideas are so far different that I would believe a full and exact description of the story and scenes would be of more value to the musician.

For instance take "The Flower of Faith" plot which appears in October 14 number. One could not gather the faintest idea of what the story really is, nor how each scene is laid out. I see to the fifth reel you have suggested twenty-three suggestions, our musicians using from thirty to forty during a five-reel subject, following each scene perfectly.

To explain more fully why the cue sheet is "valueless" or "impossible" to the musician who is—what I call—"playing the picture" and following it closely.

President's Warning Remembered

I'll take your plot for "The Dark Silence" which appeared in September 30. In the first half of part two appears a title, "I Think In Falling in Love With Someone." The title speaks for itself as to the proper selection during this love scene. You suggest "Marsellaise" in the opening of the third reel. If I remember aright our President asks that nothing be played in the theatres which might irritate natives of the warring countries. We got notice from our Mayor to the same effect. I do not think it good judgment at this time to play any national hymn of the foreign nations, as it has a tendency to create a disturbance and offends a great number of patrons who may favor the opposing side. At the end of same reel we see Jeanette Vendig over wounded soldier and she recognizes him to be Derwent. "Then You'll Remember Me" is to my idea very appropriate and effective here. Also "Memories" when he tells her of his girl who deserted him, and "Oh, Promise Me" where he asks her to be his wife. The "Wedding March" and "A Perfect Day" of course are called for by the picture.

This is why the cue sheets are valueless. They do not "PLAY TO PICTURES" close enough to be of any use to a live musician who brings out every detail and makes the picture "TALK." These are only a few suggestions in this picture, and if you should look over it carefully you would see many other opportunities for such numbers as are pleasing to the ear and are at the same time familiar.

To my idea, what would be of far more use to the musician who is not fortunate enough to see his picture before the first show, would be a complete and exact list of scenes and titles AS THEY APPEAR IN SUCCESSION. The printed stories are of little use, as one cannot tell how the scenes are connected, and often the story runs along, but the sequence of the scenes is entirely different. Then, too, a great help to some would be the publication from time to time of selections that are especially good for picture work—in regulation form, so that a neat folder could be made of same, keeping each list separate such as waltzes, marches, etc. This would be very valuable to every musician.

I thank you for giving me your most valuable time and trust that I have in no way offended writers of cue sheets, as I am perhaps more interested in this work than they and only want to see it perfected.

Thanking you, I remain, sincerely,

JANE HETHERINGTON.

Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco.

EDITOR'S NOTES.—The above letter from Miss Hetherington certainly contains great food for thought and my future endeavors shall be along lines which will correct some of the faults that she mentions in the above communication.

The plots that appear in this department, however, can be put to good advantage by an operator of a tracker device instrument if the plots are temperamentally understood. Miss Hetherington

KANSAS CITY HOUSE COMBINES BEAUTY OF ARCHITECTURE WITH SERVICE

THE enclosed pictures give a very good idea of the possibilities of modern construction applied to theatre building. The brick and terra cotta front, combined with steel and concrete fireproof construction, cove-paneled ceiling, and circassian walnut two-toned gray and brown effect in the lobby, combines attractive dignity with a homey atmosphere which is always so essential in the theatre. Large capacity without the "barny" effect of the too big house should be noted.

The Wisconsin Seating Company installed the eleven hundred seats (balcony seating three hundred). Powers' 6-A's, with a ninety-foot throw, furnish a steady picture in the skilled hands of Elmer Spies, chief operator. John G. Hiatt, the owner, operates this large building with only four employees, and courtesy and cleanliness are the special attributes of the house. A Kimball pipe organ is also part of the complete equipment here.

The floral basket on marble pedestal shown in the lobby center

Gladstone Theatre, Kansas City, Missouri

adds greatly to the effectiveness of the marble lobby wainscoting, relieving the coldness of marble alone with tile floor. We can imagine how attractive the many windows are to the patrons on a summer evening. The box drapery over each window adds a pleasing touch to the good taste evidenced throughout the building.

GLASSPORT, PA., THEATRE TO BE IMPROVED BY NEW MANAGEMENT OWNING BUILDING

MRS. MORRIS. the owner of the building, has again taken over the Garrick theatre at Glassport, Pa., and will make it one of the best small town theatres in that section of Pennsylvania.

The theatre is to be renovated throughout and made into one of the most sanitary and fireproof showrooms possible to imagine. New projection machines are to be installed and other things added besides more chairs. It will be opened to the public early next month.

NASHVILLE'S STRAND LOOKING UP UNDER MANAGEMENT OF BRADFORD

SINCE the Strand theatre has been taken over by the Peerless Amusement Company, being under the general management of Carson Bradford, one of the most experienced film exhibitors south of the Mason and Dixon line, business has doubled.

Vast preparations are being made to provide the patrons of the Strand with even greater feature productions than has ever been seen at this theatre. "I am in the game to succeed," said General Manager Bradford, "and by hard and persistent efforts I intend to make the Strand one of the most popular if not one of the greatest photoplay theatres in the city of Nashville.

NEW PARAMOUNT THEATRE FOR NORTH VERNON, INDIANA

NORTH VERNON, IND., will open a new theatre on December 7, in which Paramount Pictures and Paramount short features, Paramount Pictographs, Paramount Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, Paramount-Bray Cartoons, and Paramount Comedies will be run exclusively.

Some months ago, a number of prominent people in North Vernon held a meeting, when it was decided to build an up-to-date photoplay theatre of their own, and sixty of the leading citizens of the community subscribed from their personal incomes thirty thousand dollars ($30,000) to proceed with the building of the play house. The structure is one of the most magnificent in the Middle West and will be managed by E. A. Palmer.

CLAREMONT THEATRE, NEW YORK, HAS EXCELLENT ADVANTAGES

THE Claremont theatre, 135th street and Broadway, New York, which has been operating for the past two years, draws from one of the largest residential districts in the city. The house has a seating capacity of 1,400, measuring seventy-five feet in depth and running almost the entire block in length. The management has installed a fifteen thousand dollar Wurlitzer organ. The organist gives special selection on this instrument during the intermission between shows.

The entire electrical equipment was installed by J. H. Hallberg. The projection booth which measures 17 x 21 feet contains two Powers 6A machines. The throw from booth to screen is 176 feet. The rest of the equipment of the house is as modern as can be procured.

CLINTON SQUARE, NEWARK, N. J., IS THRIVING FEATURE HOUSE

THE Clinton Square theatre, Newark, N. J., is a thrilling feature house under the management of Mr. Howard. It is located at 213-215 Clinton avenue, about ten minutes' ride from the city's shopping center. The location is considered one of the advantages of the house, for it is about midway between the shopping and residential section of the city.

The Clinton Square runs Metro, Paramount and Fox, and its lobby is attractively decorated with portraits of the most popular stars of those concerns. The interior is artistically decorated and the latest accessories are in use throughout the house. The management plans to instal a Photoplayer in the near future.

The Optical Feature

Our two negatives may now be placed in a printing machine provided with two lights and registering and movement mechanisms for three films. One negative, the green sensation negative for instance is placed on the left in contact with a doublt coated positive film (emulsion on both sides) having a lemon yellow color. In contact with the other (right hand) side of the double coated positive film is placed the red sensation negative. On exposure to the printer lights positive impressions (in permanent register) are secured on both sides of the double coated film, which produces upon development a projectible black and white film with complete detail, but differing from an ordinary film in its rendition of colored objects.

The skies have clouds recorded in them; red roses are recorded on one side as black, or a dense silver deposit, while green trees are recorded as black on the other side. Yellow and orange are recorded slightly on both sides of the film, but a little more strongly on the red sensation side. Blue is also slightly recorded on both sides, but favoring the green sensation side. Purples are recorded on both sides strongly, and for that reason are more prominent when colored a dark reddish-greenish tint, reminding one of purple, but not exactly a pure color. Lilacs and violets are imperfectly reproduced, being (when the positive is colored) more of an agreeable greenish pink tint. Flesh color is most correctly and faithfully reproduced—this seeming to be one of the most favorable colors owing to its admixture of all shades. The coloring of this double coated film constitutes the next step:

The Chemical Feature

Mr. Hernandez' formulae for converting the silver image into a large variety of colors are well-known to the trade, and his spectrum green and spectrum red combined on a double coated film, plus the spectrum yellow (lemon shade) on the substratum of the positive stock itself, provides upon projection under the stenciling action of the color sensation images, all the hues generally found in Nature. Black is produced by complete density on both sides of the positive. White is produced by the complete absence of any color or deposit on the positive film. Green and blue are produced in varying shades by a deposit of spectrum blue-green on one side, which by reason of there being none or more or less red deposit on the other side, permits the rays from the projecting lantern to be tinted dark blue, blue-green, green, light green, light blue and some purple shades. The same thing in an opposite way happens with the red-orange shades. The red coloring occupies one side of the film, and is distinctly separated from the green coloring of the other side. The orange, yellows and reddish purples are just sufficiently moderated mixtures of red with the greens and blues. The base of the film is colored light spectrum yellow and when not moderated or affected by any deposit on either side will freely transmit the rays of the lantern to the screen. The light of the projector arc is very rich in violet rays. If the film were therefore just transparent, the resulting screen illumination would be violet. But the film base is of just such a shade (of yellow) as to optically absorb the violet in the arc-light ray, and when it reaches the screen it is pure white, if no deposit is present on the film to form an image.

There are a number of novel physical results attained which were not contemplated when experiments along these lines were begun. Colorgraph double emulsion film, when ready for projection, overcomes certain aberrations common to ordinary black and white animatography. Cinematography is an optical illusion, pure and simple, and when following the projection of a picture upon the screen one is often perplexed by a curious effect—some movement obviously opposed to all laws of motion. When a ship or train is shown in motion it seems to stand out in bold relief on the screen; the cylinders of the engine, the masts of the ship, all are stereoscopically prominent simply because the moving object appears to possess solidity, while the foreground and background remain as plane surfaces without any idea of distance. But a greater misrepresentation exists in the case of a moving wheel. In ordinary films a wagon or auto is seen crossing the screen, but the spokes of the wheels instead of advancing seem to reverse or move backwards, or to jump or remain stationary with a peculiar skidding effect, while the rims of the wheels seem to revolve normally. The reason for this aberration is known; the dark periods of the camera shutter are responsible. As in Colorgraph films, all the phases of a motion are recorded, there is no chance for lapses to give the effect of retrogression.

This brings up an important question; if the records are not simultaneous they will differ insofar as moving objects are concerned. This is quite true when pictures are taken 32 to the second and projected at 16 per second, or are projected one after the other, and thus presented to the eye for alternate admixture through complementary colored projecting filters. When the color record is complete on the film, however, a different condition is apparent; complete color records are intermittently presented to the eye and no admixture by the optic nerve, with its attendant strain, is necessary. This is true of all stationary objects and all objects moving at a slower rate than can be accurately recorded by the ordinary cinematographic camera. The Colorgraph camera will record the brass pendulum of a clock ticking once each second very accurately in a yellow brass color. If the pendulum is painted red and its beating accelerated so as to oscillate 16 times per second the photographic record, being red only will again show the pendulum faithfully reproduced, and, if painted green the result will be equally faithful. But if the pendulum is painted orange or purple (produced by admixtures of red, blue-green and yellow pigments) and oscillated rapidly, the record on the double coated Colorgraph film will appear as a lateral blur of red and green mixed, and without definition of the object except at the stationary periods of the pendulum's motion.

At one time this would have been considered a fault, but experts now agree that absolutely sharp images of moving objects produce a staccato motion like cartoon pictures upon projection, while a film which shows slight blurring of rapidly moving objects gives a more faithful reproduction of motion. Experience and exhaustive experiments confirm the condition and show that quite a lot of blurring in the objects in motion is beneficial, and therefore entirely permissible. This blurring of colored objects in motion facilitates the blending of the various phases of a given motion upon projection and permits, when using Colorgraph films, the recording of the entire action without omissions due to the dark periods of the customary camera shutter.

In the Colorgraph camera accuracy of registration is secured by a novel method. In the first place the film is perforated immediately before exposure and in the camera itself, two holes being punched above the pilot hole which is the top perforation of each image. Nothing can be more accurate. The pilot pins hold the film exactly at the exposure aperture, and, as the film is guided by the perforations just made by the punch, the fact that the film may or may not be of the standard width has no bearing on the accuracy of the spacing and the exact registry of each image with its companion picture on the other sensitive negative. In the printer registration is secured by pins or pilots which pass through the perforations of the two negative films and the double coated positive film between them. When the films are in correct registry the printer lights are switched on by the dimmer and not before. There is no shutter in the camera nor are there any shutters in the printing machine. The printer lights are extinguished until the films are stationary before the exposure window, pressed into contact, and ready for the printing exposure."

The Colorgraph process, as here described by the inventor Mr. Hernandez, differs from most all other subtractive methods at present being practised in that he utilizes a third complementary color—yellow—in producing his colored film images. This process is patented (U. S. Patent No. 1,174,144), and although great difficulty has been experienced in the Colorgraph process, as in all other subtractive processes of color cinematography, in securing satisfactory registration (freedom from overlapping color fringes) of the images on the two sides of the double coated film, the latest Colorgraph samples show that perfection in this respect is not impossible of attainment.

Natural color motion picture films prepared by subtractive methods are to the fore and we shall, in our next issue, describe some further results which have been produced in this manner.

PREFERS PLOTS TO PRINTED "CUES"

explains to a certain extent why these plots are not understood by a tracker instrument operator. In justice to myself, I must explain again that plots which I make have never been intended to suggest certain music, but on the contrary are intended to give a temperamental, psychological and emotional analysis of the picture story and the screen action. For this reason I have always adopted certain terms which appear in the first column of each plot under the caption "Description of Music." My original intention and present efforts are being devoted to a book which will interpret these terms, making them more clear and at the same time suggesting a repertoire of numbers which will musically illustrate the screen action. While this has not yet been published, it has been necessary for me to explain each number in Music Notes at the bottom of each plot. In all my plots which have been published by manufacturers, I have dictated a story synopsis, giving a fair description of the action and scenes, placing the cues of each number at such a point in the story where it appeared on the screen. "The Flower of Faith" has such a plot.

I have, however, forty-two leaders who play from plots without this picture story and do it successfully.

I note, however, some of Miss Hetherington's suggestions which I think very good and I shall certainly give them a fair trial. We also know that every leader has different ideas and our efforts should be aimed at destroying some of these ideas.

As regards the selecting of music to express certain emotions or temperaments, a musician should have his own original ideas, but it will be very hard to convince me that there can be any different ideas as to emotions, and the better picture playing is only attained when the emotions on the screen are musically illustrated above everything else, and there cannot be and should not be different opinions on this point.

We have repeatedly discussed the café scenes in pictures and there is but one answer, namely, when the screen suggests certain music to synchronize, that music suggested must be played. When there is no musical suggestion in a café scene the emotional or temperamental must be followed.

CAHILL-IGOE ANNOUNCES ATTRACTIVE METHOD OF FURNISHING PROGRAMS TO THEATRES

IN line with the many improvements being made in film exhibition throughout the country, the Cahill-Igoe, 117 West Harrison street, Chicago, is announcing a new and decidedly attractive method of furnishing programs to motion picture theatres.

This new offering consists of a series of twelve theatre programs—each distinct and original—the entire series enabling the exhibitor to present his patrons with twelve separate and unique programs. Each program is 6½ by 3½ in size and consists of four pages. The covers in each instance are printed in three colors and bear designs of a decidedly novel and unique sort.

These covers were designed by an artist of prominence and alone will lend tone and class to any theatre using them. The printing is in soft shades and harmonious color combinations. The house, making use of these programs, can pride itself upon offering a program that is fully the equal of many of the high-class speaking stage theatres of their city.

The two interior pages and the back cover are left blank for the exhibitor to print therein his offerings for the coming week, and the back cover can be used for an ad if he so wishes. By selling the back cover as an ad, any live-wire exhibitor can easily cover the cost of the programs for the week. The name of the theatre issuing the program is tastefully displayed in a prominent position on the cover page, and so attractive is the design that the motion picture fans receiving them are sure to preserve them. The fact that the entire program for the week appears within will add still another reason for preserving the program. The Cahill-Igoe people, by preparing the twelve programs in huge quantities, are able to furnish them in thousand lots at a very reasonable figure and to give exhibitors a program that could not be duplicated locally by them for anywhere near the price asked. Exhibitors have improved their theatres in many respects—have redecorated, installed up-to-date ventilating systems and otherwise raised the standard of their houses—they have demanded a new standard in pictures—have improved their projection, and now they can go still another step forward and present their patrons with programs sufficiently deluxe to match up with the other improvements.

AMERICAN PHOTO PLAYER OPENS OFFICE IN PHILADELPHIA

THE American Photo Player Company, Inc., whose factories are in Berkeley, Cal., and New York City has recently established Philadelphia headquarters at the Parkway Building, Broad and Cherry streets.

This branch will have under its control Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Maryland and Virginia.

R. P. Matthews, manager of the Quaker City office, is well known in both the theatrical and musical world.

As private secretary to H. J. Werner, president of the company, Mr. Matthews has for five years traveled from coast to coast and probably knows more exhibitors than any one else in his line. He is honorary member of seven motion picture associations.

The American Photoplayer Company has placed a $17,000 organ in the Tivoli, San Francisco.

NORTH VERNON, INDIANA, MODEL THEATRE, LAYS SPECIAL STRESS ON COMFORT AND CLEANLINESS

THE New Jennings theatre, North Vernon, Ind., opened recently. The theatre has a seating capacity of 560 persons. The seats were furnished by Heywood Brothers and Wakefield, Chicago.

Four natural ventilators in the roof and two electric driven exhaust fans move the used atmosphere out of the building every eight minutes.

The house is sanitary throughout. The cement floor can be flushed with water and the cement baseboard allows no place for particles of dirt to accumulate. A gold fibre screen was put in, in addition to the latest Powers machines.

The projecting room is of concrete and the apertures through which the pictures are shown are protected by iron slides that automatically close should the film become ignited.

The exits are larger than the law requires. All have panic-proof locks that open with the least pressure from the inside. The lobby is well lighted and has mirrors on three sides. A rest room just off the lobby for women and children is one of the features of the theatre.

Mrs. Mable Wirth is the pianist; Miss Helen Miller has charge of the box office and Donald McLeoud is the operator.

The directors of the North Vernon Amusement Co. are: J. H. Miller, Wm. J. Hare, O. R. Platter, Ralph Hudson and Edward Tech. E. A. Platter is manager of the theatre.

NEWMAN EQUIPS REGENT THEATRE

THE Newman Manufacturing Company of Cincinnati and Chicago, manufacturers of brass and bronze railings, poster frames, ticket choppers, etc., for theatres, furnished and installed all the brass railing and brass work for the new Regent theatre, Detroit, Mich. This firm can be considered highly complimented in having obtained this contract as they were selected from among a great many concerns who figured on the installation, because of the high class work they turn out. The Regent theatre is the newest and largest picture theatre in Detroit, as it seats about 3600.

SEVEN HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLAR THEATRE IN MEMPHIS

"My Official Wife" is not a part of the Vitagraph regular program, nor is it in substitution of any picture on the Vitagraph program. Neither is it a "special." Rather it is a splendid "extra" offering, put out as an additional service to exhibitors, because of its tremendous re-run value and money-making qualities.

Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, Manager of the Rialto Theatre, New York, is unquestionably one of the most discriminating buyers of pictures in the world.

The Rialto Theatre is conducted on a plane, probably unequalled by any other photoplay theatre in existence, save one.

In substantiation of his judgment, Mr. Rothapfel has advertised "An Enemy to the King" more extensively than any picture ever shown at the Rialto, and has arranged at unprecedented effort and cost, a musical program surpassing all previous recitals of the greatest theatre orchestra this country has ever known, in order that full justice may be done to this monumental film classic.

Mr. Rothapfel chose "An Enemy to the King" for one of the most important weeks of the year, declaring it to be an offering extraordinary.

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

DECEMBER 9, 1916

Richard Bennett Has Powerful Role in Morality Play

RICHARD Bennett, famous star of "Damaged Goods," "Philip Holden-Waster" and "—And the Law Says" is again presented the week of December 4 in another Mutual Star Production. "The Valley of Decision" is its title. It is five reels in length. It is a morality play of powerful appeal in which Youngmanhood, Love and Children are shown to excel Ambition, Wealth and Fame. It gives Richard Bennett a chance to appear at his very best. It is an attraction sure to appeal to theaters of all classes.

"The Valley of Decision."

Mr. Bennett appears as Arnold Gray, a social reformer, with political aspirations. Gray leads a reform movement against child labor and social wrongs. Jane Morton, a novelist of real talent, attracts Gray. Shortly afterward they are married. Gray is nominated for governor and while he is away campaigning Jane discovers she is to become a mother. Rhoda Lewis, a clubwoman, advises Jane against giving birth to a child, claiming it will interfere with her literary work. Gray and Jane ponder the question deeply. The husband half decides the advice of the clubwoman is wisdom itself. Gray is elected governor but Jane dies. His reforms prove unsuccessful. Gradually he comes to realize that he has been untrue to life's holiest purposes—that the highest good is parenthood—that he and Jane sinned woefully in deciding not to have children. And then—he awakes to discover he has been dreaming. Jane is by his side alive and well. The great question is settled for them. Both agree to devote their lives to rearing their offspring properly.

A Story With a Moral.

"The Valley of Decision" has been perfectly produced at the American studios in California. It points a powerful moral. It will appeal to audiences of the most intelligent sort. It is truly an attraction extraordinary. It can be booked now, along with the other Richard Bennett Mutual Star Productions at the nearest Mutual film exchange.

"Lumberlands" a Big Hit

Each new chapter of "A Lass of the Lumberlands" seems to grow more sensational than the one before. Daring Helen Holmes is outdoing any of her former efforts. In chapter six she makes a spectacular leap from a telephone pole to the top of a moving train. This phenomenal chapter-play is packing the theaters showing it.

FLOOD OF BOOKINGS Pour Into Mutual Film Exchanges ON "DIAMOND" SEQUEL

Tremendous as was the interest known to exist in the sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky," the flood of bookings which has poured into all the Mutual Film exchanges has surprised everyone in the organization. Apparently every exhibitor in the United States realizes what a box office magnet the sequel to the most successful serial ever produced is going to be. Practically every theater which ran the original "Diamond From the Sky" is going to run the sequel. Thousands of exhibitors who didn't show the original story are going to run the sequel at the request of their patrons. Millions of people are waiting to see who won the $10,000 prize. The only way they can find out is to see the sequel. The theaters showing it are going to be packed to the doors at every performance. Bookings can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual film exchanges.

"VAMPIRES" SERIES IS A REAL NOVELTY

The sensational series of mystery-detective stories released under the general title of "The Vampires" is proving a real novelty. Nothing exactly like it has ever before been offered the motion picture fans. Exhibitors on the lookout for "something new" are finding it just what they were seeking. Audiences everywhere are enthusiastic over it. It is filled with thrills. There is a surprise in almost every hundred feet of film. It is a real novelty. It's booking now at 68 Mutual exchanges.

Marjorie Rambeau Broadway Favorite Signed by Mutual

PURSUANT to his policy of constantly seeking new and talented stars for the Mutual feature productions, President John R. Freuler has signed still another popular favorite. This time it is Marjorie Rambeau, beautiful star of "Cheating Cheaters," this season's hit at the Eltinge theater in New York. Miss Rambeau has been lauded by the critics both for her beauty and her talent. Photographic tests have proven that her beauty lends itself perfectly to screen work. Her natural talent and a competent director will insure the preservation of her histrionic ability. President Freuler feels, therefore, that, in adding her to the already long list of popular Mutual stars, he has made no mistake. He feels certain she will soon be one of screendom's most popular stars.

Scored Hit in Stock.

Miss Rambeau scored her first hit as a stock actress. It was back in the days when she was leading woman of the Oliver Morosco Stock company at the Burbank theater of Los Angeles. "Merely Mary Ann" was the play in which she attained her first triumph. Of French-Irish parentage, Miss Rambeau comes naturally by her talent since her mother was a famous actress on the Pacific coast. Some time after her triumph at the Burbank theater in Los Angeles, Miss Rambeau appeared with Willard Mack over the "big time" vaudeville circuit, in a sketch entitled "Kick In." The act was specially written by Mr. Mack. It proved such a hit that it was later elaborated into a full evening's entertainment and used as the vehicle for a popular matinee idol. Last season she was the hit of "Sadie Love" at the Gaiety theater on Broadway. This year she opened under A. H. Woods' management in "Cheating Cheaters" at the Eltinge theater.

A Broadway Idol.

The striking beauty of Miss Rambeau quickly resulted in her becoming the idol of Broadway. She was so attractive that New York simply refused to let her depart. In fact she has scarcely appeared off Broadway since she scored her first hit. Therefore exhibitors playing the Marjorie Rambeau Mutual Star Productions will be enabled to offer their patrons a star direct from the theatrical capital of the world. It means bringing Broadway to every village and hamlet in the land. It means capacity houses for the theaters in which she appears. Exhibitors can arrange now for bookings, at any of the 68 Mutual exchanges.

Announcing A NEW MUTUAL STAR
Miss Marjorie Rambeau

PURSUANT to its new, Star policy for the year 1917, the Mutual Film Corporation announces, as the first acquisition for the new Mutual Star Productions, the engagement of Miss Marjorie Rambeau. Miss Rambeau has been lauded by America's foremost critics for her beauty and talent. Last season she was the featured star in "Sadie Love"—a successful Broadway play. This season she scored a tremendous triumph in "Cheating Cheaters"—another Broadway success. As the star of a series of new Mutual Star Productions she bids fair to attain even greater popularity. Early in 1917 Miss Rambeau will appear in a number of big feature productions to be made under the direction of Frank Powell and to be released thru the 68 exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation thruout America. Detailed announcements will be made later Miss Rambeau is the first of a number of prominent stars to be signed for Mutual Star Productions for the year 1917. Other players of first magnitude are now being engaged and will be announced as rapidly as contracts are signed. The new, Mutual Star policy for 1917 will enable exhibitors to secure the biggest and best productions that unlimited capital can produce.

Dear Sir

I sincerely thank you for the invitation to see "Charity" which I did yesterday through your courtesy. All true men and women believe in the right of the child to be well born and th[illegible] chances gi[illegible] up right and "Charity" splendidly illustrates this belief. It clearly showed many reasons why the public should be mor[illegible] alive in defending the little ones and it is a clearly uttered protest against the evils which prevent better growth and environment.

HUGHES' "SHIELDING SHADOW"

In one of the most popular moving picture serials now running, there is a mysterious something or somebody that steps in just at the crucial moment when the heroine or hero is endangered and saves the prospective victim from an awful fate.

This mysterious something is a shadowy shape, vague as to general outline but working with a very real and vigorous pair of hands. At the end of every week's episode there flashes out on the screen "WHO IS THE SHIELDING SHADOW?"

The incongruity between the dim, indefinite figure and the muscular efficiency of its hands is one of the things that makes the film go. It is great.

No better portrayal of the national political situation could be given. Always hovering about the path of Judge Hughes there is a dim, shadowy form, vague almost to invisibility but with big, strong, gripping hands. When dangers threaten, when there are obstacles in the way, then these hands get busy.

"WHO IS THE SHIELDING SHADOW?"

It is not difficult to guess. Guggenheim, Perkins, Morgan, Rockefeller, Whitney, Archbold and Frick are some of the names in the composite personality whose hands alone are so conspicuously busy handing out money, pulling the wires and in general employing every device to put President Wilson out and Judge Hughes in.

Take any name associated with special privilege, exploitation of the government and the degradation of labor and it will surely not be found in the list of those who are supporting Woodrow Wilson. The men who bear these names hate him. If for no other reason than the character of the enemies he has made, Mr. Wilson will receive the undivided support of the great mass of the American people.

Take this idea of Hughes' shielding shadow to the polls with you next Tuesday. Those gripping hands had their hold on you and your government at one time. Are you will again to offer them your throat?

MANY ARE MADE, BUT FEW ARE CHOSEN

So an old saying might be paraphrased and applied to conditions in the motion picture industry today. Many producers are making pictures, but, nevertheless, the high-class exhibitor has a difficult time in arranging a program that will appeal to the discriminating audience. Out of all the productions that are made and placed on the market, only a very few have the merits that present-day audiences are demanding, and the selection of these is the great problem that confronts every exhibitor.

A MESSAGE TO GARCIA

AN EDISON PRODUCTION of a Five-Reel Dramatization of Elbert Hubbard's Immortal Preachment

MABEL Featuring ROBERT

TRUNNELLE and CONNESS

WILL BE CHOSEN BY WISE EXHIBITORS

Because It Has All of the Qualities that Make a Picture Produce Profits and Prestige.
"A Message to Garcia" is PRE-ADVERTISED because it is based on a literary classic that is known and admired everywhere.
It presents a masterly story of adventure, romance, intrigue and patriotism—a story evolved directly from the incidents narrated in Hubbard's immortal preachment.
"A Message to Garcia" was filmed in Cuba, which guarantees its distinctiveness and superior quality.
It bears the name of EDISON—the greatest name in the world of the motion picture.

THE COSSACK WHIP

a superb five-reel production of a drama written exclusively for the screen by the renowned novelist

JAMES OPPENHEIM

The leading motion picture critics and the highest class exhibitors have been unanimous in their praise of this tremendous romance of the Russian Empire. "The Cossack Whip" is one of the finest and most powerful stories ever written for the screen, and it has been given a most elaborate and beautiful production. It features the young and lovely emotional star who became famous through her appearances in Edison productions.

VIOLA DANA

"The Heart of the Hills," featuring Conway Tearle and Mabel Trunnelle, also now is being booked. It is a rare romance of India and it portrays the mysticism characteristic of the Orient. Five reels of perfect satisfaction for exhibitor and patron.

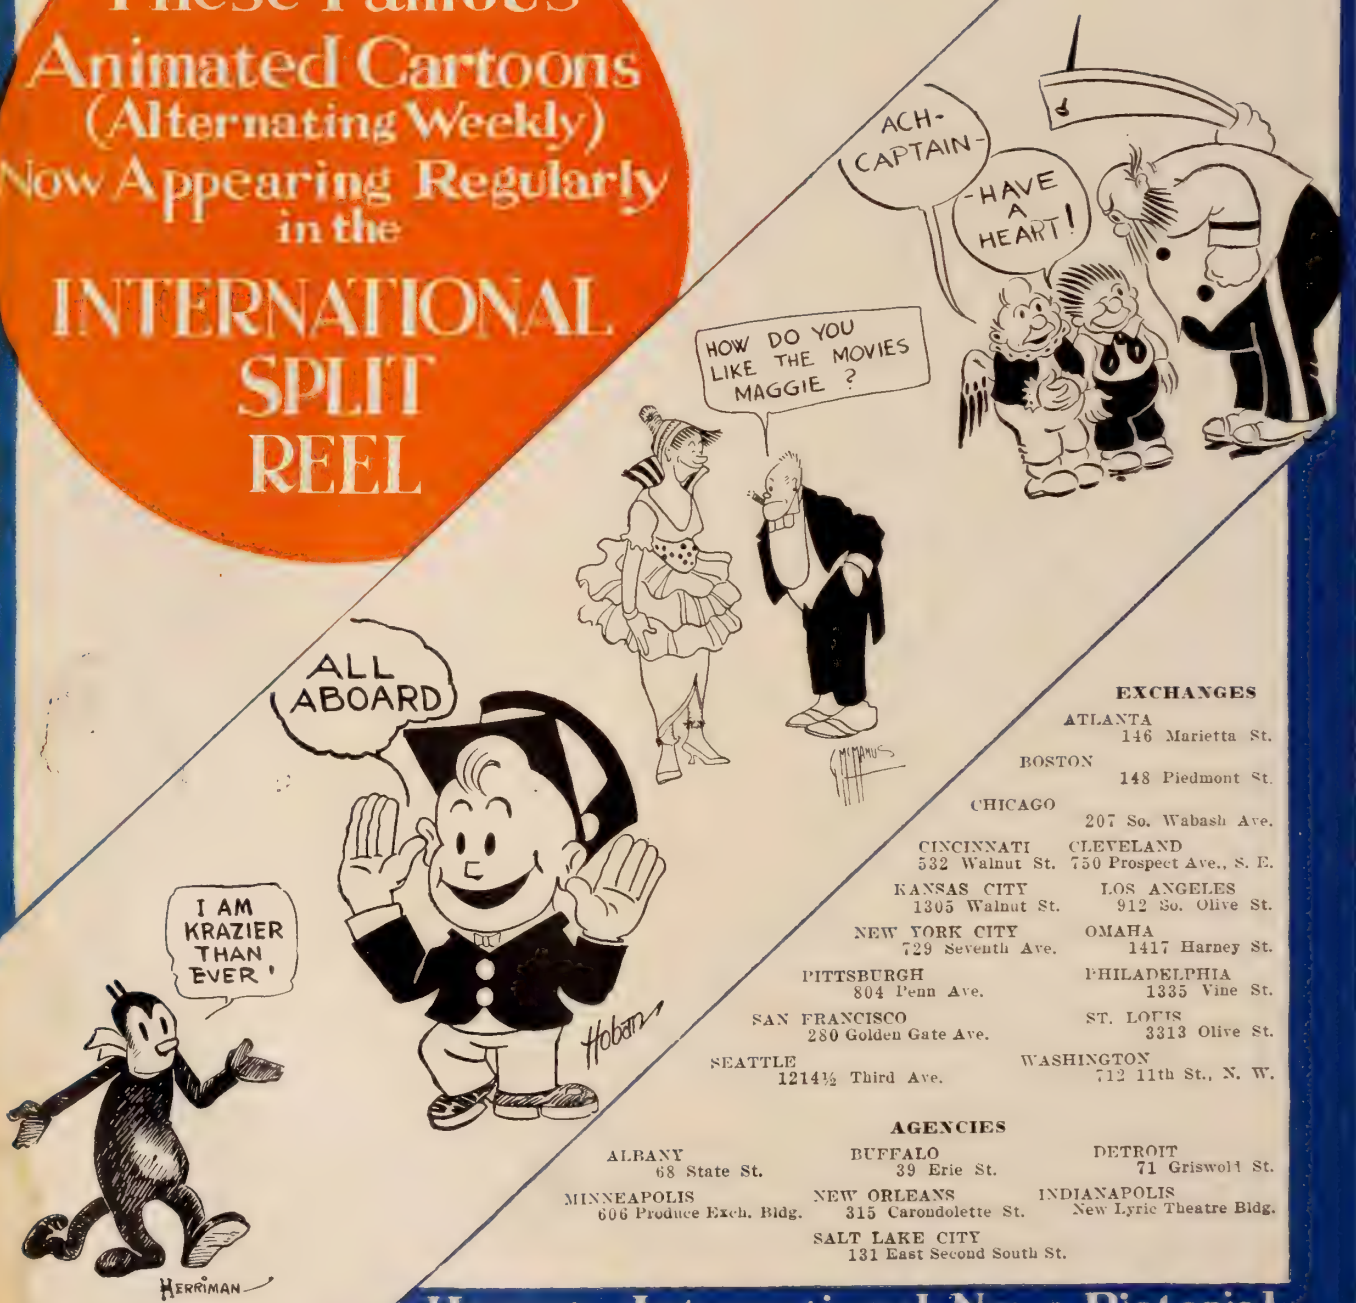
PATRIA was given the most remarkable reception ever accorded a motion picture at the private showing in the Grand Ball Room of the Ritz-Carlton, New York, last Monday night. After the Grand Ball Room had been filled to overflowing, a thousand prominent New Yorkers patiently waited for almost two hours until the conclusion of the first performance. Then the Grand Ball Room was filled again and a second performance given.

Patria was shown to more than 1,000 exhibitors of the Metropolitan district of New York in the Strand Theatre Tuesday morning.



These three different audiences, the most critical and exacting, acclaimed "Patria's" success with riotous applause. No motion picture ever had such a reception.

Every one who has seen this remarkable comedy-burlesque is asking, "Where DID you get that stuff?" At the big down-town Stanley, catering to Broadway patrons, this picture was a knockout. It set everyone to talking. They want to know why a big FIVE reel comedy with a hundred punches has never been released before.

Uptown at the neighborhood NORTH STAR Theatre 2000 people sat glued to their seats while the mirth and revelry and laughter amounted to almost a riot.

That's what we are offering you, Mr. States Rights Buyer—a novelty that has proven its box office value. You are not only getting a big, fine 5-reel production, a complete entertainment, but you have EDNA AUG, famous musical comedy star; Witwer and Van Loan, the funniest guys in the business; an all star cast of individual star comedians; interpolated novelties that put this picture in a class by itself.

A Reply to Wall Street

THIS week a film man replies to the "downtown" financier who last week said some pertinent and interesting things about this industry.

His remarks seem to have hit some nails on the head. At least they called forth a number of replies. Of these we have selected the following:

Mr. William Johnston, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, New York City.
DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

THE contribution of "A Man from Wall Street" to your "Keep the Ball Rolling" series interested me as it probably did all film men. Not because there is anything new in the statement that there are no big calibre men in the motion picture industry. Close on to four years I have heard the same conclusion from representatives of capital. And then I have watched—and time has shown me these men embarking on picture ventures and proving that even after their entry into the game their contentions remained true.

THE sum of "A Capitalist's" remarks is that the motion picture has not produced any big calibre men. With a very few exceptions I could name, the statement is correct. But it leaves unsaid an equally important fact. Motion pictures have not yet had any big calibre capital.

Most intelligent film men have long ago realized the truth of both conclusions. So, taking them for granted, why not let us attempt to define a big calibre motion picture man and big calibre capital? The definition is my own; it may be wrong in many particulars, but, right or wrong, it will continue the discussion, and in "keeping the ball rolling" help all of us.

WE will reach our definition by attempting to say what a big calibre man, backed by big calibre capital, would do were he to enter the picture ranks tomorrow.

First, and most important, a big calibre man would be a man who could see further ahead than six months, a man to whom the future would not mean 1917, but 1920 and 1925 and beyond. Being a big calibre man he would decide that he had not entered pictures to pick up some quick and easy money, but to build an organization that would endure—that would see its twenty-fifth anniversary and its fiftieth. And being backed by big calibre capital he would be allowed to look thus far ahead. He would not be forced to stultify himself by devising schemes for bringing in speedy and juicy returns to keep his backers smiling and confident.

THAT last sounds trite, but think it over—and think over the past few years of the picture game. You will agree with me that, equally essential with the need of big calibre men is the demand for big calibre capital.

TO proceed: Secondly, our big calibre man would set out systematically and with open eyes to learn what his market wanted. He would not do this as it is done today. For example, the man manufacturing short subjects goes out to investigate and returns telling you, "The majority of exhibitors want one and two-reel pictures." Then the film man making seven-reel subjects featuring stars of "the first ten" rank, sets out and he returns saying, "Exhibitors are unanimous in demanding seven-reel subjects with stars getting two million a year." And so on with the makers of all sorts of pictures. All these men are sincere. Sincere, yes—but incompetent, blind.

YOUR big calibre man would make his investigation with open eyes, unprejudiced, and with ability to analyze beneath surface indications to basic conditions. He would learn that there is a market for all types of pictures. But he would be able to rate the different demands, to rule out the type of film which no company seeking permanence could afford to make, to see what proportion of his attention each of the other classes merited. When he had finished he would be ready to lay down a definite, comprehensive program of operations for his producing organization.

The producing organization requires more space than I can probably steal from you for this letter, so I will simply state that it would be formed to meet the requirements of a corporation designed and destined for permanence. And that statement means the elimination of a multitude of sins. What a multitude, we film men well know.

WE reach the distributing organization. Your big calibre man will not start by engaging a blustering hack relic of the days when a general manager was supposed to be a 100 per cent combination of bluff, bull-dozing and soft soap, nor will his exchange managers be modelled after this pattern. He might even rule the word "exchange" out of his vocabulary and give us some new ideas, new methods—but that is wandering into personal idiosyncrasies. Suffice it to say that he would engage a top-notch, honest-to-goodness "sales executive," with assistants, down to the youngest salesman in the Keokuk territory, made in the same mold.

AND these men would know thoroughly (1) the market they were after, (2) the goods they had to offer, and (3) the fact that part and parcel of those goods was SERVICE. Not the pseudo-service that is so popular just now as an interviewing topic, and with house organ and advertising writers. But service that is intelligent co-operation, that—but once again I find myself wandering into the exposition of my personal ideas. That I shouldn't do—for these ideas may hold my job for me a few months longer in the precarious days to come when big calibre men will be crowding us film men out of the game.

HAVE we forgotten our "big calibre capital?" Not by any means, for it would take big calibre capital to allow a man to build up a real solid-rock distributing and sales system. Most capital I have seen would be willing to have you engage Ali Baba's Forty Thieves to go after the exhibitors rather than wait twelve months to "get the money." And then they wonder why the

VOL. XIV December 9, 1916 No. 23

The Picture in Politics

WITH only three weeks to work in, prints of the Griffith picture, "A Day with Governor Whitman," were distributed among 790 theatres in New York State and shown on the screen to approximately 900,000 persons.

For the first time in the political history of New York State, a governor in a Presidential election year led the head of his ticket by 40,000.

These facts may well be paralleled.

ASTUTE politicians say the motion picture was one of three big factors in this exceptional vote. Moreover, already the energetic gentlemen who secured this quick, wide distribution of the Griffith picture have been asked by several political organizations to lend their services to them next year.

The power of the motion picture is being proved.

Reply to Wall Street

Forty Thieves cannot continue to work the same route month after month, year after year.

THEN the advertising. Your big calibre man would not start out with a big, blaring, extravagant quarter million dollar campaign aiming at nothing in particular and hitting its mark, serving only to tickle the vanity of the executives, workers, and backers of the organization and perhaps bring in a quick flood of easy money.

No! He might spend the same amount of coin, but—what a revolutionary step—he would set out with a definite, concrete idea of what he intended to do, with a plan, with a program, with an object in view and a systematic method outlined for reaching it. He would decide, first of all, that of every dollar spent for advertising fifty cents would be for present benefit and fifty cents for the future.

THE subject is inexhaustible, but I have already taxed your patience, so I shall be satisfied with having given the ball a little further impetus and pass the buck to someone else. To sum up my share of the discussion: Backed by big calibre capital, the big calibre man of the future will be a man who realizes, that the picture patron has been the most neglected element in the picture field, that picture exhibitors are not a manna from heaven placed here for the easy sustenance of film makers and distributors, that both the type and cost of picture productions must be measured by the returns possible, that the selling end must be in the control of real sales brains, that he wants neither old line advertising men nor old line press agents but a newer combination of the virtues of both, and that the dictionary contains a word spelled F-U-T-U-R-E. And finally, a prediction: "For every big calibre man entering from outside the industry there will be two developed from those at present within the gates." But you might have a hard time finding them to-day, for they are plugging away in dark corners, having learned the truth of the Golden Circle—"The boss pays my salary, the boss knows what he wants, give the boss what he wants and the boss will continue to pay my salary." Selah!

WITHOUT attempting to comment upon the various and sensible points scored in the above article let us select for the sake of emphatic repetition a single paragraph, which to our minds, sums up in a large way the paramount problem of this industry today:

FIRST, and most important, a big calibre man would be a man who could see further ahead than six months, a man to whom the future would not mean 1917, but 1920 and 1925 and beyond.

BEING a big calibre man he would decide that he had not entered pictures to pick up some quick and easy money but to build an organization that would endure—that would see its twenty-fifth anniversary and its fiftieth and being backed by big calibre capital he would be allowed to look thus far ahead. He would not be forced to stultify himself by devising schemes for bringing in speedy and juicy returns to keep his backers smiling and confident.

IF a business condition, as stipulated above, dominated this industry today we would not be running these "Keep the Ball Rolling" articles.

Exhibitor Associations and Private Business

WE cite, with pleasure and hopefulness, the Brooklyn Association, one hundred and ten theatres strong, as a local formed and conducted along intelligent and constructive lines.

At a recent meeting an outside trade enterprise offered the formation of a co-operative business and a division of profits.

THE Association declined the offer, and furthermore used the occasion to emphasize one of its principles of organization, that it should not be concerned in any way with any private enterprise. The Brooklyn Association believes in devoting its efforts to its members' welfare—namely, the exhibiting business, and that the betterment of the latter, directly, will more than take their best constructive efforts. We agree with them.

The Advance Deposit

THE practice of forcing an exhibitor to pay an advance deposit—often it is of considerable size and months in advance of the delivery to him of the picture—must be done away with, and replaced with an arrangement mutually satisfactory to those concerned and somewhat in line with the delivery and payment of goods in other lines of business.

FEW other business problems exceed this in importance today in the eyes of the exhibitor and perhaps no other cog in the business mechanics of the industry calls more obviously for an immediate righting.

WE believe that the majority of the manufacturers feel this way about it. Their prompt and agreeable replies to the plan proposed by F. J. Rembusch, and which are published in this issue, would indicate this.

Mr. Selznick's plan, too, as tendered to the Brooklyn Association, is worthy of full consideration.

Exhibitor and Producer to Profit by Hodkinson's Plan

Any Producer Can Submit Pictures for Distribution Through the New Triangle Service—If the Subject is Good Enough It Will Be Used—"There Will Be No Regularity in Releases," Says Hodkinson—"They May Be Issued Once a Month or Four Times a Month"

INDEPENDENT producers of motion pictures which have an exceptionally high standard will be interested in the distribution proposition outlined by W. W. Hodkinson, in an exclusive interview for MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"We will accept pictures from anybody," stated Mr. Hodkinson, "if they are good enough. But they must be more than ordinarily good. They must be exceptionally good. It should be understood that the name Superpicture will not apply to any picture unless it measures up to the standards we have set. The term superpicture is a description; it is not the name of the product of any company.

"We will give each picture a series of unique tests. It must answer favorably certain questions. Just what these tests are I am not able to tell you at present, for trade reasons."

Mr. Hodkinson was asked to specify types of pictures which would be termed Superpictures. He replied:

"Supposing a producer came to us with a picture in which a star of national reputation was featured. Such a star must be known to millions of theatregoers. We would favor a picture of that type. If a very well-known producer offered to make for us one or a series of exceptional plays, we would favor him. If a famous author submitted stories of exceptional value, we would possibly be induced to use the pictures made from them.

"But all films which are passed by us must measure up to certain unique standards, as I mentioned before. To be sure that these tests are perfectly feasible, we intend to take into consultation certain men who are known as experts in the trade."

Mr. Hodkinson declined to specify which branch of the trade would be drawn upon for these men.

"We have selected no Superpictures. The McClure pictures will go out under Superpicture distribution, but they will not bear the Superpicture title. But the McClure people may submit films to us, so may Edison, or Pathe, or anybody; and if the film coincides with our standards, we will use it."

There will be no regularity in the release of Superpictures. They may be issued once a month, or four times a month, just as they are produced and accepted. They will reach the exhibitor through the reorganized Triangle Distributing Corporation, of which Mr. Hodkinson was recently made President.

"Naturally, the exhibitors who are now booking Triangle plays," he stated, "will be given preference in booking Superpictures. I may correct a misunderstanding which seems to have arisen by saying that no one has the franchise to use the name Superpicture."

The Triangle Distributing Corporation is owned jointly by the Triangle Film Corporation and Superpictures, Inc. Messrs. Aitken, Kessel and Baumann will continue their activities with the Triangle Film Corporation. Raymond Pauley is treasurer of the new corporation.

Mr. Hodkinson gave out the following statement on Wednesday, November 22, to the trade press generally:

"The new organization will not only operate the present Triangle branch offices, and distribute Triangle pictures, but it will also distribute such productions as may be released by Superpictures, Inc. Our plans are quite comprehensive, and in carrying them out we shall have the hearty co-operation of Mr. Aitken and his associates of the Triangle Film Corporation. It should be understood that the new organization does not contemplate any immediate or radical change in methods of distribution, and exhibitors may depend upon our best support and co-operation. Our sole aim will be to attain a wider and perhaps more efficient plan of distribution through Triangle's existing organization, and to improve upon this where opportunity offers, and in the manner that a vaster output will make possible.

"There will be no change whatever in Triangle production, because of our entry into the field, and Mr. Aitken and Messrs. Kessel and Baumann, with their producing affiliations, will continue to deliver to us for distribution the same high quality of film drama that has characterized the Triangle product of the past. The sole change that will occur will be that the Superpicture organization will release its output so as to reach the exhibitor through the same and possibly augmented channels. The headquarters of the new Triangle Distributing Corporation will be in the present Triangle offices at 1457 Broadway."

Mr. Hodkinson has already assumed control of the Triangle branch offices, and has appointed C. E. Tandy to act as district manager of the branches in Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas, and A. H. Blank as district manager of the offices in Kansas City and St. Louis.

Los Angeles Studios Win Suit Against House Owners

Protest of Hollywood Residents at Ten-Foot Studio Fence Is Disapproved by City Council—Film People Claim to Have Populated Hollywood

THE Los Angeles City Council again last week affirmed the allegiance of the present administration toward the motion picture industry, when they failed to grant a petition of several property owners of Hollywood, which, if adopted, would cause the removal of all studios from the Hollywood residential section.

Property owners claim that the erection of studios with ten-foot board fences and the continued use of the grounds during early morning hours and on Sunday, caused a decrease in the value of property adjoining for residential purposes.

The hearing before the Public Welfare Committee brought out the fact that the property owners wished the fences reduced to five feet in height, and that if fast growing vines were set out about the plants, it would greatly improve the general appearance. One speaker for the film companies raised a big laugh in the hearing when he suggested that the high fences had caused the straining of many necks which was the principal cause for objection.

This action of the city council affects the Lasky, Fox, National Drama, Christie, L-Ko, Vogue, International Laboratories, and the Chaplin-Mutual studios. If adopted it would have caused a loss of more than a half million to the owners.

It is estimated that eighty-five per cent of the employes of the plants named above reside in Hollywood, and it was pointed out that the film industry had caused the erection of hundreds of beautiful residences on the ground which five years ago—the time of the establishment of the first studio by Al E. Christie for old Nestor Company—was used for pasture lots.

FALSE ADVERTISING ATTACKED IN WASHINGTON

With a view of putting to an end alleged practices of false advertising by motion picture houses, the Retail Merchants' Association, Washington, D. C., has issued a warning to certain motion picture theatre managers employing such practices. R. P. Andrews, president of the association, and C. J. Columbus, secretary, are making investigations. It is stated that if the warning is not complied with legal procedure will take place under the false advertising law.

Complaints are made that the same pictures have been exhibited under different names, thereby deceiving the public. An indiscriminate charge of admission is another complaint. Abnormal attendance is claimed to be made use of by some managers in advertising the popularity of films.

Such complaints are only directed against the manager who is a menace to the business rather than a help and the weeding out of such managers would revert to a common good.

OLD TIME ENGLISH STAR ACQUIRED BY IVAN FILMS

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has signed Katherine Kaelred for "Enlighten Thy Daughter," in which she will be co-star with Frank Sheridan and James Morrison.

Miss Kaelred will be remembered as the original vampire with Robert Hilliard in the still successful drama "A Fool There Was," which was first produced in the year 1909.

Abolition of Advance Deposits Proposed by Rembusch

President of Indiana Exhibitors' Branch, in Letters Written to Every Manufacturer in the Country, Requests That Cash Deposit System Be Done Away With Before January 1, 1917—Favorable Replies from Many Prominent Manufacturers—Cash Payment by Exhibitors to Exchanges Is Suggested as Alternative

F. J. REMBUSCH, president of the Indiana branch of the Exhibitors' League and exhibitor-director of the National Association, has written to every producer in the country asking for the abolition of the advance deposit system and the substitution of a universal form of contract between the exchange and exhibitor whereby the latter will pay cash for the film before it leaves the exchange.

All advance monies of the exhibitors now being held by the manufacturers are to be returned to the former not later than January 1, 1917, according to Mr. Rembusch's plan, provided 75 per cent. of the manufacturers agree upon the plan.

A list of those manufacturers who do and do not agree to the plan is to be published.

Up to date Mr. Rembusch has not received a single refusal. A number of manufacturers have replied favorably; others have the matter under consideration. Three to six months may be required, says Mr. Rembusch, for the manufacturers to adjust themselves to the change; but the elimination of the unjust, unnecessary deposit system is bound to come about, and it now looks as though the manufacturers would take the step themselves.

Mr. Rembusch's letter follows:

Advance Deposits to Blame

"The present high and practically prohibitive cost of film rental naturally follows the high cost of producing, but the true cause comes from the advance deposit system.

"The advance deposit system encourages producers to be needlessly lavish, extravagant, and even reckless in their expenditures towards every item that goes towards producing pictures.

"The advance deposit system is the cause of a condition to-day that is extremely unhealthy for both the manufacturer and the exhibitor, because anyone can take a few dollars and a big star; advertise that they are going to produce pictures in so and so many weeks or months; secure a large advance deposit from the exhibitor, and be financed by the exhibitor throughout before the picture is even released.

"There are enough film manufacturers and enough exhibitors to take care of the business at the present time, and the need of economy is very evident to prevent still higher cost and further expansion.

"The exhibitor pays for everything, and is not prospering at present, and when the exhibitor is out of the profit sharing column this whole industry is booked for reverse. For the benefit of the industry, as a whole, the deposit system should be eliminated entirely so that everyone will stand on their own ground.

"In place of the deposit system a universal form of contract and system of paying for every film before it leaves the office, and a discount to those exhibitors who pay a week in advance, would bring about a condition that would be very fair and healthful to this whole industry.

"This letter is being written to every film manufacturer and producer in the United States with a view of getting an expression immediately from each one on this question.

"Please answer at once—ARE YOU WILLING TO DO AWAY WITH THE ADVANCE DEPOSIT SYSTEM AND RETURN ALL MONIES NOW UP TO EXHIBITORS NOT LATER THAN JANUARY 1, 1917, PROVIDING A UNIVERSAL SYSTEM OF PAYING FOR ALL FILM BEFORE IT LEAVES THE EXCHANGE IS AGREED UPON BY 75 PER CENT. OF THE PRODUCERS AND DISTRIBUTORS?

"A list of those who will and will not agree to eliminate the advance deposit system will be given to every exhibitor in the United States in a short time. Therefore, an early answer will be appreciated.

"Very truly yours,

"(Signed) F. J. REMBUSCH."

President Indiana M. P. E. L. of A.

Producers Are Willing

The following replies from manufacturers have thus far been received:

No. 1. "Your favor of November 8 has remained unanswered due to my absence from the city for a few days. The logic contained therein is unanswerable; therefore your proposition as set forth in your letter of November 8 is entirely acceptable to this company."

No. 2. "In reply to your letter please be advised that the Advance Deposit System to which you refer is not in practice in our branches."

No. 3. "We beg to state we do not approve of certain cliques demanding large and substantial deposits which help them finance different companies and is against our way of doing business."

No. 4. "We beg to acknowledge receipt of your circular letter of the 8th, and beg to state we are willing to do away with the Advance Deposit System as outlined in your letter. You may, therefore, count on our co-operation in this matter."

Pay for Service in Advance

No. 5. "We see no reason whatsoever why an exhibitor should pay a big deposit when he books a picture. We do think, however, an exhibitor should pay for his service weekly in advance. His business is a cash-in-advance business, and practically the manufacturers' is a cash-in-advance business. As a matter of fact, our film, including the stock and all expenses, is paid for a month before it is shipped to an exchange, etc. You are at liberty to quote us as being against the huge deposits extracted from exhibitors."

No. 6. "The Advance Deposit System is a joke on the exhibitors who have fallen for it. It is the best proof in the world that the average exhibitor is an easy victim for glib-tongued promoters. It has done more to encourage unscrupulous stock jobbing and fake promotion than any other element in the film business. When the old-fashioned gold brick faker found the picture exhibitor on earth he quit selling gold bricks to the farmers and started on this new line of endeavor."

"Should Not Pay in Advance"

No. 7. "Replying to your valued favor of the 7th we heartily agree with you in that exhibitors should not be expected to advance money for the exploitation of new and irresponsible producers. The position of this corporation as set forth by Mr. ——— more than once in public prints is very clearly in the direction of the stability of the industry and of protection to every exhibitor, small as well as large."

MOTION PICTURES NEWS is glad to throw open its columns to a thorough discussion of this most important subject, and to help direct the way to this much needed reform.

At a recent meeting of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' Association, Lewis J. Selznick suggested the elimination of the advance deposit by the following means: That the association members, through a general tax, bond themselves and thus secure the manufacturers against bad debts.

WESTERN EXHIBITORS DISPUTE STATEMENTS OF INVESTIGATING CLERGYMAN

That the people of Oakland, Cal., are almost unanimously in favor of the censorship of moving pictures is the statement made by the Rev. A. W. Palmer, of that city. After witnessing a stage production that was finally toned down by the Chief of Police, the minister sent out letters to be answered by men in all walks of life pertaining to their theatrical tastes. The answers indicated that exhibitions of nudity on the stage were disapproved of in the ratio of 798 to 14, while the censorship of all motion picture films was approved of by a vote of 723 to 49. Exhibitors of Oakland and other suburbs of San Francisco declare that there is no such a sentiment for censorship, and express the belief that if the matter were ever to be brought to a vote the proposition would be overwhelmingly defeated. They point out the fact that censorship in San Francisco was recently abolished through the insistence of the public that it be done away with, and that sentiment in Oakland on this subject is no different than it is in San Francisco, just across a little neck of water. The fact that the showing of improper pictures can be stopped as readily without a Board of Censors as with one, is shown by the recent action of the police in San Francisco, which held up an exhibition of the "Garden of Knowledge," and which has been making a war on improper lobby displays. This shows that exhibitor censorship is sufficient.

"WITCHING HOUR" SOLD FOR NEW YORK

The New York and Northern New Jersey rights to the Frohman Amusement Corporation's latest production, "The Witching Hour," have already been disposed of to a new distributing corporation just formed. The capital for this concern was furnished in the main by several men interested in the automobile industry, while its active heads are Julius Lichenstein and Morris H. Tobias.

Mr. Tobias, who will be in charge of the bookings, closed the deal in which he procured these important rights on Friday, November 24, after having seen the picture at the Strand the Wednesday before. Mr. Lichenstein will occupy the office of president of the corporation as soon as papers are obtained. Julius Levine will act as assistant to Mr. Tobias. Offices will shortly be opened in the film district.

Mr. Tobias, in speaking of his acquisition, said: "I have long been on the lookout for a production big enough to compete with pictures of greater length. Until now, though, there has not been a picture containing the possibilities of "The Witching Hour," The company has not been inaugurated solely for the marketing of this picture. In future we will endeavor to procure other unusual productions."

LEGAL LIGHT TAKES TO ARCS AND STARS

Mr. Golden, who is best known to filmdom as one of the attorneys for the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, has had taken under his personal direction a picture of cadet life at West Point that every parent should see.

Mr. Golden was a member of the corps several years ago and knows his subject thoroughly.

The value of this film was demonstrated when the manager of a Broadway house booked it upon seeing it shown.

If Mr. Golden's success in the producing end of the moving picture industry is as marked as his success in the legal end he will indeed be fortunate.

PIONEER STAR-EXPLOITER KEEPS ALL BUSY

Seven Selznick-Picture productions will be released in December, January and February. "War Brides" will be followed on January 1 by Clara Kimball Young's second Selznick-Picture offering, "The Foolish Virgin," by Thomas Dixon. The third feaure on the new schedule is Norma Talmadge in "Panthea," directed by Allan Dwan, which will be first shown in the middle of January.

Miss Young's third Selznick-Picture, an adaptation of David Graham Phillips' novel, "The Price She Paid," is now in the course of preparation under the direction of Charles Giblyn and will be issued in January. For February there will be Robert Warwick in "The Argyle Case" and Herbert Brennon's adaptation of Alexander Dumas' great drama, "Lucretia Borgia." Miss Young's fourth offering, a film version of Eugene Walter's immense stage success, "The Easiest Way," is expected to be finished under the direction of Albert Capellani in time for release late in February.

Lee Ochs' Trial Proceeds Jerkily

No Progress Has Been Made Since the Meeting of Saturday, November 18—Interference Prevents Keppler from Presenting His Case

THE examinatiton of Lee A. Ochs by an investigation committee to determine whether or not he has used his office as president of the National League to further his personal ends has proceeded by halts and jerks. The Saturday meeting was postponed until the following Tuesday, when a stock certificate book and the stock ledger were to be produced to ascertain if Ochs' new trade publication was subsidized by a film company.

Neither the stock certificate book, the ledger, Ochs, nor his attorney put in an appearance, so the meeting was adjourned until Friday.

Tobias Keppler, attorney for Fleischman and Goldreyer, the New York exhibitors, who accuse Ochs of using his office to further his personal ends and not the ends of the league, protested against the postponement on Tuesday, and read the following into the record:

"I vigorously protest against this adjournment, because I made it very clear and emphatic at the meeting held Saturday that if there was a long adjournment the whole purpose of the investigation would be defeated.

"I defied Mr. Ochs to produce the stock certificate book stubs and the stock ledger, which I contended proved that a film interest subsidized the Exhibitors' Trade Review, and that it was therefore not to the advantage of the exhibitors or to the organization. Mr. Ochs and his attorney, Mr. Rosenthal, faithfully promised to produce the books Tuesday at eleven o'clock. Neither Mr. Ochs nor his attorney are present, nor are the books here, and we therefore demand an investigation of why this meeting was adjourned in the manner it has been and without notice to us, and why the books have not been produced; and we request that this investigation be made as quickly as possible."

During the hearing the following Friday, November 24, it developed that Sam Trigger, chairman of the investigating committee, had sent telegrams to the eight members of the executive board, requesting their opinions upon the authority of the local branch to examine the stock books and ledger in question. Seven of the eight members, he said, had replied that the local board had no right to inspect the books.

Keppler hotly protested this action, which, he declared, was not according to Hoyle. Trigger became agitated and snapped back that he, Keppler, was trying to blacken the characters of the executive board. Keppler declared he didn't know the men, and, consequently, could not possibly blacken their characters.

Trigger thought the matter over, and apologized profusely. A resolution was then passed by the committee to the effect that no officer or member be allowed to postpone a meeting without the sanction of the committee, and that no officer or member could act on his initiative in matters which affected the committee as a whole.

Committeeman Steiner, who on the previous Saturday protested forcefully against bringing the stock books in for immediate inspection, then took the floor and made a motion that the sending of the telegrams be endorsed. But the motion was lost, or forgotten, in the general excitement.

Committeeman Ascher, who on several occasions took exception to Steiner's motions, got to his feet and declared that he felt and declared that he felt it was the duty of the members to forget by whom they had been appointed, and that they should do all in their power to get the facts on the table, and to let the exhibitors all over the country know honestly, fully, and clearly the real situation.

Friday's meeting was postponed to give Keppler an opportunity to take up with the executive board the question of the stock books, and the hearing was adjourned until Friday, December 1.

Mr. Keppler gave out the statement that he had been approached with the request to organize another exhibitors' league, which he refused.

OCHS NEVER A MEMBER OF POPULAR PLAYS AND PLAYERS

In the article on the investigation of Lee A. Ochs which appeared on page 3452 in the previous issue (M. P. News) was published the statement that Mr. Ochs was at one time treasurer of the Popular Plays and Players Company. Mr. Ochs was not treasurer of Popular Plays and Players, but of the Playgoers Film Company.

The Popular Plays and Players Company was organized in 1913 by Harry Cohen and George Cooke. Since its inception that company has had the following officers: L. Lawrence Weber, president; Harry Cohen, secretary, and Jos. H. Tooker, treasurer.

SALESMEN CLUB FORMED IN GREATER NEW YORK

Practically every salesman of every representative company in Greater New York, seventy-five in all, have formed a club purely for social convenience. A meeting was held on November 25 at Wurlitzer Hall, New York, and Mr. Interrante of the B. S. Moss Company was chosen temporary chairman of the club. This is the first time that such an organization has been formed in New York City, although several such clubs exist in other exchange centers. The salesmen plan a big public dance in the near future to introduce themselves to the trade.

FAMOUS FRANCISCO'S FAMILY FILMED FOR FIRST TIME BY HEARST

The immediate family and near relatives of Francisco Villa, the famous Mexican bandit and outlaw, have just been filmed and will appear in the Hearst International News Pictorial. The most notable persons of the group are Mrs. Francisco Villa and her young son, Augustin Francisco, Jr., who is said to bear a strong resemblance to the notorious father. Next in importance come Hipolito Villa, Francisco's brother, his wife and baby, Maria Luisa, and Mrs. Antonio Villa, widow of a Villa brother who was killed in battle.

Boston Film Folk Turn Out for Annual Ball

Mayor Curley and Ex-Governor Walsh of Massachusetts in Grand March—Banquet and Meeting Held in Early Morning—7,000 Followers of Motion Pictures See Forty Stars of the Big Producing Companies March in Line

SHORTLY before midnight Wednesday, November 22, the glare of many calciums revealed to the waiting eyes of 7,000 New England followers of motion pictures over 40 stars of the big producing companies marching side by side with Mayor Curley, of Boston, and former Governor David I. Walsh, of Massachusetts, in the grand march of the annual motion picture ball of the Massachusetts branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

An hour later Miss Beatrice Roberts, of Winthrop, Mass., not yet graduated from high school, had been chosen from among 125 entrants in the beauty contest, as the girl who should be given opportunity for screen appearances by the Atlas Film Company, which firm is now building a plant in Newton, Mass. Three other contestants were considered so worthy by the judges that arrangements will be made to give them a trial. They are: Lillian White, of Everett; Alice Noak, of Watertown, and Nona Nee.

The New York party, on the way to Boston on the Knickerbocker express, were met at Providence by a committee of the League, consisting of J. H. Hand, Boston manager of the World Film Corporation; Samuel Moscow, local manager of Unicorn; Charles Phillips, of the Fox Film Company, and E. S. Horstmann, president of the League.

Several thousand Boston movie followers met them at the Back Bay station and escorted them to the Copley Plaza, where the grill room had been reserved entire and a spread was served.

In the group of stars were: Alice Joyce, Rose Tapley, Harry Morey and Adele De Garde, of the Vitagraph Company; June Caprice, Stuart Holmes and Mr. Justice, of the Fox Film Corporation; Grace Darling, Betty Howe, Mr. Gulick and Mr. Berger, of the International Film Company; Margaret Gale and Eric Mayne, of the Unity Film Corporation; Florence La Badie, Doris Grey, Gladys Hulette, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Benham and Mr. Beatty, of the Thanhouser Film Corporation; Jack Sherrill, George Fawcett, of the Frohman Corporation; James Morrison, Frankie Mann, Zena Keefe, Anna Nilsson, Louise Vale and Mr. Chadwick, of the Ivan Film Corporation; Lucille Lee Stewart and Huntley Gordon, of the Ralph Ince Company; Violet Mersereau, King Baggot, Mr. and Mrs. Billy Quirk, Wally Van, Ormi Hawley, Samuel Grant, Capt. Charles E. Kimball and Mr. Milliken, of various other companies and corporations.

Two hundred and twenty stars and guests attended a banquet at Horticultural Hall at 2 o'clock Thursday morning. They listened to speeches by ex-Governor Walsh, Representative George E. Curran, Samuel Trigger, former president of the New York exhibitors; F. J. Howard and Rose Tapley. Marion Howard Brazier, president of the Film Club, also spoke. Among the guests were: P. A. Powers, Andrew J. Cobe, of Unity; Billy Quirk, president of the Screen Club; Mr. Chadwick and Mr. Samoick, of Ivan; Mr. Blaisdell, Mr. Hoffmann, of Bluebird; Harry Webster, Mr. Berger and Mr. Gulick, of the International Film Company; John Trouth, and many others, including the stars.

Once again the Universal carried off first honors at the Boston Movie Ball held at the Arena, Wednesday, November 22. The throng which attended this annual affair crowded about the Universal booth the greater part of the evening, eager to meet charming Violet Mersereau and King Baggot, the Universal stars who were present.

Early in the evening the Universal Moving Picture Band of fifty pieces gave an impromptu concert in the lobby of the Copley Plaza Hotel, where a program of Universal airs was rendered. Following the concert the band headed a parade of automobiles to the Arena. The cars were handsomely decorated with artistic banners and crowds followed the torchlight procession to the door of the Arena.

Prominent in making the Universal showing so successful were P. A. Powers, treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, J. H. Mullin, New England Exchange manager, and M. H. Hoffman.

The Universal representatives occupied three boxes at the Movie Ball, from which the stars distributed souvenirs to the guests. As the Universalites were the only producers represented, who were presenting souvenirs, the crowd surged to their boxes, and at one time became so great that there was danger of having the rails broken down.

Miss Mersereau and Mr. Baggot were in front of the grand march with Governor McCall and Mayor Curley.

Sidelights of the Ball

THE Vitagraph contingent surprised the patrons of the modern theatre by appearing on its stage in person before appearing at the Arena.

Rose Tapley showed excellent form pitching souvenirs to the crowd.

June Caprice appeared in the grand march with an ex-governor on one arm and the mayor of Boston on the other, which is doing passably well, considering that the young lady is possessed of only two arms. If she can do as well with old Vox Pop, the fortune of Fox is assuredly made.

As usual, the villains proved the most popular of the stars, Stuart Holmes and Paul Panzer being constantly in the limelight.

Charles Farrell, manager of Pathe in Boston, was a forceful if debonair announcer.

Anna Nilsson appeared in one-reel, entitled "Dancing with the Governor," the latter character being taken by Former Governor David I. Walsh.

Leon Dadmun, president of the new Atlas Film Company, was present to see the honors awarded in the beauty contest.

Manager Campbell of Fox was a busy man, with his large galaxy of stars, and was focused by all eyes.

Manager Samuel Grant of the ball, was pleased at the large attendance. It was an artistic and popular success, and the financial end it is hoped will give better than an even break.

Sherrill Obtains Rights to "The Rainbow"

WILLIAM L. SHERRILL, the president of the feature producing company that bears his name, announces that he has bought the screen rights to "The Rainbow," written as a play by A. E. Thomas, and "Once to Every Man," one of the best sellers of a year ago, for production and release on the Art Dramas program.

"The Rainbow" was first produced as a Broadway attraction at the Liberty theatre in March of 1912, with Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton in the leading roles. It had a most successful run there, staying for over a year, and has been touring the country ever since, playing everything from week engagements to one-night stands. It has also been very successful as a stock attraction, almost every repertoire company of any consequence having played it. Being full of action, it lends itself very readily to picturization.

"Once to Every Man" first appeared serially in the Metropolitan Magazine, where an installment of it appeared every month for a year. It was then published in book form, and was so successful that it ran through four editions within the first six months after its issue. It was written by Larry Evans, who is also the author of "Then I'll Come Back to You," which was screened so successfully by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, with Jack Sherrill and Alice Brady in the leading parts.

"The Rainbow" was a pronounced hit when it played in New York, and its subsequent successes on the road make it an invaluable piece for a feature picture. Incidentally, it was in that play that Ruth Chatterton achieved her first big success, in the role of Cynthia, the little girl who had not seen her father until she was quite grown up, and then only shortly.

"Once to Every Man" is also a story that has unusual possibilities. The wide publicity it has received through its many editions and its serial publication has undoubtedly made it an ideal story for a photoplay.

Open Booking or the Program—Which?—VI.

William A. Brady of World Film Corporation Considers the Question from a National Standpoint, Viewing as He Is Able from Experience in Practically All Fields of Amusement—"To My Mind There Is Only One Form of Booking, the Program"

WILLIAM A. BRADY, president of the World Film Corporation, though practically a newcomer to the field of the motion picture, has spent his whole life since early youth in the business of entertaining the public and during that time has not confined himself to one field of endeavor, but has, on the other hand, experienced every phase of the entertainment industry, stage, opera, spectacle, prize ring, circus and motion picture. It is because of this vast experience that Mr. Brady's opinion on the question under discussion is of the utmost value and worthy of the most careful consideration.

Mr. Brady in talking over program versus open booking with a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS considered the question entirely from a national viewpoint. He said, "To my mind there is only one form of booking and that is program booking. In any consideration of this subject you must start with the premise that the program group of manufacturers is the spine of the whole industry. Take them away and what will you have left? A small group of independent manufacturers. Could they step in at a moment's notice and supply the service for the smaller exhibitor in Kankakee or Puxsatawney?

"That is the big point in this discussion. What effect will a cessation of the program form of booking have on the small exhibitors scattered all over the United States, far from distributing centers, how will they obtain the pictures to keep their theatres open? It is impossible for them to journey into the various centers and personally pick out the pictures they desire to run, as is done in England. The country is too big, the distances are too great. It is impossible on the face of it.

"Just suppose for purposes of illustration that the group of manufacturers now known as the program group should get together in a room and decide that beginning the first of next month they would discontinue the program, that in the future they would dispose of their product on the open booking plan. What would be the result? Chaos, pure and simple. It would be a fatal blow to the growth and expansion of the industry, a blow from which it would probably never recover. If the open booking plan is right it would be the logical move for this group of manufacturers to take some such action.

"They do not take it because they know that it is wrong in principle, that it is fundamentally against the rules of business, of progress, and of expansion. Many exhibitors have advanced the argument that they would be perfectly satisfied to tie up the program form of booking provided they were given some surety that the program people would maintain their present roster of stars. The answer to this is very simple. Let the program people have their pictures completed so far in advance that the exhibitor knows for a definite period of time just exactly what pictures and what stars he will receive on that program. It is a simple matter then for him to decide which program will best serve his purposes.

Question Simplified

"The question simplifies itself further when compared with the legitimate stage. Suppose the present booking arrangements of the theatre which have taken so many years to build up and perfect were suddenly thrown aside and the business went back to the days when every individual theatre manager had to come into New York for two or three months each year, and strolling up and down the Rialto try and arrange a sufficient number of shows to keep his house open for the season. Ask any theatre manager if he would welcome such a change. You would not receive one answer in the affirmative.

"The same thing applies to the motion picture, only more so. Instead of a short theatrical season in the winter the motion picture theatre is open the year round. That means that the manager has just so many more shows to look after and arrange for. Could the small theatre owner take the time to come into the distributing center and see and arrange for all of these shows? He could not, and make money. It takes nearly all of his time to arrange for the proper showing of his pictures so that he can get the most money into his house. We here in New York are very liable to lose our perspective in discussing a question of this kind. Open booking may be all right for the big house in the big cities, but the percentage of big houses is very very small. And it might be well to note in this connection that the biggest and most successful picture theatre in the country sticks pretty close to the program form of booking.

"I could go on for hours pointing out the merits of the program and the defects of open booking as applied to this country, but it would only be a waste of time. Considered from a national viewpoint, from the viewpoint of the greatest good to the greatest number there is only one form of booking and that reliable program booking. Any other form means chaos and chaos means bankruptcy for exhibitor, producer and distributor."

Fire in National Drama Corporation Plant

Laboratory and Offices of Los Angeles Studio Occupied by Fox Organization Partially Destroyed—$15,000 Loss

FIRE which broke out in one of the buildings of the National Drama Corporation plant in Los Angeles, Cal., which is being used by the western companies of the Fox Film Corporation, early on Tuesday morning, November 21, caused a loss of approximately $15,000. It started in a building sixty by a hundred and forty feet, containing carpenter shops, offices and laboratories.

The fire was brought under control before it had a chance to spread to any of the other buildings of the plant. William Muscelbach, Fox laboratory superintendent, rushed to the studio in one of the adjacent buildings and carried out all the film left there. The film vault, only a short distance from the burning building, contained two hundred thousand dollars worth of raw and exposed stock, which, however, was undamaged.

Of the $15,000, Thomas Dixon of the National Drama Corporation loses ten thousand and William Fox five. Production of Fox pictures is under no delay. Temporary offices have been established in the dressing rooms in one of the other buildings. The laboratory has been moved to the other Fox plant at Edendale. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Five Interesting Subjects in Gaumont Film Magazine

DIVERSITY is the keynote of Gaumont's "Reel Life," No. 31, the Mutual Magazine in Film released December 3. There are five divisions, every one being of a highly entertaining character. First comes "An Air Car for Passengers," an illuminating glimpse into the near future. It shows one of the new heavier-than-air machines designed to carry passengers, and is the type which seems destined to come into general use as soon as the public demands regular air service.

G. Hepburn Wilson, supreme master of the dancing masters' order known as the Inner Circle, demonstrates the Biltmore Waltz with a partner. This is one of the season's popular dances, and is given to the country through "Reel Life." The various steps of the dance are also shown in order on the screen.

Carrying out the magazine idea, a new department of interest, particularly to women, is introduced in this issue. This is called "Modish Coiffures," and shows on the screen how women can dress their hair to best advantage. The desire to make the demonstrations authoritative brought to the Gaumont studio, Louis Skala, the artist hair dresser of the Fifth avenue parlors of A. Simonson. One of his subjects is none other than pretty Phœbe Brewster, the charming young model used so frequently by Harrison Fisher.

The poor and friendless prune of two years ago has come into its own. It is now a lordly aristocrat of the table, and boarding-house jokes about it are things of the past. Pictures of the industry in California are shown in this issue which were but slightly pruned.

Kalem Editor Goes to California with New Ideas

Engagement of English Novelist and Inauguration of Staff—Fiction-Writers' Scenario Department One of Several Radical Changes in Kalem Methods of Production—"A Contributing Author Department" Is Name of Project

THE first move in a series of revolutionary steps was taken last week by the Kalem Company with the announcement that Phil Lang, for five years scenario editor of that company, would leave for California. Mr. Lang will make his headquarters at Kalem's Glendale studio, and immediately set about the establishment of a scenario department along lines that mark a radical departure in motion picture production.

A "contributing author department" is what Kalem calls its new project. Mr. Lang, on the ground with the producers, will have complete direction of the story end of the productions. But co-operating with him just as the scattered contributors to a magazine do with the editor, will be a group of prominent authors recruited from the fiction writers of America and England. It will not be to hack scenario writers or to staff men that Kalem will look for its plots, but to this group of "contributing authors," who will be recognized specialists in the different types of stories to be produced.

E. W. Hornung, author of "Raffles," and Robert Welles Ritchie are the first to be numbered in Kalem's roster of "contributing authors." Robert Welles Ritchie, in addition to his work for The Saturday Evening Post, Every Week, Harper's, and other periodicals, has become known in the picture field through the success of his two series "The Girl from 'Frisco" and "Grant, Police Reporter."

The internationally known creator of "Raffles" has also had his screen success, this through the medium of the "Stingaree" series which Kalem adapted from his published short stories. When the film company decided on its policy of securing stories from a list of prominent authors, one of the first moves was to induce Mr. Hornung to consent to write a series of original stories for the screen. Then Kalem went a step further and prevailed on him to make these stories a series of new "Stingaree" adventures and they have proved immensely popular.

Mr. Lang is accompanied on his trip West by Frank Howard Clark, the scenario writer, and a member of the Kalem staff. At three points in his cross country journey Mr. Lang will stop over for conferences with prominent writers.

Phil Lang is recognized as one of the most valued scenario executives in the motion picture field. With a newspaper and theatrical training that well befitted him for the work, he entered the screen ranks some years ago with the Kalem organization. Equipped with a thorough knowledge of film producing he is credited with contributing much to the development of the present day technique of screen writing. To Mr. Lang is due in large measure the "perfect continuity" of Kalem productions, which have been recognized by film men as a model in this respect. In co-operating with writers of fiction and bringing them to a realization of the peculiar demands of the screen, he has been unusually successful.

Not the least important benefit to follow from the transferring of Mr. Lang and Mr. Clark to California, will be the advantage of their working in close touch and co-operation with the producers of "The Girl from 'Frisco," "The Hazards of Helen" and the "Ham Comedies" pictures, at present being staged at Kalem's Glendale and Hollywood studios.

In discussing the latest move of the Kalem Company with a NEWS representative Mr. Wright, of that company, declared, "This is only the first of a series of surprises that Kalem can promise you. We believe that we have for some time been showing the way in the securing of real stories for motion pictures. And this notwithstanding the fact that we are specializing in one and two reelers, while many producers of long pictures who claim a monopoly of all the film virtues are still attempting to get by with the hackneyed, time-worn plots of mediocre writers, who are always in the ascendant.

"While we are not yet ready to announce further names, it is sufficient to say that our 'contributing author department' will be modeled after the plan of the big magazines which secure the services of specialists in various lines as 'contributing editors.' No limit will be placed on expense in securing the work of the authors whom we want, and when the next months bring the complete announcements of our producing plans we believe you will agree with us in our statement that we are showing the way. We are doing this to prove to exhibitors as we have been doing with our productions, that it is quality and drawing power that count.

Heavy Sales Made Before Goods Are Shown

New Procession of Stage and Film Stars Featured in Modern Fiction Classics Will Get Novel Advertising Wherever Locally Booked

THE plan of operation of the Art Dramas, Inc., contemplates the elimination of the profits of the central exchange, inasmuch as the company is owned directly by its producing factors.

Speaking of the progress of the new organization since its inception a few months ago, one of the officials of the company said:

"I have never seen such unanimity of opinion among the exchange men as exists in the Art Dramas proposition. As is well known, the greater part of the territory for the distribution of our pictures was sold before any public announcement was made concerning the formation of the company. The few states that had not been sold before the announcement were quickly purchased. As a result of the wide latitude which rested with us for our choice of distributors, we have secured as our representatives in the various territories a group of the foremost exchange people in the country.

"The widespread desire of the exchanges to distribute Art Dramas pictures is a criterion of the manner in which the exhibitors in general will greet our productions. There is nobody closer to the exhibitor and nobody has a better knowledge of his needs and desires than the man who is actually on the ground and comes in daily contact with him.

"Evidently the names of our producers and their past records of successful picture making were strong enough to sell our product even before we had announced the names of our featured players and stories.

"Since the announcement of our first four releases our exchange representatives have advised us of the great number of inquiries and advance bookings they have received from the exhibitors in their territories. Our first release, "The Lash of Destiny," featuring Gertrude McCoy, was manufactured by the Van Dyke Film Corporation. The release date of this production has been set for December 14.

"On the week following, the U. S. Amusement Corporation production "Whoso Findeth a Wife," featuring Jean Sothern, will be released. In addition to a strong story picturized from a well-known novel, which was written in answer to Hall Caine's "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," this production will carry with it the advantage of a national publicity campaign inaugurated by the McCauley Company, who published the original book. This advertising campaign will be tied up with the local showings in every town for the mutual benefit of both the bookseller and the exhibitor.

"Our third release will be founded on "The Rainbow," in which Henry Miller and Ruth Chatterton achieved success.

IN AND OUT OF TOWN

Fred S. Meyer, who has resigned as manager of the Minneapolis Universal exchange is in New York, stopping at the McAlpin. Mr. Meyer has no future plans as yet and wishes the report that he is to enter the state rights business denied. He will probably continue in the regular service exchange line. Mr. Meyer says that Minneapolis is the third largest exchange center in the country, coming after New York and Chicago, with thirty-four exchanges.

John R. Freuler came on to New York from Chicago last week on special business.

SUNDAY AGITATION IN OHIO AGAIN

The Men's Bible Class of the First Presbyterian Church, Middletown, Ohio, is trying to enlist residents of that city in a campaign to stop Sunday motion picture shows. A committee has been appointed to start the movement.

WONDERS RESIGNS FROM MANAGEMENT OF WALBROOK THEATRE, BALTIMORE

Solon Wonders has resigned as manager of the Walbrook theatre, Baltimore, one of the largest motion picture houses in Baltimore, and will go to Cleveland, Ohio, to visit his family. Mr. Wonders does not intend to enter into business in Cleveland as he will make the trip for the purpose of taking a much needed rest.

In addition to being a well known motion picture exhibitor, Mr. Wonders was for many years proprietor and manager of several baseball teams in the State of Pennsylvania.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION IS "SAFETY FIRST" ADVOCATE

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has received communications from Darwin P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Company and head of the Safety First Federation of America, noting the activities of the industry for the safeguarding of the 20,000,000 persons who daily attend motion picture shows. As a result the following Fire Prevention Regulation committee of the National Association, with Jesse L. Lasky as chairman, has been made up:

J. E. Brulatour, Eastern Films, New York; Wm. L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation, N. Y.; S. H. Trigger, Tremont theatre, New York; L. L. Levine, Regent theatre Brooklyn; Alfred Ramberger, Chicago, Ill.; A. S. Le Vino, Arrow Film Corporation, Morris Choynski, N. P. E. L., Chicago; Judge A. P. Tugwell, Los Angeles; Thomas Furniss, Duluth, Minn.; Flintom, manager Kansas City Paramount Picture Co., Kansas City; S. A. Lynch, of Atlanta, Ga., and Asheville, N. C.; Ernest Herstmann, Boston, Mass.; Stanley Mastbaum, Philadelphia; Guy Wonders, Baltimore, Md.; C. W. Deming, John A. Eckert Company; J. H. Hallberg, New York; Charles Martyne Biscay, secretary and treasurer of the "Insurance Press"; A. C. Curruthers, second vice-president of the Safety Engineering, New York; L. S. Skerrett, general manager Nicholas Power Company, New York; J. F. Ancona, Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y.; William Sistrom, Universal Film Co., N. Y.

New Comedy Program Promised for New Year

First Authentic Information of Latest Venture of the Fox Folks Gives Directors' and Players' Names and Interesting Release Information

WILLIAM FOX anounces the release of one two-reel comedy each week beginning January first.

This is the first important production policy change to be announced for the coming year by Fox. It means that the Fox Film Corporation, which has heretofore produced and released only five-reel dramatic photoplays, is now to release in addition a weekly comedy feature.

Foxfilm Comedies, the new pictures have been christened. They are not to be released on the regular program, but are available to any exhibitor, anywhere.

Several months ago, reports of this firm's comedy plans gained circulation throughout the motion picture world. No word concerning the project was forthcoming from the executive offices, but at Los Angeles, Cal., the work proceeded steadily. Screen comedians of known ability were gathered together, and six producing companies were organized.

Up to the present fifteen two-reel comedies have been completed. All these will not reach the public, however, as Mr. Fox has gone about his new project in such a manner as to enable him to select for the forthcoming fifty-two releases, only those comedies which convince him they are sure-fire laugh producers.

Already Foxfilm Comedies represent an investment of considerably over half a million dollars. This financial outlay will be increased in order to meet the requirements specified for the new venture.

The staff of comedy directors includes Charles Parrott, Walter C. Reed and Harry Edwards.

In the list of players are: Hank Mann, Charles Arling, Martin Kinney, Frank Alexander, Joe Lee, Lee Morris, Harry M. O'Connor, William Hauber, "Smiling Billy" Mason, Anna Luther, Carmen Phillips, Amy Jerome, Annette De Foe, Caroline Rankin and Elsie Greeson.

The first release is entitled "Social Pirates." It was directed by Mr. Reed. The featured comedian is Charles Arling and foremost in the supporting cast are Amy Jerome and Annette De Foe.

An early release will feature Anna Luther, who has already won fame as a Fox dramatic star. Following soon afterwards will be something new in screen comedies—a burlesque of a well-known photoplay which has gained much fame on the Fox program. The featured players in this release will be Hank Mann and Carmen Phillips.

"Comedies have become a necessary part of every motion picture exhibitor's program and are eagerly booked by vaudeville houses as well," said Mr. Fox. "The exhibitor must offer a comedy to round out his program properly.

"The development of motion picture production has been practically all along the lines of five-reel features, or even larger. Comedy production has been allowed to go on in the best way it can.

"In presenting Foxfilm Comedies we have selected nothing but the best of all our companies have produced. Nothing but the highest quality will be released. We will make the best comedies on the market, or we will stop making them altogether.

"Although the comedies will be produced, released and advertised independent of the regular dramatic productions, they will be handled by the branch offices of the Fox Film Corporation all over the world."

Foxfilm Comedies will be released in the United States and Canada January 1, 1917. The release date for Europe and Australia has been set as March 1.

BELLE BRUCE IN BUSHMAN-BAYNE SERIAL

In the cast of the new fourteen episode Metro-Quality serial, starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, will be found Belle Bruce, who played the part of the authoress in search of thrills in the five-part Bushman and Bayne photoplay, "In the Diplomatic Service." Miss Bruce will have a thoroughly congenial role in the serial. She is to be seen as a worldly woman having a keen sense of humor, who is familiarly called "Her Silkylets."

MILWAUKEE CENSORS RATHER TARDY IN ACTING

The local censor board of Milwaukee, Wis., came to grief recently. According to its ruling, no theatre can discriminate as to whom it will admit to see a picture it has passed. Otto Meister's Vaudette put on "Is Any Girl Safe?" and the first part of the week allowed women only to see it while the last part he made the showing exclusively for men.

The board objected rather strenuously to this procedure on Mr. Meister's part and took the matter up with Mayor Hoan. While this was going on Mr. Meister continued to show the picture and by the time the usual amount of red tape had been unwound the picture had left town. A further threat on the Mayor's part to revoke the license proved unavailing as the Vaudette theatre was formally closed to make way for a new building following the Saturday night's performance of "Is Any Girl Safe?"

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION WILL MEET ON NOVEMBER 29

The Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will meet in the New York offices, 805-6 Times building, November 29, to consider a very large number of subjects which have been called to its attention by the Executive Committee. The meeting will bring to New York big motion picture men from every part of the country.

Judge A. P. Tugwell will make the trip from Los Angeles, especially to attend the meeting; Charles E. Phillips, a Milwaukee exhibitor; Peter J. Jeup, an exhibitor from Detroit; Thomas Furniss of Duluth; Maurice A. Choynski, of Chicago; Frank A. Rembusch, from Shelbyville, Ind.; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburgh, Pa.; the other members of the Board are in New York.

MASTBAUM AND SMITH PURCHASE SELZNICK EXCHANGE IN PHILADELPHIA

It is reported on the best authority that W. E. Smith, president of the Famous Players Exchange, Philadelphia, and Stanley Mastbaum, film magnate, and head of the several Stanley Companies, have purchased the Philadelphia exchange of Selznick pictures.

It is expected that all Selznick pictures, will, following the "Common Law" have their initial runs at the Stanley theatre.

This picture by the way is already on the road to a successful Pennsylvania career. It broke all records during its week's run at the Stanley theatre. It is now running a whole week at the Palace, another Stanley house.

PATHE OFFERS "THE CHALLENGE," A WOODS PLAY

A. H. Woods' stage success, "The Challenge," has been adapted for the films by Pathe, and will be released as a Gold Rooster play. Edward Charles Carpenter, who wrote "The Cinderella Man" is the author. Donald Mackenzie, of Astra, directed the picture. The cast includes Charles Gotthold, Montague Love and Helen Chadwick. Messrs. Gotthold and Love are on the speaking stage.

Directors to Give Ball for Actors' Hospital Fund

Receipts of Thanksgiving Grand Ball of Motion Picture Directors' Association Will Be Used to Buy Hospital Beds—Grand March Is Eliminated

MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION'S annual ball, to be given at the Rose Room of Hotel Alexandria the night of Thanksgiving, for the purpose of raising funds to endow beds at hospitals in that city, where people of the motion picture industry will be cared for, will have a unique feature in the way of music.

Victor Schertzinger has promised the directors he will lead the orchestra for several of the dance numbers, and besides has written two selections, a one-step and a waltz especially for this occasion. The two compositions will be given to the association, so that the organization may have them published, and thus raise additional funds for their charity work.

Another feature of the event is that there will be no grand march, and formalities will be forgotten. A majority of the members of the association are planning the filming of a burlesque dealing with the trials the directors have. This film will be shown at the ball, and thus make plain to the players present, just what it is that gets the directors' "goat."

The ball promises to be a far greater success than the one given last year, and already the maximum number of tickets have been disposed of. There is a constantly growing demand.

"Film Burlesque" Is a Successful Novelty

"WHERE D'YE GET THAT STUFF?" which is the first film to be released by the Argosy Films, Inc., seems to have departed from the usual humorous picture. Its manufacturers claim that it is the first attempt to put burlesque on the screen.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" was projected at the Stanley theatre, New York, and was accorded a good reception. In order to give it a thorough test it was projected at the North Star theatre, Fifth avenue and 107th street, before an audience of nearly two thousand. This is a typical neighborhood playhouse, and the verdict of its patrons can accordingly be taken as important.

Mr. Levine, manager of the North Star theatre declared that the film was one of the most amusing that had ever been projected on his screen.

"Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" is described by its producers as "the craziest picture ever filmed. This celluloid nightmare was written by H. C. Witwe whose stories in the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines have amused thousands, and H. H. Van Loan, who is recognized as the greatest humorist in the film world."

As announced in our issue of last week, "Where D'ye Get That Stuff?" is the first of a series of comedies to be issued by the Argosy Films, Inc., on a states right basis and doubtless will be well received.

Theda to Vamp Again for Fox

THEDA BARA, Gladys Coburn and George Walsh are the stars who appear in the William Fox releases for the first three weeks in December. "The Vixen," released December 4, will mark Miss Bara's return to the vampire role, for which she is famous. Miss Coburn makes her debut in pictures via "The Battle of Life," which is scheduled for December 11. An exciting picture of romance and adventure, starring Walsh, is "The Island of Desire," released on December 18.

Vivian Reed in Selig Fashions

"The Vixen" has Miss Bara as a woman without a conscience, whose first move is to alienate the affections of her sister's sweetheart. When he loses his money she casts him off, and then captivates a second admirer of her sister's, and finally marries him. Returning from abroad, she finds the first man rich again and once more a suitor for her sister's hand. The vampire tries again to win him, but after the denouement she goes back to her husband, chastened. A. H. Van Buren, Herbert Heyes, Mary Martin, George Clarke and Carl Gerard have the supporting parts.

"The Battle of Life" is a truthful representation of conditions of today. A well-selected cast aids Miss Coburn in presenting the story forcefully and includes such known players as Art Acord, William Sheer, Frank Evans, Richard Neill, Alex Shannon and Violet de Biccari.

"The Island of Desire" is a thrilling tale of the desert-island-three-men-and-a-woman type, and has an erupting volcano and an earthquake as its big scenes. Otis Turner produced the picture, with a supporting cast including Herschel Mayall, William Burress, Margaret Gibson, William Clifford, Anna Luther and Hector Sarno.

PUBLIC IMPATIENT FOR WARDE'S "KING LEAR"

Club-women throughout the United States are taking great interest in the Thanhouser production of "King Lear," starring Frederick Warde, which is to be released through the Pathe exchanges on December 17.

Mr. Warde has received many letters from Shakespeare clubs, asking when and how they can see "King Lear." Exhibitors have applied at the Pathe exchanges, asking regarding the release date, many of them stating that scores of their patrons have heard about Mr. Warde's "King Lear," and are asking when it is to be shown.

Mr. Warde's "Silas Marner" was such a success that all persons who saw him in that production are eager to see his "Lear."

ACTOR IS "MEANEST HUSBAND"

John Maurice Sullivan has been engaged to support Madame Petrova in a new Metro-Popular Plays and Players photo-drama written by Anna Steese Richardson. He plays an unsympathetic character, the husband of Lelia Warner, a part played by Madame Petrova.

His screen career was preceded by a number of engagements on the speaking stage, notably with Julia Marlowe, E. H. Sothern, Henrietta Crosman and May Irwin. He played a number of Shakespearean roles, prominent among them Benvolio in "Romeo and Juliet," and Gratiano in "The Merchant of Venice." He has been stock star in several of the important stock companies of the country. He followed James O'Neill in the part of the priest in the road production of "The White Sister." He has appeared in several screen productions, notably in "A Tribute to Mother."

HOBART BOSWORTH INJURED IN SCENE FOR A LASKY PICTURE

Hobart Bosworth was injured the other day while riding in a scene for a forthcoming Lasky Picture in which Mae Murray is to star. Bosworth's right foot was badly crushed when another rider crashed into him as both of them were galloping full tilt toward the camera from widely diverging angles. The impact threw Bosworth and his horse to the ground, the animal rolling on the player's foot and injuring it so seriously that he was confined to his home for several days. Though the injury was a painful one, it is not considered to be serious in its results, and there is every reason to believe that Bosworth will be able to continue with his role in this Paramount Picture.

PRODUCER INJURED BUT WON'T QUIT

Director Ivan Abramson, of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has started work on his new picture, "Enlighten Thy Daughter," and the other day went with his crew to take some exteriors on the cliff near the Palisades.

He had to climb about 400 feet to the point, and when he reached there rolled from his high perch.

After being treated by a physician Mr. Abramson refused to quit, but continued to film his story.

Blackton Supervises Every Production—He Starts with Script and Follows Production Through to Release Dates

TODAY the Greater Vitagraph organization, with its ally, Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, the releasing corporation, stands vindicated in the eyes of every exhibitor in the country. It has more than made good its pledges of "better and better pictures."

Each production, as it is reviewed by the critics, seems to earn more liberal praise. In theme and treatment these Blue Ribbon features have not only passed the test of merit, but the greater test of proven box-office value. Undoubtedly the biggest factor in their hearty reception has been the extreme care lavished upon each production from its very inception in scenario form.

To Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, producing genius, belongs the credit in a large measure for Greater Vitagraph's success as a complete producing and distributing unit. His ideas are expressed first in the form and continuity of the scenario. With Colonel Brady, head of the scenario department, he takes up each script assigned to a director and considers it scene by scene.

It is also quite a common sight to see Commodore Blackton enter one of the five studios of the Eastern plant, and by suggesting a particular light effect or an artistic addition to the setting add much to the scene under way.

When a production is cast Commodore Blackton is always consulted; having grown up with the business and having seen the work of the various stock members, he knows to a nicety the type of parts that each one can best play. Very often a substitution is made at his suggestion that greatly improves the dramatis personae of the picture.

Commodore Blackton is a man of tremendous achievements. During the taking of "The Battle Cry of War," which is going to be a special release through Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, he still found time to write several scripts as well as keep a watchful eye upon all of the productions under way.

Judged solely by "The Battle Cry of Peace," without reference to the tremendously big things he has done in the production of "The Battle Cry of War," J. Stuart Blackton has demonstrated that he possesses the faculty of determining what the public wants, even before the people themselves have awakened to a realization of their desires. "The Battle Cry of Peace" has been one of the most consistent money-making productions for exhibitors that has ever been released. It is quite as popular today as the day it was first shown on Broadway at the Vitagraph theatre. It has earned more rebookings than any other production ever released, and it undoubtedly has done its full share in the awakening of this country to an interest in preparedness. It was "Blackton-Supervised."

Advertising for "Pearl of the Army" Is Striking

Pathe Issues Booklet Containing Displays of All Sizes to Be Put Within the Reach of Exhibitors

IN connection with Pathe's latest serial "Pearl of the Army," a large folder containing proofs of display newspaper advertising for the exhibitor has been issued. The advertisements are arranged in standard newspaper sizes, and range from column cuts to page displays.

In each of the advertisements great stress is laid on the fact that "Pearl of the Army" preaches preparedness. Pearl White, featured player, is played up strong, and her many other serial successes are noted. Ralph Kellard opposite Miss White is mentioned, and attention called to his performance in "The Shielding Shadow."

Charles G. Ross, Canada Film Company

The reading matter in fact dwells on every advertising possibility in the serial, including the fact that it was produced by Astra, and directed by Edward Jose. One of the large displays contains its printed matter in the center, and is bordered on either side by sketches of thrills that will be seen in the pictures. These should go a long way in awakening the reader's interest.

The first four pages of the book contain blank spaces, which it is announced "will contain advertisements of a startling nature that will arouse such intense interest that 'Pearl of the Army' will be a household word from coast to coast before release." Each of the advertisements contains space for any additional matter which the exhibitor may care to insert.

"LUMBERLANDS" IS HEAVILY BOOKED IN OMAHA

A. Chapman, formerly with the World exchange in Omaha, Nebraska, and now manager of the serial department for the Mutual Film Corporation in Omaha, declares his territory welcomed with open arms the coming of Helen Holmes in "Lass of the Lumberlands." Manager Getzler of the exchange accompanied Chapman on a trip to Lincoln—Getzler's first trip into the Omaha territory, but certainly not his last.

"SIN YE DO" NOT KEENAN'S LAST FOR INCE

The reports current to the effect that "The Sin Ye Do" is the last picture that Frank Keenan did at the Ince studios have called forth the following letter from Mr. Keenan himself:

"November 22, 1916.

"DEAR SIR: The daily and trade press has fallen into an error in the statement that the present release, 'The Sin Ye Do,' is my last release at the Rialto theatre. While it is true that my contract with the Triangle has not been renewed, two subsequent films were taken at Los Angeles, and they will, in due course, find their way to the stage of the Rialto and other playhouses enjoying this service. 'His Slave' and 'The Crab' will surely be received as representative of the best work I have done under the competent Triangle direction. This correction is due to the Triangle as well as myself.

"Yours truly,

"(Signed) FRANK KEENAN."

METRO-BARRYMORE PICTURE RELEASED DECEMBER 18

Metro Pictures Corporation announces December 18 as the release date of the screen version of Margaret Deland's great novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie," with Ethel Barrymore, in the role of Helena. The picturization has been made by arrangement with Messrs. Harper and Bros., publishers of the book. The production was directed by John W. Noble for Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.

Robert Cummings has the part of Lloyd Pryor, the selfish lover. Little Maury Steuart has the role of David; Dr. Lavendar is played by J. A. Furey, well-known on the legitimate stage; Hassan Mussalli plays the young poet, hopelessly in love with Helena; Robert Whittier is the dissolute Richie. Others in the cast are Frank Montgomery, Hattie Delaro, Mary Asquith, William Williams and Charles Goodrich.

FOX PLAYER RETURNS AND GOES WITH JUNE CAPRICE

Frank Morgan, formerly of the Vitagraph Company, has been engaged by William Fox to play opposite Miss Caprice in her new picture.

Others in the cast will be Grace Stevens, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Margaret Prendergast and Tom Brooke.

Florence Auer wrote the script.

The last Fox photoplay in which Stanhope Wheatcroft appeared was "Under Two Flags." Mr. Wheatcroft also played in "The Little Gypsy," "East Lynne" and "Sins of Men."

SEX PICTURE WIDELY SHOWN WITHOUT PROTESTS USUAL

Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has arranged to book "The Sex Lure," their recent release upon the entire F. F. Proctor Circuit, showing this picture at the following theatres:

Proctor's at Albany, Schenectady, Yonkers, Newark, Elizabeth.

New York City: Fifty-eight Street, Twenty-third Street, 125th Street, and Fifth Avenue.

Technicolor Laboratory Car Goes South

Elaborately Equipped Pullman Proceeds to Jacksonville, Where a Natural Color Drama Will Be Produced—Distribution to Be Similar to That of "Intolerance"

A SPECIALLY constructed Pullman car, containing a dark room, a developing plant and business offices, left New York at ten o'clock Sunday night for Jacksonville, Fla., where it will be used as a laboratory by the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation, whose purpose is to reproduce natural colors on film. At a luncheon given members of the trade press by C. A. Willat last Friday, the purposes of the new concern were outlined and a brief description of the technicolor process was read.

The technicolor process differs radically from present natural color processes, notably the Kinemacolor, and basic patents have been granted. The inventors of the process are all graduates of the Boston Institute of Technology.

The special laboratory car was equipped under the supervision of C. A. Willat, who has had long experience in the technical departments of the industry.

Mr. Willat announced that no stock was for sale in the Technicolor Company; that all of the money necessary had been furnished by Boston financiers, where the process was developed.

It is not the intention of the Technicolor Motion Picture Corporation to release pictures through ordinary channels. A special attachment for the projection machine is required in theatres, so that an ordinary machine cannot be used. Until the process is given a suitable national recognition, no attempt will be made to introduce the films broadcast. Mr. Willat is confident that technicolor films will eventually supplant black and white, but for the time being the color features will be presented in large theatres on much the same scale as "Intolerance."

No samples of technicolor work will be shown until a drama is completed in Jacksonville. That will probably occur in February. Mr. Willat said that the process had no limitations. Close-ups, fade-outs and the usual tricks of photography are complished with ease, marking a new development in color pictures.

F. E. Backer Controls "The Libertine"

Is Conducting an Extensive Advertising Campaign in New York, New Jersey and New England

F. E. BACKER is offering his latest feature, "The Libertine," produced by Julius Steger and Jos. A. Golden, featuring John Mason and Alma Hanlon. He has started an extensive advertising campaign in New York, New Jersey and New England.

"The Libertine" is a story of modern life. It contains the lesson that "once in every man and woman's life comes the moment to decide, in the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side."

The heroine, a young girl, pure and lovely, who is the main support of her widowed mother, is engaged to marry a clean, wholesome young man who has been her childhood sweetheart.

Her path is crossed by the modern libertine, the man who "can afford to play the game." A thoroughly depraved society is always ready to make a favorite of the libertine, who defiles pure womanhood, while his victims bear the burden of shame alone.

A delightful finish concludes the story, bringing close to the hearts of the audience a powerful and timely moral.

STUDIO AND ALL REQUIREMENTS GIVEN NEWEST ACTOR

Plans have been practically completed for Max Linder to launch into the production of his first comedy at Essanay. President Spoor of that organization has ordered that nothing be left undone to provide unlimited facilities for the noted European comedian. One of the big studios at the Essanay plant has been set aside exclusively for his use. A company is being formed solely as his support. A competent staff of scenic artists, wardrobe designers and property men have been secured for him. Max will be "king" on this floor.

Before the month is ended, probably, Linder, for the first time, will be enacting his comical escapades before an American camera.

BLOOD TRANSFUSION ON BATTLEFIELD IS SEEN IN NEW PETROVA PLAY

Blood transfusion is one of the themes of "The Black Butterfly," the Metro-Popular Plays and Players photodrama starring Mme. Petrova, which will be released December 4. Director Burton L. King obtained for this part of his picture the services of a prominent New York physician, who gave his assistance only on condition that his name be withheld. The doctor himself went through the proper procedure before the camera.

The operation of blood transfusion has an important bearing on the story.

METRO ENGAGES THREE NEW SCENARIO WRITERS

Following out its policy of developing motion pictures to the highest artistic degree and at the same time meeting popular demands for photoplays, the Metro Pictures Corporation is taking steps to place on its staff the most brilliant scenario writers in the profession.

Only recently three writers of prominence were added to the Metro forces, and negotiations are under way for securing several more. The three are Katherine Kavanaugh, Charles A. Logue and Joseph F. Poland. They now are at work in the Rolfe studios, where Ethel Barrymore, Mabel Taliaferro, Viola Dana, Lionel Barrymore, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Julius Steger and other noted stars are appearing in plays under the supervision of such men as Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Rolfe and Columbia studios; Harry O. Hoyt, director of scenarios; John W. Noble, who with Francis X. Bushman directed the magnificent Metro production of "Romeo and Juliet;" John H. Collins, George D. Baker, David Thompson, Edwin Carewe and Eugene Nowland.

A unique distinction was accorded the Pallas production, "Davy Crockett," of which Dustin Farnum is the star, when it was chosen as the only motion picture to be shown at the recent convention of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs at the Powers Hotel in Rochester.

The audience, which crowded the ballroom of the Powers Hotel to capacity, was composed of delegates who represented more than 300,000 women. The picture was accompanied by an orchestra which played the music score furnished by the Paramount Pictures Corporation for all features, and the performance won the hearty applause of all those present.

This is the first time in the history of the organization that an entire evening has been given over to the showing of one picture.

PICKFORD PLAYERS RETURN TO MARBLEHEAD

After two weeks' activities at the Fort Lee studios, Mary Pickford and her supporting cast in "The Pride of the Clan," the forthcoming Artcraft release, have again returned to Marblehead, Mass., to retake several exteriors as a result of the recent accident which befell the company when the old fishing schooner sunk during the taking of an ocean scene.

Two cameras were lost in the wreck, together with many feet of film.

"CIVILIZATION" IN PORTO RICO

The Harper Film Corporation, of which Mr. J. Parker Read, Jr., is general manager, has appointed Mr. Morgan Robertson its representative in Porto Rico, for the purpose of there handling "Civilization," the Thomas H. Ince spectacle. Mr. Robertson will arrive in Porto Rico on December 10.

Two Plays Completed by Fox

TWO new photoplays were completed last week in William Fox's Eastern studios, by June Caprice and Virginia Pearson. On the West Coast, Gladys Brockwell has finished her work for Director Frank Lloyd, and has commenced on another production with Richard Stanton.

Mr. Stanton filmed "The Beast," and directed the picture featuring Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale.

Under the direction of James Vincent, Virginia Pearson has already started on her seventh William Fox photodrama. Valeska Suratt's sixth feature was put in work by Kenean Buel, who made all the Pearson subjects for Mr. Fox except "A Tortured Heart."

June Caprice is also before the camera, after a brief respite. Playing opposite her is Frank Morgan, formerly with the Vitagraph Company, whom William Fox has just engaged.

Others in the cast will be Grace Stevens, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Margaret Prendergast and Tom Brooke. Florence Auer, author of many motion picture scenarios, wrote the 'script.

Olonova (Consolidated)

Stanhope Wheatcroft has been in several Fox films. His last appearance was in "Under Two Flags," in which he portrayed Berkeley Cecil. Before that, he was in "East Lynne," "Sins of Men" and "The Little Gypsy."

A small part in the Caprice subject goes to Flick, a beautiful yellow angora cat, which a New Orleans fan sent to the William Fox star, with the request that it be used in a photoplay, if possible.

Flick will have to give an exceptionally fine performance to outdo that of Don, George Walsh's dog, who sets a new mark for canine intelligence in the movies, in "The Island of Desire."

This is Mr. Walsh's newest starring vehicle, a story of romance resulting from exciting adventures in a South Sea pearl hunt. The picture moves as rapidly as any production released this year, and the cast, plot, photography, acting and direction are all superb.

Besides Mr. Walsh, the photoplay has Anna Luther, Margaret Gibson, Herschel Mayall, William Burress, Willard Louis, Hector Sarno and Samuel Searles. Otis Turner screened it.

Miss Gibson, who has had leads for many companies, makes her first appearance in Fox Films.

The release date of "The Island of Desire" has been set for December 18.

Theda Bara in "The Vixen," on December 4, is William Fox's first December photoplay. "The Vixen" marks Miss Bara's return to the vampire role for which she is famed. As Elsie Drummond, she has the part of a woman wholly without conscience.

The supporting cast includes A. H. Van Buren, Herbert Heyes, Mary Martin, George Clarke and Carl Gerard. Miss Martin has the role of an unmarried woman for the first time in her long movie career.

A six room set was erected by the scene men in the William Fox studios at Fort Lee for the Drummond's home, which is ideally constructed for a perfect rendition of this fascinating drama.

Following "The Vixen," William Fox announces Gladys Coburn in "The Battle of Life," for the week of December 11.

AFTER THE STORM—"ROBINSON CRUSOE" ALL READY

Moving picture producers have spent thousands of dollars waiting for storms to pass by, but George Marion who directed the five-part photoplay, "Robinson Crusoe," for Henry W. Savage will tell you that even this loss of money is nothing compared to the anxiety of waiting for a tropical storm to decide to come your way. Never did a community visited by a draught send up more fervent prayers for a shower than did the Savage company waiting down in Florida for a storm that would screen well without a makeup.

It finally came and the cameraman took closeups, long shots and every other kind of pictures of the elements in all their fury. Robinson Crusoe himself couldn't have ordered a better atmospheric disturbance, and though fashions in storms have changed considerably since his day the exhibitors who have seen the picture say that this is the style de luxe in modern photoplays.

The release of "Robinson Crusoe" is handled solely on a states rights basis.

Through an arrangement with Mr. Savage the states rights are to be marketed by Warner Brothers, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

LOOKS AT NEW YORK AND THEN SPEEDS CHICAGOWARD

D. W. Griffith's first visit to New York, since "Intolerance" opened at the Liberty theatre, was a brief one, for on Tuesday last he departed for Chicago to overlook the preparations being made there for the engagement of his big spectacle at the Colonial theatre, the commencement of which is scheduled for Tuesday evening, November 28.

This Middle West organization will be the fifth one in the field. The San Francisco and Los Angeles companies, as well as the New York one, still continue their wonderfully successful runs, the company appearing in the smaller California cities is making a record for earning powers.

Philadelphia and Pittsburgh will be the next stands to see this stupendous play, arrangements having been completed for it to appear in both cities during the month of January.

"Intolerance" at the Liberty theatre reached its 150th performance this week.

UNITY WELL REPRESENTED AT THE BOSTON BALL

In addition to Mr. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, and Mrs. Cobe, Margaret Gale and Eric Mayne, who are featured in "The Yellow Menace," went up to the Movie Ball in Boston last week, as the guests of the Eastern Feature Film Exchange, who are handling "The Yellow Menace" in the New England states, and the Boston Herald who is publishing the story.

Miss Gale appeared at the Boston theatre, and described to the audience many of the thrills which come to a star during the making of a big serial picture.

Mr. Cobe spent a good deal of time visiting the exchange and the exhibitors in Boston.

Mary Pickford, the Center of Her Company, in the Temporary Outdoor Studio at Marblehead, Mass.

Branch Exchanges Wire of Serial Demand

Heavy Advertising and Success of Past Serials by Pathe Brings Flood of Advance Orders for Latest, Soon to Start

WITH the screening of the first three episodes of "Pearl of the Army," Pathe's military-mystery serial, released December 3, twenty-one of Pathe's thirty branches have wired orders for additional prints to meet the demand. For the first time in the history of motion picture serials it has also been found necessary to reorder advertising material in advance of the release, the usual supply having been quickly exhausted. Though "The Shielding Shadow" has broken all previous records for bookings and business done the advance bookings of "Pearl of the Army," are even greater.

The number of exhibitors who booked "Pearl of the Army" is particularly gratifying to J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe exchange, who announced his intention of making this serial the greatest ever produced by Pathe. According to C. R. Seelye, business manager, "Pearl of the Army" will be shown in more houses, better theatres, for longer runs than any previous serial.

Although released in December, "Pearl of the Army" is included in Pathe's five million dollar serial program for 1917. It is based on the experience gained in making twelve serials and series, beginning with the "Perils of Pauline."

"Pearl of the Army" as it has been adapted for the screen by George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw" and the story by Guy W. McConnell, one of the foremost magazine authors of the day, is fiction founded on facts. It is a story with a purpose, a message to the American people. The message is "Preparedness," a virile subject of today.

Vitagraph V-L-S-E Exchanges Willing to Furnish Exhibitors with Cuts of Stars

"WE have just forged another link in the chain of our complete service to exhibitors using Vitagraph productions," states E. Lanning Masters, advertising manager of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, "by supplying each one of our twenty-three exchanges with a complete assortment of coarse and fine-screen cuts of our twenty-two stars.

Gladys Hulette, Pathe and Thanhouser Player

"For the exhibitor who edits his own program and prints it on good paper we have a series of single-column cuts made up in 120 screen. We have also provided thumb-nail cuts suitable for program use. Secondly, one and two-column cuts of twenty-two stars made up in 65 screen suitable for newspaper use are now available for the use of exhibitors. The local exhibitor can make arrangements to secure these cuts of his nearest Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchange absolutely free of charge.

"The list from which Vitagraph exhibitors can select comprises the following players: Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker, Edith Storey, Peggy Hyland, Dorothy Kelly, Mary Anderson, Mary Maurice, Arline Pretty, Alice Joyce, Rose Tapley and Earle Williams."

DOROTHY BERNARD, JACK SHERRILL AND ROBERT CONNESS WILL BE FEATURED ON ART DRAMAS PROGRAM

Dorothy Bernard, Jack Sherrill and Robert Conness have been engaged by the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation to play the leading parts in that company's picturization of "The Rainbow," which served a few years ago as the starring vehicle of Ruth Chatterton and Henry Miller at the Liberty theatre, New York City.

Miss Bernard, Mr. Sherrill and Mr. Conness are well known to the public, Miss Bernard having been featured by the Fox Film Corporation in a number of its photoplays, while Mr. Sherrill is remembered for his impressive work in a number of World Film Company productions, where he was co-starred with Alice Brady and other stars of that company. Mr. Sherrill has also appeared in several of the Frohman Amusement Corporation's successes, notably "The Conquest of Canaan" and "The Witching Hour," in which Mr. Conness was also one of the featured players.

It is interesting to note that Miss Bernard played the leading part in "The Rainbow" when she was the star of the Belasco Stock Company in Washington.

PICKFORD PICTURE MAKES RECORD IN KANSAS CITY

The Artcraft Pictures exchange, Kansas City, Mo., reports unusual business on the initial Mary Pickford-Artcraft subject, "Less Than the Dust." Records are being broken daily at many of the best theatres in that territory that have booked the new Pickford vehicle for from one to three weeks.

The New Grand Central theatre at St. Louis, Mo., has just terminated a three weeks' run and established new records for box-office receipts. Other high class houses, such as the Orpheum at Topeka, Kan., and the Magnet, Lincoln, Neb., have also just finished a remarkable run of one and two weeks with the first Artcraft release.

OCCASIONAL SHADOWGRAPH NOVELTY PROMISED BY GAUMONT

Recognizing that novelty gives added zest to any split reel, the Gaumont Company has announced that it will at intervals replace its Gaumont Kartoon Komic by a Gaumont Shadowgraph. This will be upon the weekly reel, which also contains the scenic series, "See America First." The first of the Shadowgraphs was released some time ago, a burlesque melodrama in black and white, written by Rea Irwin and directed by Harry Palmer. Mr. Palmer, who animates the Gaumont Kartoon Komics, has both written and directed the Shadowgraph, which reaches the screen November 29. This is called "Haystack Horace, a Knight of the Road."

"THE CRISIS" IS SOLD FOR NEW JERSEY

The Master Photoplay Company of Newark, N. J., Fred W. Faulkner, manager is handling "The Spoilers" and "Cabiria" for the state of New Jersey. He promises several novelties in producing "The Crisis" throughout New Jersey.

General Film Program for December Fifth

GENERAL FILM COMPANY announces that on December 5, Essanay will release the initial "Black Cat" feature, "The Egg." Each of these features is a complete story in itself.

Kathlyn Williams is starred in the two-reel Selig production, "The Brand of Cain," which will head the General Film Service releases for the week December 4-9, inclusive. Many of the scenes in this picture were taken while the company was en route to Panama to film the "Ne'er-Do-Well." "Where Is Your Friend?" a one-reel comedy from the Vitagraph studios, will precede the Selig-Tribune and a one-reel drama, "My Baby," reissued by Biograph, featuring Mary Pickford, will close the program for the day.

Richard Travers and Marguerite Clayton will provide the fun in the first "Black Cat" feature comedy, "The Egg." Kalem supplies "Jailbirds," a one-reel comedy, the cast including Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch. "A Bit of Human Driftwood," a Biograph drama in two acts, with Irene Howley, will close the program for Tuesday.

Ben Turpin will be seen in "A Waiting Game," an Essanay one-reel comedy, scheduled for release Wednesday, the 6th, followed by a one-reel Vim comedy. Then will come the eighteenth episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," under the caption, "The Poisoned Dart," featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman.

The offerings for Thursday include the Selig-Tribune and "The Guilty One," a single-reel Vim comedy, featuring Babe Hardy and Kate Price.

A Knickerbocker Star Feature, three-reel drama, will head Friday's program, followed by the eighth adventure of Kalem's "Grant, Police Reporter," with George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby, entitled "The Trunk Mystery." "His Wife's Allowance," a Vitagraph one-reel comedy, in which Corrine Griffith and Carlton Weatherby are starred, precedes "A Rare Boarder," a Vim comedy of the same length, featuring Pokes and Jabbs, both of which are full of rare comedy.

Thomas Commerford and Alice McChesney are featured Saturday, December 9, "A Failure at Fifty," a comedy-drama in three reels. "The Lineman's Peril," an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen Series," featuring Helen Gibson, precedes "The Purchase Price," a one-reel Selig drama, starring Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley.

Ready to Race for Universal Trophy

FORTY-TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY DOLLARS in gold, a $3,000 solid silver cup, known as the Universal Film Trophy, a $1,500 trophy offered by W. D. Johnston, president of the American Lumber and Manufacturing Company, and other prizes form the bait that lures the greatest of world's racing drivers to the Uniontown Speedway's opening on Thanksgiving Day, November 30.

The new 1⅛-mile banked board track will be opened with a 100-lap race, distance 112 miles, and the speed developed should more than astonish the spectators, for never before has this locality seen such high speed made by racing automobiles.

Within a short distance of completion, the new track promises to be the speediest of its sort in the country, and there is little doubt but that the world's records will be smashed for numerous intermediate distances during the race.

With such noteworthy stars in the list as Ralph De Palma, the greatest racing driver Italy ever produced—he who has been mile track champion, road champion and Speedway King—John De Palma, his brother, Hughie Hughes, and others, the meet's success seems assured. Frank Galvin, the famous bicycle champion; Charlie Devlin, the Kansas City millionaire driver; Dave Lewis, and others, will undoubtedly show speed of about 106 miles an hour or maybe better.

"PATRIA," INTERNATIONAL'S NEW SERIAL, ACCORDED A GREAT OVATION

"Patria," the new preparedness serial of the International, in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is starred, was given its first showing on Monday evening, November 20, before a distinguished gathering of almost two thousand persons in the grand ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton.

Practically everyone of prominence in the silent and spoken drama, in art, literary, musical and professional life of the metropolis, were present.

Mrs. Castle, who portrays the role of Patria Channing in the new serial, occupied a box with a party of friends and given a tremendous ovation. She responded with a brief speech in which she told of her preference for motion picture work over dancing, and voiced the opinion of those others present that "Patria" would be proclaimed the most remarkable photoplay serial of all time.

Milton Sills, Warner Oland, Dorothy Green, Allen Murnane, and George Majaroni, who have the principal supporting parts in "Patria" were also present.

WARNER BUYS RIGHTS TO "CRISIS"

H. M. Warner, president of Dispatch Film Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, has purchased from Sherman-Elliott the Selig production, "The Crisis," for the state of New York for $50,000.

Mr. Warner announces that he will open "The Crisis" in a Broadway theatre, beginning the second week of December, and shortly after that date will send out two companies to the larger cities in the State of New York.

MIDDLE WEST LIKES SERIAL AND FREE AUTOMOBILES

Spencer G. Sladdin, general representative of Consolidated Film Corporation has just returned from a four weeks' tour of the United States in the interests of "The Crimson Stain Mystery." Mr. Sladdin's itinerary included Chicago, Kansas City, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, Dallas, etc.

The serial is doing a wonderful business according to Mr. Sladdin. In the cities he has visited, he paid especial attention to the smaller exhibitors and found complete satisfaction. Aside from the picture itself, Mr. Sladdin found that considerable interest was manifested in the automobile contest in which thirteen Overland 85—6s are being given away in connection with the presentation of the serial.

EXHIBITORS CAN BE PLACED ON MAILING LIST FOR BULLETIN OF GAUMONT SINGLE-REEL RELEASES

The Gaumont Company is distributing through the sixty-eight branches of the Mutual Film Corporation, a weekly bulletin of its single-reel releases. These will be mailed the same day they are printed, however, to all exhibitors sending their name and address to the Gaumont Company, Flushing, N. Y. Kept on file they are useful for reference when patrons desire a particular program, and they also are valuable in writing newspaper notices and program notes.

Powell and Freuler Announce Amalgamation

New Stars in Noted Novels to Add to Prestige of Head of Own Producing Organization and Mutual President

FRANK POWELL has placed under contract for a series of pictures, Nance O'Neil, one of the most gifted stage stars in this country. She will be presented in a series of feature pictures produced under Mr. Powell's own direction.

The pictures made by Mr. Powell will be distributed through the Mutual Film Corporation, but the Frank Powell Producing Corporation will be a distinct organization and maintain offices in the Times Building.

Miss O'Neil will first be presented in a picturization of "Mrs. Balfame," by Gertrude Atherton, and the first of Mrs. Atherton's novels which this famous author has allowed to be picturized. The fact that Miss O'Neil is considered by Mrs. Atherton the one actress in America particularly suited for the portrayal of "Mrs. Balfame," and the fact that she was familiar with Mr. Powell's ability as a director, led her finally to consent to the picturization of her book.

Miss Rambeau, who makes her screen debut under Mr. Powell's direction, has received wide recognition through her performance in "Cheating Cheaters," current at the Eltinge theatre, New York.

She will first be seen in a picturization of "The Greater Woman," a play by Algeron Boyesen, which offers Miss Rambeau a role rich in opportunities for the exercise of those emotional abilities with which she is endowed.

The studio of the Frank Powell Producing Corporation will be located at College Point, Long Island. Mr. Powell has leased for a term of years Donnelly's Grove and pavilions, comprising in all fourteen acres of ground on the water front. This property, which has long been used as a summer resort, lends itself readily for adaptation as a motion picture studio. The building to be used as the studio proper has a working floor space of 16,000 square feet and in addition there are on the property several smaller building which will be utilized as carpenter shops, printing and developing plants, and the like. In the fourteen acres surrounding the main building are a bathing beach, football field, baseball diamond, and other accessories to a summer outing place which will be utilized at various times. A force of men are now at work installing lights and other equipment.

Associated with Mr. Powell in the Frank Powell Producing Corporation will be the same staff that surrounded him with Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

RUNS OF PICTURES PRINTED IN DAILIES

Annoyances which every exhibitor must endure because of the nature of the film business in itself, namely, the constant changing of audience, are being reduced to a minimum in some of the Minneapolis theatres by means of printed schedules. The Garris theatre started the fashion by asking the daily papers to print the schedule of the showings of its films. The beginning of each run is printed and patrons are asked to go as nearly at those hours as possible. Since then other theatres have taken up the idea and as a result in many places the theatre is nearly emptied between runs.

Where a whole section is seated at the same time there is little annoyance due to passing of patrons. The patrons are taking kindly to the idea.

Metro to Release Bushman-Bayne Serial for Xmas

First Episode of "The Great Secret," a Two-Reel Fourteen-Part Serial, Will Be Released December 25—W. Christy Cabanne, Formerly with D. W. Griffith, Will Direct—Story by Madame Fred De Gressac Won Prize

METRO Pictures Corporation announces that, on December 25, it will release, simultaneously through all its exchanges, the first episode of "The Great Secret," the 14-episode dramatic serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starred.

The first episode of "The Great Secret" will be released in three reels. The remaining thirteen chapters will each be two reels long. The opening episode consists of two full reels of dramatic action preceded by a prologue which is little more than half a reel in length. In this prologue all the characters are clearly identified and their motives fully set forth. Thereby the old-fashioned method, which slowed up the action, of "cutting back" to explain characters and motives is wholly done away with.

"The Great Secret" is presented by the Quality Pictures Corporation and produced by the Serial Producing Company. It will be released exclusively through the Metro exchanges in the United States, Canada and Great Britain.

W. Christy Cabanne, for several years chief of staff to D. W. Griffith, and Mr. Griffith's sole directing assistant in "The Birth of a Nation" and "Intolerance" is directing Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in "The Great Secret." Mr. Cabanne, besides acting as Mr. Griffith's right hand man, directed more than 29 five-reel pictures for Majestic, Reliance and Fine Arts, including "The Lamb," in which Douglas Fairbanks made his screen debut, and many other features of equal merit.

As the name rather implies, "The Great Secret" is a mystery serial. But it is above all things a dramatic story. There are "stunts" interspersed throughout its twenty-nine reels. But in every case the "stunt" is incidental to the plot, and not the plot a minor consideration of the "stunt."

The author of "The Great Secret" is Madame Fred De Gressac, whose story won in competition with 176 men writers. Mme. De Gressac is the author of a dozen of the best known stage successes of Klaw & Erlanger, yet "The Great Secret" is her first motion picture plot. Her success, therefore, in having landed the rich prize which becomes the medium of the serial debut of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne is the more notable.

Produced in New York

"The Great Secret" is being produced at the Quality studios, at 645 West 43rd street, New York City. These studios have been rented for the exclusive use of Mr. Bushman, Miss Bayne, Mr. Cabanne and the Serial Producing Company, and have been entirely renovated. The stage floor has been so cleared up that there now are two big stages available with 10,000 square feet of floor space, and more than fifty dressing rooms have been constructed on the second floor. In addition a large scene building and painting shop has been provided on the second floor, under the personal supervision of Will H. Stevens, who was technical director for Selig and Essanay in the old days when a technical director did not dare to call himself that.

All of the business angles of the production of "The Great Secret" are under the personal charge of Simon Fleisher.

Chief of staff to Mr. Cabanne is R. J. Huntington, whom Mr. Cabanne brought on with him from the Pacific Coast. Eugene Thurston is assistant director, and William Filldew, the famous cameraman of the Fine Arts studios, the knight of the crank for "The Great Secret." J. Youngdeer is assisting Mr. Cabanne in the actual scenarioization. Mr. Youngdeer probably has written more motion picture stories that have been produced than any man in America. "Johnny" Weiss, who has been with Metro producing companies for several years, is the outside man for Mr. Cabanne.

Well-Knowns Participate

With Francis X. Bushman playing the role of William Strong and Miss Bayne the part of Beverly Clark, the cast proceeds: Edward J. Connelly is Dr. Zulph, the first lieutenant of The Great Master, which role is filled by F. H. Stanton, Helen Dunbar, who is one of the victims of The Great Master's power, is a trained nurse attending John Clark, the multi-millionaire uncle of Beverly. William Calhoun plays a freelance detective, who is of great aid to Mr. Bushman, as William Strong; Lillian Sullivan is a splendid female detective in Calhoun's employ. Others in the cast are Belle Bruce, Dorothy Haydel, who plays the part of Strong's fiancee in the early part of the story. Mrs. Sue Balfour, Beverly's mother, and Mrs. Mathilde Brundage. Charles Fang, a real Chinaman and an actor of unusual ability, plays valet to Strong. Thomas Blake is a sort of underworld emperor, Charles Ripley is one of his henchmen, and the famous "Tammany" Young a clever stoolpigeon.

The first episode of "The Great Secret" is graced by the appearance of eight American lightweight pugilists: "Kid" Broad, "Jack" Goodman, "Bert" Keyes, "Spike" Robinson, "Jim" Quinn, "Ed" Kelly, "Paddy" Sullivan and Monte Attell. All eight of them have a fight with Bushman in the first episode.

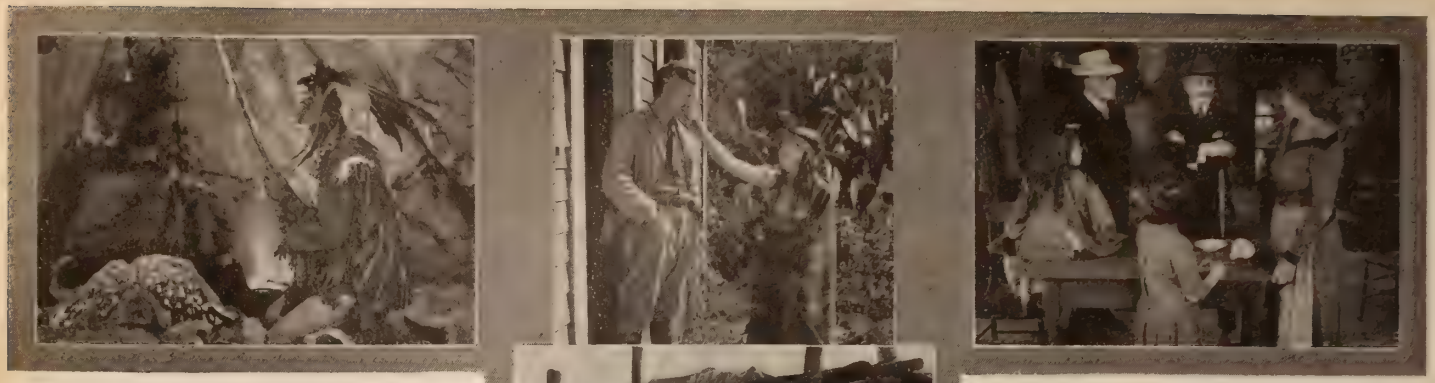
In releasing "The Great Secret" on December 25, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, announces that the serial is "Metro's Christmas present to the motion picture public of the world."

STIELOW PICTURE COUNTED ON BY CONVICTED MAN'S FRIENDS

Argosy Films, Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York, the company which is handling the special production "The Celebrated Stielow Case" is of the opinion that this picture will stimulate sufficient interest in the case of the much-doomed Stielow to warrant or to effect his reprieve.

As is generally known, Stielow was accused of murder last August, and on trial was convicted of murder on circumstantial evidence. He has been close to death on two occasions, one time being all prepared to take his place in the electric chair when a reprieve came.

The Celebrated Stielow Case" is a picture based on the actual facts of the case from notes and data furnished the producers by Sophie Irene Loeb. It is left uncompleted. The production takes the side of Stielow in his fight for liberty.



KUNSKY PLAYS "THE CRISIS"

John H. Kunsky of Detroit, Michigan, opened "The Crisis' on Sunday, November 26, at the Washington theatre, Detroit, to a packed house.

Reports from Detroit state that Mr. Kunsky put the production, "The Crisis" on in a very elaborate manner, considering the short space of time that he had to work out matters of detail. The Detroit papers are very enthusiastic and laudatory in their reviews of the opening performance of "The Crisis."

SHERMAN COMPLETES SALE OF UNITED STATES AND CANADA IN SIX WEEKS

Harry A. Sherman, president of Sherman-Elliott Company, owners of Selig's production, "The Crisis," has completed the sale of all territory in the United States.

The last two deals were completed on November the 24th, whereby H. M. Warner purchased the State of New York, including New York City, for $50,000, and a group of well-known Eastern film men organized the Sherman Releasing Company of Boston, for the exploitation of this production in the New England states. This achievement is unparalleled in the history of state-righting pictures.

It has been just six weeks since Mr. Sherman's New York organization started negotiations for the sale of state rights for "The Crisis," and the fact that he has completed sales totaling half a million dollars, and disposing of every state right in the Union speaks volumes.

Sherman will start showing "The Crisis" in his Western territory on December 24, opening at Minneapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee and Denver. This will make sixteen road companies showing photoplay productions in the largest theatres in the West—eight "Birth of a Nation" Companies; four "Ramona" Companies and four "Crisis" companies.

ROSS PRODUCING COMPANY FORMED BY ROSS AND RICKER

A new producing concern has been organized at San Francisco by Alec. B. Ross and David Swing Ricker, formerly connected with the Chicago Tribune. This will be known as Ross Photoplays, and will be incorporated at an early date, with Mr. Ross as president and director general, and Mr. Ricker as secretary-treasurer and general manager. The name Ross has been given to the company because of Ross' high standing as a director and his wide experience in the producing field. Before coming to America he was for seven years director general of the Pathe Company, and was among the first to produce moving pictures in colors. He was head of the producing concern of Ross & Paul, of London.

"Witching Hour" Shown to Trade at the Strand

Latest Production from Frohman Amusement Will Be Sold to State Righters—To Open in a Broadway House Soon

ON Wednesday, November 22, the Frohman Amusement Corporation exhibited its latest picture "The Witching Hour" at the Strand theatre, New York. The audience was composed almost entirely of those in the trade who vigorously applauded this seven part adaptation of Augustus Thomas' well-known play. Little was said concerning the production previous to the showing, and it is not stretching the point at all to say everyone present was pleasantly surprised.

Mr. Sherrill, president of the company despite offers from various programs including concerns who release only special feature productions, stuck to his original decision to market "The Witching Hour" on a states rights basis as was the case with "The Conquest of Canaan." Mr. Sherrill in speaking of this, his latest picture said, "I shall continue to market my productions in this manner regardless of how great an attraction I produce, and this includes 'The Witching Hour.' I will continue along these lines just as long as I am convinced that state right buyers are willing to pay the proper prices.

"'The Witching Hour' is the first of a series of pre-eminent attractions that will have their initial run in New York on Broadway. I believe the day of the hundred dollar motion picture attraction has arrived and have set about to produce just that class of picture with a story away from the beaten path. I was extremely fortunate in securing such a star as C. Aubrey Smith to take the leading role in 'The Witching Hour.' It seems to me as if the play had been written by Mr. Thomas with this actor in mind for principal part. I am encouraged by the comments of the trade in believing that under the direction of George Irving I have produced a true Broadway attraction."

MOSS HAS NOVELTIES FOR HOLIDAY SEASON

Announcement is made by B. S. Moss, concerning a change in the schedule of his one-a-month photoplay policy. Instead of releasing "The Woman Redeemed" on December 1, Mr. Moss will release a big photodrama dealing with a much discussed and popular topic. Stars of international fame will figure in the presentment.

A few of the favored who have witnessed the screening of this subject, contend that it marks the initial appearance on the screen of a subject that will doubtless be followed by many of the same type. However, it seems that Mr. Moss will have a work to be proud of in this production and exhibitors will be afforded a chance to play to capacity business.

PACKARD SPEAKS OF "JIMMIE DALE"

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation is in receipt of a letter from Frank L. Packard, the author of the new 16 episode serial, "Jimmie Dale," alias "The Gray Seal," in which Mr. Packard explains his motives in writing the series which appeared in The People's Magazine. Mr. Packard's letter, which is dated from Lachine, Province of Quebec, Canada, reads, in part, as follows:

"Crime, no matter how scientifically worked out, must in the end pay its own price.

"Jimmie Dale, as I have tried to picture him, never thought an unclean thought, much less did he ever contemplate an unclean or dishonorable act, as his mission was to bring sunshine where there was gloom before, joy where there was sorrow, hope where there was despair. I have tried to make him a combination of Robin Hood and Raffles, and the emancipator Abraham Lincoln. While Jimmie may have erred against the social code, at the same time he had a good purpose in mind.

"I cannot tell you how delighted I am that the lesson I have tried to embody in the 'Jimmie Dale' stories, is now being spread to the millions, who will behold it upon the screen, and perhaps sense some little of what I meant to convey.

"Yours very truly,

(Signed) "FRANK L. PACKARD."

LEVY BUYS RIGHTS TO "CRISIS"

Fred W. Levy, president of Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, Kentucky, purchased Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina rights of "The Crisis" from Sherman-Elliott. Mr. Levy will open at the Mary Anderson theatre in Louisville, Kentucky, the week of December 24; and about the same time in the leading theatre in Indianapolis.

In both places Mr. Levy contemplates big stage settings, an orchestra of twenty-five and a vocalist, also other novelties in the presentation of the Selig drama. He intends sending three of his own companies through the South and the Atlantic Coast states.

Director Convinced That Author Knows Story

Series Bought but Director Thought Characterization Was All Wrong Until Author Ran Down from Canadian Home and Explained Things

HARRY McRAE WEBSTER who is directing the Monmouth Film Corporation series of "Jimmie Dale, alias The Grey Seal," has broken one of his rules in his enthusiasm over the story itself. When this theme came to him he realized the possibilities for sensational filming, but hesitated to engage in producing crime pictures, which he has always avoided.

It was McRae Webster's desire to so alter the characterization of "Jimmie Dale" that he would show no so-called "criminal" traits. Mr. Burnstein, an official of the company took it upon himself to remonstrate with the director but without avail. Finally it was agreed that the author of the original story as it appeared in the People's Magazine be summoned, and Mr. Frank L. Packard was advised.

Leaving him home where "The Miracle Man" and many other masterpieces have been born of his brain, the writer came to New York and laid himself out to prove to Director Webster that "Jimmie Dale" only commits his acts of despoilation upon those who can afford the loss—and to aid the needy. That such a career is not that of a criminal in intent at any rate, even though illegal, is apparently the belief of the author.

That the director was finally convinced that ethically, "Jimmie Dale" is all right is proven by the fact that he has not only produced the serial, but spends all his spare time now, viewing it on the screen. There are sixteen two-reel episodes altogether and the Unicorn Film Service is releasing them starting the fourth of December.

Marguerite Clark to Repeat Her Triumph as "Snow White" Under Winthrop Ames

WHEN Marguerite Clark begins the actual work on the adaptation of "Snow White" in which she is to be starred by the Famous Players Film Company in the Paramount Program Christmas Day, she will be under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, under whose auspices she has already starred in "Little Lady Eileen," "Molly Make-Believe," "Still Waters" and other big successes in which she has appeared within the year.

In addition to the beauty and acknowledged talent of Miss Clark, and the proven directorial genius of Mr. Dawley, to indicate complete success for this production there is the fact that Winthrop Ames, under whose personal direction Miss Clark created a sensation for two years in the stage version of the Grimm Brothers' celebrated fairy tale at the Little theatre, has placed himself at the disposal of the Famous Players at any time that they may desire to consult with him concerning the adaptation.

When he was preparing the stage production of "Snow White," Mr. Ames made exhaustive studies of the story and of the various illustrations of the several editions of the tale from which sketches of the costumes and of the required settings were made. The knowledge thus gained has been proffered to the producers, and the sketches of the scenes, some of which were never used on the stage because the prescribed length of the performance rendered it necessary to eliminate them, have also passed into the hands of Mr. Dawley, and will be used as models for the construction of some of the interior settings for the motion picture adaptation.

Messrs. Dawley and Ames have already held several consultations.

MOSS ANNOUNCES SCHEDULE CHANGE

Announcement is made by B. S. Moss concerning a change in the schedule of his one-a-month policy. Instead of releasing "The Woman Redeemed" on December 1, Mr. Moss will release a photodrama dealing with a much discussed and popular topic. Well-known stars of international fame will participate.

Metro's Most Magnetic Mademoiselles

MAURICE TOURNEUR IS MARY PICKFORD'S NEW DIRECTOR

Maurice Tourneur, who recently won new laurels by saving the life of Mary Pickford, when the old fishing schooner sunk off Marblehead, Mass., has just returned to the Fort Lee studios to finish Miss Pickford's new Artcraft production "The Pride of the Clan." As is often the case with personages connected with the various arts, Maurice Tourneur is an unusually modest man and avoids personal publicity as much as possible. As a result his interesting career is not widely known.

Tourneur the accomplished artist. Tourneur the finished actor. Tourneur the capable stage producer. These were the three reputations achieved by the master-director of Mary Pickford's next production to be released by Artcraft, before he became affiliated with the silent drama.

Despite his success in this field his natural histrionic talents prompted him to forsake the studio for the stage where, in accordance with his method of study, he started at the very beginning in the smallest parts at ninety-five francs a month. For ten years he was affiliated with the speaking stage, the latter part of this time, in the capacity of producer for such famous artists as Andre Antoine and Madame Rejane. During this time Mr. Tourneur traveled considerably.

It was while producing a big play in Paris that Mr. Tourneur was attracted to the screen. Emile Chautard, who is now incidentally a photoplay-producing neighbor to Mr. Tourneur at Fort Lee, at that time extolled the possibilities of the screen to his friend Tourneur, which resulted in the stage producer's forsaking the "legitimate" for the silent drama. Again starting at the beginning as an actor of small parts for Eclair, Paris, Mr. Tourneur studied the new art and soon became a producer. Feeling that there was a greater scope for his activities in the United States, he finally fulfilled a long-felt desire to come to this country, where he has met with unusual success as a result of his presentation of such American hits as "The Wishing Ring," "The Pit," "The Butterfly on the Wheel," "Trilby," and many others.

Fox Disavows Theatre's Attack on President

Announcement Appearing in Program in Connection with "The Honor System," "Improper and Unpatriotic"

IN announcing the forthcoming showing of "The Honor System," W. Patch, manager of the Pitt theatre, Pittsburgh, has made a vicious attack upon President Wilson in his house program.

William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, owners of "The Honor System," both regrets and resents this entirely unwarranted act of Mr. Patch. Mr. Fox wishes it to be understood most definitely that the management of the Pitt theatre has acted with absolutely no authorization from the Fox Film Corporation, and that the photoplay in no way reflects upon the President.

Mr. Fox is sending this statement throughout the United States:

Without the knowledge or sanction of Fox Film Corporation, W. Patch, manager of the Pitt theatre, Pittsburg, has attacked President Wilson in connection with an annoucement of the photoplay production, "The Honor System."

The attack originated with the management of the Pitt theatre, and we take this means of notifying the public that the conduct and policy of the President are in no way connected with "The Honor Hystem" nor have they any bearing on the play.

Fox Film Corporation, owners of "The Honor System," regret that this attack was published by the Pitt theatre in their house program. We consider the announcement unjust, improper and unpatriotic. No act or policy of the President is reflected upon in any scene of "The Honor System."

William Fox, President,
Fox Film Corporation.

Mary Pickford Will Immortalize the Scotch Lass

MARY PICKFORD is completing, under the direction of Maurice Tourneur, an elaborate feature entitled, "The Pride of the Clan." It will be released through Artcraft in a few weeks, according to Al Lichtman, general manager.

In her long career on the screen Miss Pickford has portrayed characters of a number of different nationalities. In "Less Than the Dust," which throughout the United States has created exceptional attention, little Mary appears as a child of India. It's a long way from the banks of the Ganges to the wind blown fields of Scotch heather, but Miss Pickford took the trip, in the interval between "Less Than the Dust" and "The Pride of the Clan."

"The Pride of the Clan" gives Miss Pickford another national role to the several she already has created. In "Hulda From Holland" she was a captivating Dutch girl who came to America and successfully won a place for herself in the new country.

For the first two weeks in Dec... the Selig Polyscope Company announces a series of features beginning with "The Brand of Cain," for release in General Film Service on Monday, December 4. This feature play is presented by the "Ne'er-Do-Well" cast, including Kathlyn Williams, Wheeler Oakman, Harry Lonsdale, Sidney Smith and Frank Clark. Many of the scenes at sea were filmed en route to the Panama Canal Zone.

In connection with "The Brand of Cain," the Selig Company is to issue, without extra cost to exhibitors, a one-sheet poster of Kathlyn Williams, the star in the Selig production. This poster is of heavy plate paper, and Miss Williams' head was sketched from life by a famous artist. The poster is in five colors.

On Monday, December 11, the Selig three-reel feature, "Twisted Trails," will be released in regular service of General Film Company. An all-star cast will be presented, including Tom Mix, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer, Al. W. Filson, Will Machin, and others. Tom Mix presents a thrilling feat. Astride a horse he dashes over a narrow foot-log that spans a deep chasm. A misstep by the horse and the rider would have plunged hundreds of feet onto the rocks far below.

"The Purchase Price" is a Selig one-reel drama, released Saturday, December 9, and "The Road to Fame" is a stirring picture play released Saturday, December 16

EDUCATIONAL FILMS PRESENT FIRST GRIMM FAIRY TALE

For the title role in the new picture-play version of Grimm's fairy tale, "Snow-White," Aimee Erlich was selected, for, although still a small girl, she had several years of stage experience in "Little Nemo" and other parts in Klaw and Erlanger's productions. Her resemblance to Marguerite Clarke is marked, and several months ago she won the first prize as the child most like the other famous actress in appearance.

The part of Wicked Queen Alice is interpreted by Ruth Richey. The group of fairies was trained by Eleanor T. Flinn. The leader of the fairies is Eleanor Assmus.

The King is portrayed by Pansy Grace Lichtenberg, Prince Paul by Franklin Lovewell, the Witch by June Harrison, and a long list of other characters by children. The production is made for the Educational Films Corporation of America by the Regent Photo-Play Company of Cleveland.

The company of two hundred children that recently enacted Grimm's famous fairy tale, "Snow-White," in the picturesque surroundings of northern Ohio, were trained for three months.

Before the picture-play was made, the children presented Winthrop Ame's version on the stage. When the run was concluded, rehearsals were immediately started for the film production, the story having been adapted for the screen by Director Charles H. Weston and William Ganson Rose.

Michigan League Convention Set for December 12

A J. MOELLER, secretary of the Michigan State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, advises that R...nual convention of the organization ...sist...d in Detroit at the Hotel Statler, now a membe... 12, at which time there will ...licity staff of Vita... ...tant subjects ... travel throughout the co... ...tes it w... ...sentative of this organization, speaking before civic organizations, women's clubs and in theatres exhibiting Vitagraph pictures.

Miss Tapley is a film favorite with a peculiar hold on the public, and with a legion of admirers. She is esteemed not only because of the merit of her work on the screen, but because her innate personality has seemed to have been transmitted to the ranks of the photoplay public.

Probably no other motion picture player is known personally to so many exhibitors throughout the country and is on such an intimate and friendly footing with them as Miss Tapley. Among some of the widely known Blue Ribbon Features in which she has had prominent parts are the following: "The Chattel," with E. H. Sothern; "Rose of the South," with Antonio Moreno and Peggy Hyland; "Hesper of the Mountains," with Lillian Walker and Evart Overton; "Britton of the Seventh," with Ned Finley and Eulalie Jensen; "Hearts and the Highway," with Lillian Walker and Darwin Karr.

Miss Tapley's versatility is exemplified in the Frank Daniels comedies in which she has also appeared in support of that popular comedian. In addition, she has appeared in a number of Broadway Star Features and other subjects released on the General Film program.

To further the interest in her talks and to bring the Vitagraph Company more intimately before photoplay patrons throughout the country, Miss Tapley will take with her a one-reel picture entitled "From 'Script to Screen," showing the development of a photoplay from the acceptance of the manuscript to its final exhibition in the theatre.

This picture is being produced from a most interesting scenario, which takes the spectator through every phase of photoplay making and gives him a most comprehensive view of all the activities of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E.

The picture will introduce in logical sequence President Albert E. Smith, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, General Manager Walter W. Irwin, and others prominent in the Vitagraph family, showing them in the performance of various activities of interest to the exhibitors and the public.

It will also give a score of "behind-the-scenes" views of Vitagraph favorites at work and at play, including such well-known figures as Anita Stewart, Antonio Moreno, Edith Storey, Earle Williams, Lillian Walker, Alice Joyce, Peggy Hyland, Harry Morey, E. H. Sothern, etc., etc.

Other prominent figures in the photoplay world with whom Vitagraph-V-L-S-E comes in contact will also be depicted, such as Lee A. Ochs, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Fred Herrington, counselor of the national organization, will also be present.

"The membership of our state association is much smaller than it ought to be and we hope that more exh... at ... join and help ... with Miss Tapley's talks, particularly before women's organizations and other associations.

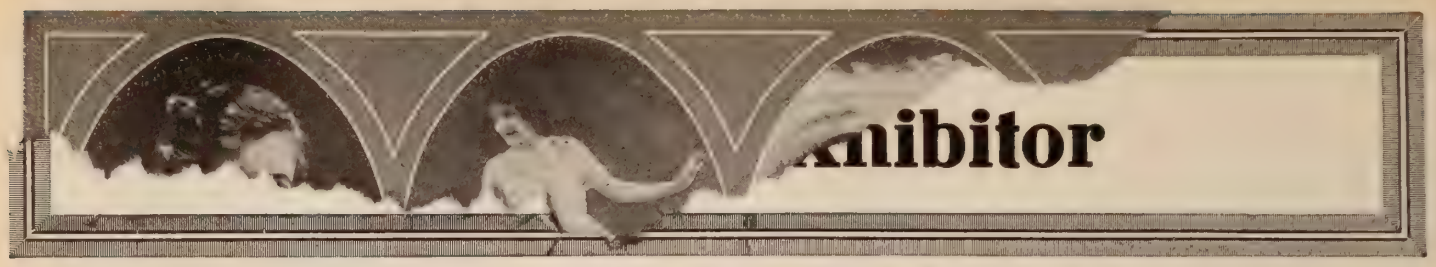
Arrangements have also been effected whereby Miss Tapley, as the traveling representative of the Vitagraph Company, will write a weekly report of her experiences and observations which will be offered to exhibitors through their trade papers.

SELZNICK IS AFTER CHAIN OF THEATRES IN ALL LARGE CITIES

The announcement that Lewis J. Selznick, in partnership with Carl Laemmle and Herbert Brenon, had taken over control of the Broadway theatre in New York City, has been followed by the announcement of Mr. Selznick's negotiations in Pittsburgh and other large cities for control of a chain of first class theatres in which to play his and other big motion picture productions for indefinite runs.

Mr. Selznick visited Pittsburgh last week and, it is understood, paved the way to a transaction for one of the big downtown houses as well as for one or two houses in the outlying residential sections. On his return Mr. Selznick explained his purpose in securing control of the chain of theatres in each of the large cities.

"It is not a desire to become a theatre owner that has decided me upon this step," said Mr. Selznick. "It is my intention to prove that such great productions as ours are worthy of longer runs in all of the big cities than they can obtain at any regular program house."



UNITY OFFERS ATTRACTIVE ADVERTISING NOVELTY FOR "TWEDDLEDUM" COMEDIES

To the various exchanges distributing the "Tweedledum" comedies, the Unity Sales Corporation is furnishing a very attractive novelty in the shape of a standing figure "cut-out." This figure is six feet high with the base twenty-six inches across and supported by a wooden prop extending from the back of the shoulders.

On each side of the feet there is a space which can be used for an announcement phrase and under the word "Tweedledum" there is room for an inscription to carry the name of the theatre or the name of the comedy in which the comedian is at that time appearing.

These "cut-outs" are made in attractive combination of six colors, green, brown, red, white, blue and black. A reproduction of the figure is also being used on postcards as an announcement to patrons of the various theatres.

These novelties are in addition to very attractive one- and three-sheets which are being very widely distributed. These comedies are growing rapidly in popular favor, and the exchanges handling them report that new names are being added each week to the list of exhibitors showing these comedies.

This Exhibitor Speaks the Truth—The First Exchangeman Capable of Understanding These Facts Will "Clean Up"

Bowie, Texas, Nov. 15.

Motion Picture News, New York City.

I am a small exhibitor. My houses run from 75 to 125 daily average. There is competition. My house will seat 250. There is no floating population. Matinees pay only on Saturdays and Mondays when the country people come to town. The citizens wait for night shows. Admission 5 and 10 cents. Features 10 and 15 cents to 25 cents. I believe that my class of show is in the large majority. Therefore what I say affects the greatest number of exhibitors.

It is my opinion that if I can book any feature when I wish it (I mean to say any date), it would undoubtedly be advantageous to me. For then I can select occasions when there is the greatest probability for a good attendance, and get the most attractive program possible.

The prices for booking are generally prohibitively high, for me. Programs are at least one-third cheaper, but with the great disadvantage that I must allow some one else to select a program for me.

When there is an apathy among the citizens for attending motion picture shows, they must be attracted to them. The business is a gamble. For one never knows what to depend upon. The popular stars generally bring out the crowds and justify the raise in price.

This question of open booking or the program should be viewed from the small exhibitor's standpoint, for we are the majority, and perhaps contribute more than the strong exhibitors to the exchange.

There are film producing companies who have been making beautiful pictures for the last few years. These pictures are held at high prices by the exchanges, and are beyond the reach of the small exhibitors. These pictures have been shown in all the large and thrifty theatres, and are now retired to the vaults of the exchanges, nearly worn out—if not fully so. They cost immense sums of money. They are many of them classics. They should live on forever, but they cannot do so usefully if stored away in vaults. The film producing companies have these negatives stored away in their vaults also, seldom reissued. I propose that if the exchanges would reduce the prices for older pictures, say over one year since released, to compete with program pictures, in price, that these services if reissued and kept in good working order would be in demand in preference to program pictures. I for one would prefer them, all other thing being equal. The exchanges could keep every picture busy or rented out to the small exhibitors, who are not so particular as to the original date of release.

I understand that the reason why reissues of films are not bought by the exchanges is because the producing companies charge them exhorbitant prices for reissues, making it risky and unprofitable for exchanges to get them. Now then, if the film producing companies will reissue films at a small advance over the cost of reissuing them, the exchanges can then do a fine business in renting these reissues. The first issues being in a worn out condition, and are dirty, scratched, too intense in contrast, ragged edges, unsafe for exhibitors to run through their machines. These are held at high prices yet.

FEATURE ORCHESTRA AT THE COLISEUM

On June 25 Manager Clause S. Jensen of the Coliseum theatre, Seattle, offered his patrons for the first time his "Coliseum Greater Orchestra," and the splendid organization made an instantaneous hit with the crowded house that had come to see Marguerite Clark in "Silks and Satins." The afternoon concert was lengthened by several encores. The orchestra consists of twelve men, being the largest, so Manager Jensen claims, that has ever been heard at any photoplay house in western America. Its leader, Leon I. Strashun, was first violinist with the Manhattan Grand Opera in New York in 1908-9; at the New York Metropolitan Opera House in 1909-10; at the Chicago Grand Opera in 1910-11-12-13-14, and at the Chicago Midway Gardens in 1914-15.

EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF CITY AND STATE MEET AND AGREE TO COME TOGETHER AS ONE

Two very important meetings were held recently by the Cleveland Exhibitors' League. The first meeting was called as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Local No. 5; the second, as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Ohio. Some uncertainty existing as to whether the Cleveland organization and the state organization is one and the same thing was cleared up by Fred Herrington, past national president and present national organizer, who gave the decision that this is the state organization, inasmuch as the state convention was held in Cleveland last October and state officers were elected by the Cleveland Exhibitors.

Extremely Attractive Lobby Sign of the Strand Theatre, New York

As a local, the most important matter brought up before the members was the decision by Judge Levine in regard to the Milo case. The owner of the Milo theatre is operating his own machine. The operators' union have been passing cards in front of the Milo theatre advising union men, patrons and sympathizers that the Milo theatre management does not employ a union operator. On Tuesday the case came up in court, and this was Judge Levine's decision: Any man may operate his own theatre; likewise the labor organization has a right to air its grievances in the shape of cards if they adhere strictly to the truth in word and implication. In so far as the cards passed stated that the Milo theatre did not employ a union operator, they were on safe ground, but the fact that their statement implied that the Milo theatre employed a non-union operator was false; therefore Judge Levine enjoined them from passing these cards before the theatre. Messrs. Schwartz and Sawyers, the lawyers representing the exhibitor, were deeply gratified by the decision.

After the adjournment of the local meeting, the state organization meeting was called by Mr. Horsey, the state secretary. The special business was to dispose of the resignations of State President Lamont Smith and State Vice-President Beverstock. A free and open discussion of the matter brought forth the motion that the state secretary call a state convention, to be held the first week in January, and that the resignation of these officers be deferred until the convening of this convention. A motion was also made and carried that five men be appointed to devise ways and means for conducting this convention, said committee to be appointed at the next meeting, thus giving the chair ample opportunity to choose those best fitted to assume the responsibility.

PATHE ORIGINATES STUNTS ON PEARL OF ARMY

What will not the producers do now to "help the exhibitor." If the next few months show such an awakening in this respect as the last few weeks, the picture show will begin to resemble a department store, sure enough.

Besides the usual paper common to all recent serials, and an extended newspaper campaign which will affect many separate localities, the "new ideas" include a special art portrait—one sheet size—of Pearl White in seven or eight colors; a "dolly" cut out of Miss White enabling her admirers to see her in the latest "Florence Rose" dresses, hats, shoes, suits, etc., and a series of cartoons drawn by Merle Johnson (of Puck fame) for use in advance publicity. The cartoons, especially, will attract notice and should not be overlooked.

INDIANA THEATRE RUINED BY MOTION PICTURE POPULARITY

On petition of John W. Lovett, the Citizens Bank has been appointed receiver for the New Crystal Theatre Company, which operates the Crystal theatre, Anderson, Ind. The liabilities amount to $4,650. James A. Garnett, manager of the theatre, says that the popularity of the movie business hit the company.

Michigan League Convention Set for December 12

A. J. MOELLER, secretary of the Michigan State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, advises that the annual convention of the organization will be held in Detroit at the Hotel Statler, on December 12, at which time there will be some very important subjects to take up and discuss. He states it will be the most important convention ever held in Michigan and is urging every exhibitor to be there in person.

Lee Ochs has already consented to attend and be one of the principal speakers. Fred Herrington, counselor of the national organization, will also be present.

"The membership of our state association is much smaller than it ought to be and we hope that more exhibitors will join and help along the work," says Mr. Moeller. "A few of us cannot be nor should we be expected to do all of the work, while others sit idly by and do not even pay dues for the success of the organization, which is not for any one exhibitor but which is for all exhibitors in the State."

What Would You Do in a Case Like This?

South Portland, Maine.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York.

After years of experience in the moving picture field we have at last decided that there is one thing that is needed for the benefit of all exhibitors and exchangemen, and that is a column headed "What Would You Do in a Case Like This?"

It would require a man of good judgment and one who has long experience in the movie game to look after this column. Now as an example. "What Would You Do in a Case Like This?" You contract with a certain exchange for a serial, with fillers to make up the show. After two weeks of ordinary fillers they become so junky your audience walk out disgusted with the fillers. You take the matter up with the exchange. They promise to do better next week. Next week comes and with it worse fillers than you had the previous week. You immediately send in your cancellation for the fillers, and the exchange informs you that unless you take their junk fillers they will cut out the Serial. You send check for the serial in advance for the following week. What does the exchange man do? He sends you the fillers, in the same case with the serial marked C. O. D., and in order to get the serial you are compelled to pay the C. O. D. You cannot afford to cut out the serial, as you have run several episodes, and the audience of course look for it. Now MUST we take the junk fillers, or cut out the serial, which would not be treating our audience right?

What are we to do in a case like this?

PATHE ISSUES ART PORTRAITS BY KIMBALL

Pathe is issuing a series of art portraits that take rank with the best that have ever been produced. Hamilton King, the well-known artist, is painting the series which will include the best-known stars appearing in Pathe productions.

It will be remembered that a year ago Alonzo Kimball made for Pathe a similar series which was much admired. The portraits were so beautiful, many of them being in nine and ten colors, that exhibitors framed them and hung them in their lobbies where they were kept as being worthy of a permanent place.

As Mr. King's services command a high price, and as the lithographing is being done on very heavy coated paper, the portraits will cost a large sum, but it is confidently expected the results will warrant the extra expense. E. J. O'Connor, the Pathe poster man, is planning the series under the supervision of Mr. Berst.

The first portrait to be finished is one of Pearl White, star of "Pearl of the Army," the new serial to be released December 3rd.

Program Pointers from All Over

THE following points of excellence from several programs received lately may give you an idea worth while. Let us look yours over.

Regent, Philadelphia, uses a star (*) with footnote explanation to call attention to shows having special music. Most house programs nowadays give schedule of performances.

The Marcelle, Hopewell, Virginia, sends the most artistic program received in many weeks. Printed on special folder with colorgravure frontispiece by Knapp Company, N. Y., an entire week's program, six changes, with complete extra announcement of Romeo and Juliet (Metro) and a half dozen special points of excellence about the house, all on one page four by six inches. Roy C. Davis, adv. mgr. for the Tri-City Amusement Company, controlling this house, must have spent weeks studying the type arrangement. He uses eight different kinds, only the top head larger than eight point, and the result is readable. We can understand why he plays all the best pictures.

Mystic, Petaluma, Calif., uses small trademark cuts of several services to "Initial" his announcements. Date line in 8 point type, style of date line of a letter, right upper corner, with a star in small caps, title of play in caps and lower case blackface, a pleasing "2 set-up" that strikes us as worth copying. The neatest inexpensive folder we have before us.

Majestic Monthly, Columbus, Ohio, twenty-four pages on heavy calendared paper, contains the following page articles, besides Paramount advance programs. Close-ups—live talk to the patrons about subjects of mutual interest. "Why I Stay in Pictures" by Marguerite Clark, using this star's signing of her new contract to boost "Paramount." The Majestic Family Circle, with pictures of the operators. This page especially hits us as a business securer. Makes the house and the patrons a big family affair. "Take it from Me," musings of the "office boy"—extra clever stuff that we know the patrons read. "The House and its Policies." Inspection of the house, and a lecture to employes on "first-aid" are mentioned this month as details of care in house management. "A Morosco Anniversary," by Pete Schmid, acquainting the Majestic's patrons with one of their producers more intimately. "Vivian Martin's Cooking Hints," "As Seen by Our Patrons" (editorial comment on letters received), "Pictures Paramount" (advance notes about stars, etc.) and "? Interrogation Points?" answers to questions of patrons, about how to become motion picture actor, stars, plays, etc., complete the latest issue of this always interesting house organ.

The Parkway, Baltimore, offers a suggestion in neat printing. Cover a deckled edge fancy paper, inside a heavy calendered paper with scene cuts of pictures. Cut of interior of theatre, on same calendered paper, pasted on front cover. This is a very effective souvenir of "First Anniversary Week."

The Majestic, Jackson, Mich., features a "picture especially pleasing to children" on Saturday. The picture was "Little Mary Sunshine." A special Saturday morning matinee was held, all school children five cents, for this picture.

FROM STILLMAN THEATRE, CLEVELAND, O., PROGRAM COMES THE FOLLOWING. THE PLEASURE IS MUTUAL!

We're Noticed

Last week's Motion Picture News, a trade paper published in New York and circulating just about everywhere, takes the article on "Superlatives" in a recent Stillman program as the text of its leading editorial this week. The editor says: "These are words worth weighing. They seem so important to us that we are substituting this editorial for another already prepared." And here were we, wondering whether anybody had read it!

The Rowland and Clark theatres make effective use of a star cut each week on the outside front cover, with a short biography of the star on the inside cover page. Motion Picture News Studio Directory furnishes the frame work for such a biography, to which should be added the plays the star has appeared in at your theatre, and the plays coming soon.

The Queen and Majestic program (Wilmington, Del.) features a "Heart to Heart Talk" with patrons every week, just a short paragraph, but constantly keeping in the patron's mind that he is not being neglected.

Films and footlight, Royal-Grand theatre, Marion, Ind., uses the catchy heading "Tabloid Review of Week" for its advance announcement of features with two-line descriptions of the action of each play. Sixteen pages of carefully edited stories of the films and notes about the stars, etc., make a unique little volume. Children's pictures are under consideration here, too. Good stuff, the editorial about the children and pictures.

The Columbia theatre, Attleboro, Mass., showing Louise Glaum, in the "Wolf Woman," Monday and Tuesday, provides a separate show for the children, Tuesday afternoon, on account of the extra strong "vamp" type of the regular show. Keen business judgment, this, for not only is the regular show excused, but you can bet the attendance will be double what it would be if it were not emphasized in this way that the "real thing" were to be had, so real that the kiddies had to be taken care of separately. And the "vamp" show goes on Tuesday afternoon, before the special children's performance, at that.

DON'T FAIL TO READ THIS!

Although there are any number of moving picture theatres in Iowa, there are but two real Iowa theatres. Read the list of theatre names for yourself: A hasty glance reveals but one Photo Show, giving the Impression that Iowa is limited in picture houses, but considering that there are thirty-seven Lyrics, thirty Princesses and twenty-two Opera Houses this is wrong. Out of nine Families but two Americans can be found. Two Foxes, two Eagles and a Swan are found in five Gardens. It must be true that the exhibitors have easy times, as there appear to be nine Idle Hours, as compared to one Busy Hour. One Happy Hour and one Pleasant Hour add to the pleasures of the exhibitors. Although there are thirteen Gems, but one Jewel is found among them. The sky is well represented with twenty-six Stars, one Twin Star, one Comet and a Rainbow. Four Dreamlands and two Unions make up two Empires, but out of this comes but one White City. And to cap the climax only two houses of 350 claim to the Ideal, while the same number is all that lay claim to being Best.

But the worst is yet to come! The exhibitor's tale of hard luck is true! There is but one Dime in the entire bunch!

This is vouched for as absolute fact by Charles Stevenson, publicity manager for Universal, at Des Moines, who nailed these startling facts from Universal's mailing list of 350 names—count 'em—350.

JACKSON OPENS NEW STAR, OMAHA, TO CAPACITY, USING VARIETIES OF ADVERTISING

J. W. Jackson, assistant manager of the Laemmle exchange in Omaha, Nebraska, has decidedly progressive ideas about advertising a theatre. When he opened the New Star at Sixteenth and Locust streets he tried some of them out. He opened with "The Social Buccaneer," giving out 700 free admission tickets. Only 70 free admission tickets were used, so Jackson declares this method of advertising is no good.

Buglers, flags, diamond shaped cards with a question on one side and the answer on the other, all advertising the theatre; a picture of J. Warren Kerrigan on one side and with the theatre's program on the other, besides many other features, were used. Next week the program will be on one side, with a blotter on the other. The New Star was packed all the time during the opening day. Tastefully prepared announcements, resembling a wedding invitation, were sent to many people.

"FOUR GOOD SIZED POTATOES"

A novel method of combating the high cost of living and advertising a theatre was recently given publicity by the act of the Mystic theatre at Madrid, Iowa. Advertising a children's special matinee for a certain Saturday afternoon, this house set the admission fee at "four good sized potatoes." The crowd came and the kids were tickled to be admitted for what they all considered a mighty cheap price.

Exhibitors who heard of this stunt are wondering at the possibilities offered. With eggs and butter bringing record prices in Iowa, several exhibitors are considering admission fees of various commodities for evening shows.

A CURE FOR ROWDYISM

Mr. Mendenhall, who now travels for Paramount in Iowa, tells of a plan whereby the noisy and boisterous child can be sub dued to a quiet attentive spectator. He worked it with much success when an exhibitor at Stuart, Iowa. Mr. Mendenhall was having much trouble with the kids who became too noisy, until he finally thought up this plan that practically eliminates all this roughneck-ism.

When a young person did anything that offended the patrons, Mr. Mendenhall warned the youth once. A second offense and the mischief maker would be met at the door as he came out from seeing the show and told that he would not be allowed to re-enter the theatre for say, the next two weeks. And that was final! No matter how steady patrons the child's parents were, that offending lad did not get in until his time expired. The period of banishment varied, of course, according to the offense committed. Some times it was seven days, other times over a month. After five or six noisy youths were not al lowed to attend the show and the other children found out that Mr. Mendenhall meant what he said, rowdyism and ungentlemanly conduct was not known in the Stuart house.

The B. F. Goodrich Company are getting out some of the cleverest advertising window displays, using motion pictures as a basis, ever put over.

In the accompanying illustration, we have a projection machine made of some cardboard, a few pieces of wood, etc., set up on a pedestal of tires. The strings from the lens, representing the rays of light, are attached to various photographs of the leading motion picture actors and actresses who use the Goodrich Silvertown Cross Tires.

This display has stirred up a considerable amount of interest in the various towns where it has been utilized.

This suggestion of the Goodrich Company can be utilized by ingenious exhibitors who are looking for displays of their own, as schemes similar to this can be worked out effectively in the display of almost any item.

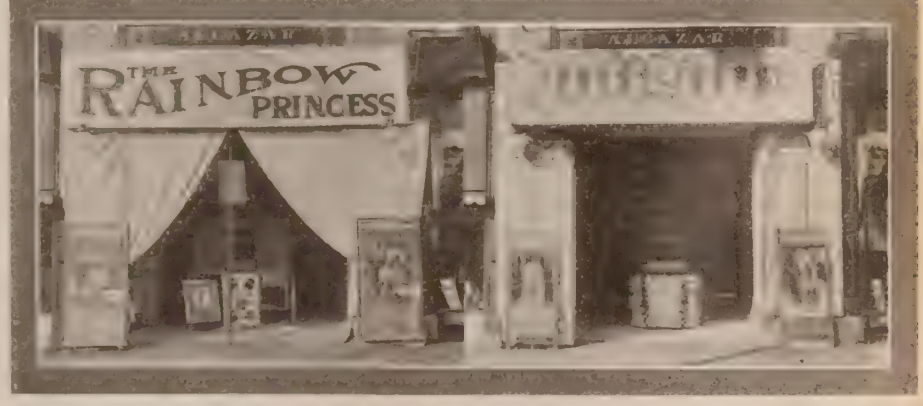
It Sometimes Takes an Outsider to Suggest a Good Thing

THE accompanying cut shows what an automobile tire concern did with a motion picture machine and some pictures of popular stars. Why not make a lobby display or co-operate with the "big store" in town to make people stop and think of the stars and pictures you have on the screen, or coming? There are a hundred ways in which this idea can be used by a real "live wire." When you have used it in your theatre will you please send us a picture, or at least a description of how you made use of this suggestion orginated by a picture "fan," for the man who thought it out is one of us, surely.

For example, if you have a daily change program, your leading star of the week in the center, and a star for each day. Or perhaps the names of the services you use in the center, with a star and picture for each day of the week. If you have a supply house in your town, it ought to be easy enough to get the machine and the fixing is a very simple matter.

GOOD IDEA FOR NEIGHBORHOOD HOUSES

We note from the neat folder mailed to patrons of the Theatre Louisiana, Baton Rouge, top of page "Found—the following articles; ring, two pins, fur neck-piece; Watch this column weekly for lost articles." This is killing two birds with one stone. At least four pleased patrons and a lot more curious ones who will read this program more closely, should be the reward for this idea.



THE RETORT COURTEOUS ALWAYS PAYS WELL

Courtesy on the part of attendants of theatres is admitted to be very necessary by all live wire exhibitors.

Here's a little incident that recently occurred in the day's happening of J. S. King, Paramount's Pittsburgh publicity man: in one of the old type nickelodeons, a beauteous young lady was ushering, and the house was doing a pretty good businness, so much so, that seats were at a premium.

A patron approached who inquired for a seat, and the young lady replied in accents wild, "You can search me." She was considerably surprised to receive the reply, "I have no desire to search you, or any other young lady; I simply want a seat. I came to see the show, not to make a personal examination."

The retort courteous has been tested under divers conditions and seldom has failed.

Looking Ahead With The Producers

Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Marie Doro, Anita King and Wallace Reid to Appear on Paramount Program in Month

SIX stars, Blanche Sweet, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Marie Doro, Anita King and Wallace Reid, will appear in the Lasky productions on the Paramount Program during the month of January.

Miss Sweet is to star in "The Evil Eye" on January 4; Mae Murray in "A Mormon Maid" on the eleventh; Fannie Ward in "Betty to the Rescue" on the fifteenth; Marie Doro in "Lost and Won" on the twenty-second, and Anita King will co-star with Wallace Reid in "Golden Fetters" on the twenty-fifth of the month.

"The Evil Eye" is a story of Mexico, written by Hector Turnbull, dealing with a young American girl, a practicing physician, who is sent over the border to fight an epidemic of diphtheria among the workers in a vineyard. She encounters superstitution and ignorance which endangers her own life and that of her weakling brother. Though "The Evil Eye" has Mexico as the setting for its action, it is not a war story in any sense of the word, but draws its thrills and its swift action from other very different sources.

Paul West is the author of "A Mormon Maid," which depicts Miss Murray in most thrilling dramatic situations in the justly celebrated State of Utah. It is a tale of the "Fifties" when the Mormons were establishing their kingdom in the wilderness in defiance of the attenuated authority of Washington. The frightful work of the "Avenging Angels" in their efforts to prevent the escape from the colony of those who might bear unsavory tales of some of the phases of Mormonism plays an important part in the story, which deals with the experiences of a Gentile family which is forced by an Indian raid to take refuge with a Mormon caravan.

"Betty to the Rescue," which was written jointly by Beatrice De Mille and Leighton Osmun, is set in the orange groves and the mining districts of California. It is the tale of a gold mine that is first declared to be worthless by a crooked engineer and then salted by some of the boys in order to fool Fannie Ward —alias Betty Sherwin—into believing that she has struck gold. When the "salt" nuggets are counted, a stranger is found among them, and that leads to an important discovery which changes the life history of three people.

Marie Doro is Cinders in "Won and Lost," a story written especially for her by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, who have collaborated so successfully in a number of big stage hits. "Won and Lost" has to do with a little newspaper waif whose spirit so attracts the admiration of a wealthy clubman that he wagers $50,000, that in one year he can make such a society belle of her that many of his friends will be suitors for her hand. He loses his wager but wins freedom from false arrest, and other things which he values much more.

"The Golden Fetters," in which Anita King and Wallace Reid are co-starred, is the story of an Alaska gold mine that contains no gold. It does, however, yield plenty of adventure in which outlaws are concerned, a multiplicity of comedy, and a thrilling drama that is filled with action.

POPULARITY OF WORLD'S MASTER-PICTURE CONTINUES

D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance" which is now in the height of its popularity at the Liberty theatre, is such an extraordinary theatrical offering that words fail to convey any idea of its magnitude and grandeur, its marvelous spectacular effects, its human interest and its amazing reproduction of historical events. In "intolerance" there are four separate stories, each with its own set of characters.

Ancient Babylon, Judea of the time of Christ, Paris during the reign of Charles IX, and a modern American city are the scenes of these stories. Such film stars as Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, and Seena Owen, Miriam Cooper, Tully Marshall and Bessie Love have the leading roles.

Jane Grey to Star in Another International

BECAUSE of the great success she made in the International Golden Eagle feature "The Flower of Faith," Jane Grey has been engaged to appear in another picture for International entitled "When My Ship Comes In." This will be based on a story by Gouverneur Morris, which achieved prominence recently when run in serial form in Hearst's Magazine. The picture will be produced by the A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., the same producing company which made "The Flower of Faith."

Those prominent in Miss Grey's support for "When My Ship Comes In" are William J Kelly, Nigel Barrie, Eleanor Blevins, Walter P. Richardson, Edith Campbell Walker, Ruth Chester, Morgan Jones, and Robert E. Lee Hill.

Miss Grey has the role of Silver Sands. Silver lives in a small village on the New England coast. McKay Hedden, a theatrical manager, meets her while on a cruise and believes she will make a fine actress. He recognizes Silver's father as a man who committed a crime years before when they were both in the show business together, so the old man must accede to parting with his daughter.

Hedden has stolen a play from Paul Grayson, private secretary to a New York broker with mining interests in Mexico and determines to produce it with Silver in the leading role. Silver meets Paul and the two fall in love. Later he is forced to leave for Mexico and in the meantime Hedden makes final arrangements to produce the play. Silver learns that he has stolen it from Paul and refuses to appear. But Hedden forces her to do so. Paul returns to find his play a great success and arrives in the nick of time to save Silver and to demand credit for the success of his work.

RUTH LAW IN UNIVERSAL ANIMATED

Another "beat" has been scored by the Universal Animated Weekly. Within three hours from the minute Ruth Law arrived at Governor's Island on her record breaking air flight from Chicago to New York, moving pictures of the landing of Miss Law were shown at the Strand and Rialto theatres.

SEALY WAS A PIONEER PICTURE-MAKER

One of the first three producers of motion pictures in England was Lewis Sealy, who is in the cast of the Metro-Quality screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The only others in the field at the time were Lumiere, exhibiting at the Empire, and Paul showing at the Alhambra. Mr. Sealy's pictures were seen at the Metropolitan. Associated with him in producing and manufacturing was Esme Collings, of Bond street, a photographer of royalty and other prominent persons. They made their first picture exactly twenty years ago this year.

In 1897 they filmed the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. They also made a picture of the Derby of that year. He abandoned motion picture producing after three years, because of the difficulty in getting places for exhibiting them, as there were no theatres devoted to pictures at the time. For a while he leased a theatre at Brighton for the purpose.

PATHE PICTURE USED AS EDITORIAL

For the first time has a motion picture production been used by a big newspaper in an editorial. The Minneapolis News draws a parallel between the mysterious "Shielding Shadow" in Pathe's serial of the name, and Charles E. Hughes, and states that his "Shielding Shadow" is made up of the big financiers, invisible yet powerful, always ready to help him in time of stress. The editorial calls upon voters to remember Mr. Hughes' "Shielding Shadow" when they went to the polls.

The News says: "The incongruity between the dim indefinite figure and muscular efficiency of its hands is [illegible] the things that makes the film go great."

"The Stolen Triumph," with Julius Steger as Star, Is Released on Metro Program December 11

FOR the first time in many months Julius Steger is to be seen again on the screen. Announcement has just been made by Metro that "The Stolen Triumph," with Mr. Steger as star, will be released as a Metro-Rolfe feature on December 11. Mr. Steger's last screen appearance was in "The Blindness of Love."

"The Stolen Triumph" is a play that is filled with powerful dramatic situations. The scenario was written by Mr. Steger and Maxwell Karker, general manager of the Rolfe and Columbia studios. David Thompson directed the play.

This new Metro-Rolfe production deals with a struggling young playwright, who is robbed of his masterpiece. Mr. Steger, as Edwin Rowley, the playwright, has a part well fitted to his talents.

UNIVERSAL

ON and after January 1st we will advance the rental price on our one and two-reel L-KO comedies, Joker comedies, Nestor comedies, Animated Weekly, Dorsey Expedition pictures and certain other specialties to all Exhibitors who are not regularly booking the ENTIRE Universal program.

ALL exhibitors who are booking the ENTIRE Universal program will be protected. They will continue to receive all of our program pictures, including the above specialties, as a part of their service. Of course our serials are not included in this.

THUS, an exhibitor showing an all feature program and coming to the Universal exchanges for only a few reels such as those mentioned above must not expect to get these subjects at the same proportionate price as the regular Universal customer who who is using our entire output.

WE make a program of thirty-one reels every week. When an exhibitor selects fifteen from the thirty-one he must hereafter expect to pay some portion of the cost of releasing the other sixteen reels that he is not using. He benefits through our releasing thirty-one because it gives him a wide range to choose from.

NEVER since the feature business gained a foothold has the Universal neglected its program. On the contrary it has continued to search the world for the best possible stories, the best directors, and the best players for one and two-reel pictures. Had we become panic stricken by the feature business, as some concerns did, the exhibitors of this country who wanted and had to have program service would have been in a tight hole. But never for an instant did we lose faith in the short subject or the program.

BUT, during this time, many exhibitors who formerly used our whole program dropped part of it and filled in with features. This they had a right to do. We told them it was a mistake and that the feature craze would eventually hurt their business terribly.

Picture Weekly)

BULLETIN

HUNDREDS of them have found, to their sorrow, that we knew what we were talking about. Meanwhile we have continued to pour money into our short subjects as well as into our features. We have allowed the exhibitors to take their pick from some thirty-one reels of program pictures every week and have thus found out that the crying demand was for good clean comedies and novelties of various kinds known as "Specialties."

WE have therefore strengthened our comedies and our novelties so much that we think they far surpass anything on the market.

IT has cost us a pile of money to do this and we feel that it is time for us to begin to get what these specialties are worth.

LET me make it clear again that we intend to protect our regular customers AS LONG AS THEY BOOK THE ENTIRE PROGRAM EVERY WEEK. But when exhibitors ask for the privilege of SELECTING only the cream of the program they must expect to pay for the privilege.

EVERY day new evidence pours in to prove that I knew exactly what I was talking about when I said, week after week, that the public would tire of features and that the VARIED PROGRAM would come back. It has come back, stronger than ever, and in many cases the exhibitors have swung back to it just in time to save themselves from ruin.

THOSE of you who have not yet made up your minds to come back to the ENTIRE program are more than welcome to come back to any part of it, under the terms outlined in the foregoing.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

Pauline Frederick has started the winter's Southern exodus for the Famous Players by departing for Cuba last week. It was Miss Frederick who set the ball going last winter when she departed for Florida in the early part of November. This time the celebrated emotional actress is playing in a production every scene of which transpires in the South, and the Famous Players determined that a typical Southern atmosphere should be provided as the setting for this Paramount picture.

Frank McIntyre is learning painful lessons concerning motion picture realism while he is preparing to make his photoplay debut in the Famous Players adaptation of his great stage success, "The Traveling Salesman." There is one scene in which he engages in a rough and tumble fight with Harry Northrup, the villain in the story. McIntyre, who spins the scales at nearly three hundred, told Northrup to give him a few good body blows during the struggle so as to make it look realistic. He did—and just as Northrup landed a good fast one to McIntyre's so-called ribs, the fat comedian stepped on a loose rug that slipped out from under him. He landed on the floor of the studio with a "Whoof" that echoed through the rafters of the studio like the battle cry of a grizzly bear in the north woods. Body blows were barred in the next round.

Rudolph Bergquist, the cameraman who did the photographic work for Metro's great screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the title roles, got his "hunch" to be a photographer at the age of fourteen, when he received a kodak as a premium with a suit of clothes. Immediately he began taking pictures, and he has been taking them ever since.

A few weeks after receiving the kodak he went to work for a chemist-photographer at a salary of fifty cents a week. For eight years he worked in all branches of photography. This was in Peoria, Ill. Then he decided to go to Chicago, where he worked in the laboratory of the Essanay Company. He came to Metro with Francis X. Bushman when Mr. Bushman made the change from Essanay to Metro. For four years he was engaged in laboratory work, and he has been a cameraman three years. In that time he has made some notable productions, most of them with Mr. Bushman, "Romeo and Juliet," with its exquisite light effects, being the most important. He has also done the photography of Julius Steger's new Metro-Rolfe feature, "The Stolen Triumph." Mr. Bergquist is married, and is very proud of a little girl seven years old, named Ruth Virginia Bergquist.

The entire Metro-Yorke organization, headed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison with producer Fred J. Balshofer, are in Monterey, Cal., where the exterior scenes of Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island" are being taken.

Monterey is considered one of the most picturesque sea-coast locations on the Pacific Coast with its blue waves of Monterey Bay, the primeval forest for a background, where forest alternates with spray dashed sea-cliffs, and fern-clad canyons with magnificent vistas of ocean, bay and mountain range. This location, which is about five hundred miles from the Los Angeles Yorke-Metro studio, was selected by producer Balshofer, on account of its magnificent scenic possibilities.

By special arrangement with the Southern Pacific Railroad, a private combined day coach and Pullman was procured and included prominently in the party that went to Monterey from the Yorke studios at Hollywood were: Harold Lockwood, May Allison, Fred J. Balshofer, Lester Cuneo, Lillian Hayward, Harry Leonard, Ruth Palmer, Charles P. Stallings, Elizah Zerr, Steve Barton, a crew of property men, twenty supernumeraries, Cameraman Tony Gaudio, his assistant, Bernard Purpoole, and Richard V. Spencer, scenario editor.

Scenes of such realism as seriously to threaten the comfort of the star have been taken in the picturization of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's famous poem, "A Reverie in a Station House," a Metro-Columbia feature, in which Frances Nelson will be seen as the star.

Max Linden and President George K. Spoor of Essanay on Their Arrival in Chicago

John W. Noble, who is directing the production, went with Miss Nelson and the company into one of the most thickly-populated downtown districts in New York for some of the realistic scenes of the picture. In her character as a homeless girl, Miss Nelson was accosted and jostled not only by the supernumeraries under the instruction of Fred Sittenham, assistant director, but also by the crowd that collected to see what it was all about. Then Sally Crute, in her character as an unfortunate woman, came along and befriended the girl, offering her shelter. A policeman on the edge of the crowd thought the disturbance a real one, and he came forward to make arrests.

"Quit it," yelled Sittenham. "I need those people. This is a motion picture prodution and I've got a permit. Carlton, go ahead with the camera."

"Yes, go ahead," said the bluecoat with a sigh of relief. "I thought I'd have to take you all to the station house and lose sleep appearing in court against you. By all means go ahead with the camera, old top. And I'll go ahead about my business."

"This came pretty near being a real reverie in a station house, all right," was Sittenham's comment as the policeman walked away.

Charles Ripley, the actor-hobo, who "beat" his way on, under and over railroad trains across the continent in following his adored director, W. Christy Cabanne, from Los Angeles to New York, will be seen in a characteristic role in the forthcoming fourteen-episode Metro-Quality serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne will star. He will indulge in spectacular fights, will be thrown out of windows by the star and other members of the cast, and otherwise make himself useful.

Emmy Wehlen, star of "Vanity," a Metro-Popular Plays and Players feature photodrama from the pen of Aaron Hoffman, which is soon to be released, would rather dance than do anything else in the world. She is especially fond of the new development in dancing, the "London Taps," which is being done in all the smart trotteries, but considers the fox-trot the ideal modern dance.

In taking the sea-pictures of "Jerry of the Emerald Isle," the Metro-Columbia feature soon to be released, starring Mabel Taliaferro, the Carpathia, which rescued the victims of the Titanic disaster, was used. Director John H. Collins and his assistant, Albert Kelly, were entertained and thrilled by stories of the rescue told by Captain Dow. In the taking of the photoplay Miss Taliaferro's luck held good, for it was only a short time after the departure of the company that the Carpathia was aground on the mud flats of New York harbor.

Paul Everton, who has been seen in many Metro wonderplays, has an important part in the forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production starring Emmy Wehlen, a picturization of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "The Belle of the Season." S. Rankin Drew is directing "The Belle of the Season," and will have a leading male part.

Adella Barker, who has made a strong impression as the nurse in Metro's screen version of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the title roles, has joined the cast including those stars in the big serial being produced at the Metro-Quality studios. Miss Barker has the part of a woman of the underworld.

George W. Hill, long associated with D. W. Griffith as cameraman, has joined the Metro-Popular Plays and Players forces. He has recently finished his camera work for "Less Than the Dust" and "Intolerance," and is recognized as being one of the half-dozen best cameramen in the country. His first work for Metro is the photographing of a new play for Mme. Petrova, written by Anna Steese Richardson and directed by Edmund Lawrence.

Harold Lockwood, who, with May Allison, will next be seen on the Metro program in Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island," which follows the recent Yorke release "Big Tremaine," is planning to spend Christmas in New York. May Allison also intends visiting Broadway. If these plans become effective, the entire Yorke-Metro organization will participate in an elaborate picture to be started in Los Angeles and completed in New York. It will be a story, to be written by Richard V. Spencer, that deals with an interesting romance of the flowers and sunshine variety, contrasted by real Eastern snow scenes. During the time they are in the East, work will be started on a new Los Angeles studio.

Another big "mob scene" for "The Man Who Forgot" was taken in Washington, D. C., last Saturday, when fully 5,000 persons responded to a newspaper advertisement, inviting them to participate in this moving picture episode. This scene had been made previously in a similar manner, but was not entirely satisfactory to William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, and was ordered retaken.

Thus the entire company, directed by Emile Chautard, experienced a second trip to the National Capitol, and a duplicate throng made believe it was listening in rapt attention to Robert Warwick's fervid but wordless open-air plea for prohibition.

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell in "The Madness of Helen" participate in some of the most remarkable photography ever shown upon the screen. In several of Miss Clayton's scenes, in which she plays two sisters, there are "double exposure" effects which defy detection even by the most practised experts.

Mme. Petrova, the celebrated actress starring in Popular Plays and Players pictures for the Metro program, has signed a long-time contract with a prominent graphophone company (The Columbia). She will give both songs and recitations, making at least one double-disc record every month for a period of approximately eighteen months.

This will not in any way interfere with her motion picture activities.

The star will sing songs and arias from operas, which will give her an opportunity to display her fine soprano voice in passages calling for the coloratura work for which she was famed on the concert and operatic stage. The first of these will probably be Vinya's song from "The Postillion." Her recitations, however, will for the most part be of her own writing.

Mme. Petrova has equal proficiency in writing, acting for stage or screen, singing and dancing. One of her first double-disc records will contain four recitations of her own composition.

Pretty Emmy Wehlen, who is seen as a star in Metro wonderplays, and soon will appear in a picturization of "The Belle of the Season," Ella Wheeler Wilcox's famous poem, is passionately fond of dancing. She is especially fond of the new "London Taps," which is being done in Broadway restaurants these days.

Ever since the announcement that the Famous Players would star Marguerite Clark in an adaptation of "Snow White," in which she scored such a success on the stage, the studio has been besieged by anxious, doting and glib-tongued parents who are anxious to immortalize their children in celluloid. The large majority of them seem to think the mere fact that they witnessed the stage presentation of the fairy tale will entitle their offspring to screen blessedness in this Paramount picture.

Cleopatra, the histrionic cat, is dead. It happened in a tragic way, and all nine lives went at once. Cleo, you may recall, had a prominent part to play in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" Consolidated Film, and, in accord with the rules of Fate, she hissed her last in the thirteenth episode.

Director T. Haynes Hunter and Ben Goetz had installed, for realism's sake, a genuine kitchen range in a kitchen scene. Upon the range was a vat of water, boiling. While taking a short cut between one shelf and another, near the stove, Cleopatra miscalculated, slipped, shrieked once—and when she was fished out, her spirit had departed to the land where catnip grows and flourishes all the year 'round.

Services for the deceased were held at the Erbograph studio, and interment was on President O. E. Goebel's estate at Great Neck, L. I.

ACTIVITIES IN JACKSONVILLE

Jacksonville, Nov. 25

The Regent Photo Players under the direction of General Manager C. H. Weston, have leased stage space from the Garrick Studios Company, and have started the production of "The Legend of the Everglades," a five reel feature production in which Mlle. Lilian De Orcy takes the feminine lead and Gene Kane the masculine parts. The personnel of the company is composed of C. H. Weston, general manager; R. B. Robinson, president; William Evers, vice-president; Eugene French, Katherine Malroy, Ronald Fay, Jack Dale, Marjory Lane, William Fergerson, Fred Seibert, Gene Kane, Mrs. A. L. Seibert and Miss Cora Beach, sister of Rex Beach.

Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby, makers of Vim comedies De Lux, have arrived in Jacksonville for the winter months, from Providence, R. I. The studio at the Vim Company on Riverside Drive, is being enlarged to accommodate the three companies now working.

Kate Price, former Vitagraph star and now co-star with Babe Hardy in Vim comedies, will be seen soon in a new Vim entitled "The Scene that Failed," which promises to be worthy of both Babe and Kate.

Bobby Burns and Walt Stull, of the Vim Pokes and Jabbs Company are in the midst of the production of a new "studio" comedy, which will depict scenes behind the screen.

"The Tiger's Claw" is the latest production of the Jacksonville Kalem Company, in which James Larkin and Ollie Kirby are seen in Kalem's great newspaper series.

Tom Regan, formerly with the Florida Feature Film Company at Miami has joined the Garrick Studios Company, who will start production in the near future. Bert Tracy, former scenario writer for the Vim, and recently with Kalem, is also numbered among the Garrick players.

Princess Palacologus, who recently appeared as the oriental dancer in Mary Pickford's "Less than the Dust," has joined the Garrick forces in Jacksonville. Her husband, Major Palaeolgus, former technical director for Universal at Los Angeles, will direct a dancing school in which his wife will teach oriental dancing.

Nearly Eighty Theatres Show "Less Than the Dust"

In Nine Cities at Least One Theatre Arranged to Put on the Artcraft Picture, Featuring Mary Pickford, for Two-Week Runs

SPREADING out from New York City where five theatres are this week presenting Mary Pickford's newest production, "Less Than the Dust," Artcraft Pictures Corporation points to nearly eighty theatres which have booked the new superior Mary Pickford pictures for runs of from one to three weeks. The New Grand Central in St. Louis, of which William Sievers is the owner, and Clune's Broadway, in Los Angeles, are the houses where the forthcoming series of Pickford pictures are to run three weeks.

In nine cities, at least, one theatre has arranged for engagements of two weeks each. In another two theatres under the same management will have "Less Than the Dust," and its successors one week apiece. Ohio and Massachusetts lead their sister States in a tie for first honors, each having nine theatres on the honor roll.

As a territory New England is at the head, New Haven and Providence contributing to the total of eleven, with the Olympia and the Emery, respectively. In the Bay State the Globe, of Boston, leads with two weeks, followed for one week each by the Olympia, in New Bedford; Park, Worcester; Bijou, Springfield; Shea's, Fitchburg; Strand, Lynn; Merrimack Square, Lowell; Salem, Salem; and Orpheum, in Malden.

The Strand, Broadway and Academy of Music, in Manhattan; Keeney's and the Century, in Brooklyn, set the pace for New York State that is followed by the Gordon houses in Rochester, the Regent and Garden, and the Strand, in Syracuse. Worthy of comment is the fact that there are eight Strand theatres on the Artcraft "big" list.

Both the La Salle and the Bijou Dream, in Chicago, will run "Less Than the Dust" for two weeks. The other 14-day houses are the Stillman, Cleveland; Majestic, Detroit; Strand, Denver; Columbia, Portland, Ore.; Goliseum, Seattle; and Portola, San Francisco. In addition to the Stillman the Metropolitan and Knickerbocker are week stands in Cleveland. Ohio's other representatives are the Strand, Akron; Dome, Youngstown; Pastime, Columbus; Majestic, Dayton; and Temple, Toledo.

Completing the list are the Stanley, Palace and Belmont, in Philadelphia; Rowland and Clark's Regent, in East Liberty, Pa.; Arcadia, Reading, Pa.; Stanley, Atlantic City; Keeney's, Newark; Garden, Paterson; State Street, Trenton; Queen, Wilmington, Del.; Parkway and Wizard, Baltimore; Columbia, Washington; Granby, Norfolk, Va.; Criterion, Atlanta; Triangle, New Orleans; Hulsey's Queen, in Dallas, and Queen, in Houston, Tex.; Liberty, Detroit; Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids; Apollo, Peoria; Alhambra, Milwaukee; Strand, St. Paul; Strand, Minneapolis; Garden, Des Moines; Orpheum, St. Joseph; Twelfth Street theatre, Kansas City; Strand, Omaha; Pike, Colorado Springs; Beauty, Butte; the Turner and Dahnken theatres, in Oakland and Sacramento; and the Cabrilla, San Diego.

Canada, in which the Mary Pickford invasion is rapidly assuming considerable proportions, furnishes to the total the Regent in Toronto, the Dominion in Winnipeg, and the St. Denis in Montreal.

Right up to the time of release of "Less Than the Dust," the sixteen Artcraft exchanges continued to pour into the New York offices their stream of contracts. Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, is confident that following the first showing all over the country, there will be an even more widespread scramble to book the new Mary Pickford productions. Eighty prints are ready for any legitimate demands that may be made on them, and Artcraft is prepared to increase this total if necessary.

NEW MUTUAL OFFICES IN TORONTO

The new K. E. S. E. Film Combine has for its local manager in Toronto, D. Cooper, who has taken over offices at 15 Wilton avenue, formerly occupied by the Mutual Company. Mr. Cooper will also represent this firm in Montreal.

The Mutual Company have moved all their offices under one roof. The new situation is on Lombard street, Toronto. C. B. Price is the general manager.

Los Angeles, Nov. 23.

Manager Dave Bershon of the Universal California Exchange has decided upon a campaign to see that Universal films get into every city and town in his territory. The first move toward putting this plan into practice, is the sending of Joseph Goldberg, a salesman, on a trip of four months. His itinerary provides that he will visit eighty-four towns in Southern California and Arizona. Some of these it is believed, do not at this time have theatres, but it falls to Goldberg's duties to arrange for showing of pictures which means the selling of necessary equipment. If there are not suitable buildings in the smaller towns, an attempt will be made to arrange with schools or churches to show the pictures.

Supreme Feature Film Company, a corporation of fifty thousand dollars capital, all of which is paid up, has been organized by D. S. Markowitz, former manager Universal California Film Exchange. Herbert Salesanger, an Oakland real estate man is president. Two offices will be operated. One exchange will be located on the tenth floor of the Knickerbocker Building, Los Angeles, and the other in the Pacific Building at San Francisco. The firm has purchased rights for California, Arizona and Nevada on the two features, "Idle Wives" and "The Unborn." They made their first booking for the former subject with the Garrick theatre, Los Angeles, where the film played two weeks to good business. This will open in their San Francisco territory at the Portola theatre on November 5. Their other subject has played its initial engagement at the Empress theatre, San Francisco, for two weeks.

Selznick Picture Closes Two-Week Run

The first Selznick picture released starring Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law," has closed a two weeks' engagement at Tally's Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, where a new record for receipts for the house were made. The attendance was not as large during the two weeks as drawn by other previous programs, but as Manager T. L. Tally increased the prices for this attraction, the receipts were far in excess of the previous high mark. This attraction was booked through Sol Lesser's All Star Feature Exhange, and Manager Irving Lesser of the Los Angeles branch, has made solid bookings for the subject for the next six or eight weeks. The picture is next to play at the Pickwick, San Diego, for a solid week, and later will go to the Opera House San Bernardino; Regent, Riverside; Palace, Long Beach; Graug, Bakersfield; Wyatt, Redlands; Potter, Santa Barbara, and then to Phoenix, Arizona, for seven theatres of the Phoenix Amusement Company. The list includes the finest theatres in Southern California.

The Nestor Comedy Company did not work this week because of the illness of the leading comedians Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. When they are able to return to work, Edith Roberts is to become their leading woman, succeeding Priscilla Dean who has been transferred to the direction of Fred Kelsey, and for a time will be seen in dramatic subjects.

The girl refuses Lem for a husband, and then he is arrested. Before execution the sheriff learns of the mistake, and liberates Lem after arresting the girl's father. With a gun the barber holds the mob at bay while the father escapes, with the threat of "String me up in his place—but some of you will go a long time without shaving if you do!" Harry Holden is the sheriff, Mina Cunard the bully's daughter, and Harry Griffith the bully and highwayman. The story is an original by Harvey Gates, a U staff writer.

Imagine a gang of cow punchers prepared to welcome the new owner of the ranch where they are employed when the new boss comes and for the first time they learn it is a woman, and you have a small part of the kick to the western comedy being made in two reels by Director George Marshall. Neal Hart, Joe Rickson, Tom Grimes, Bud Osborne, Bill Gillis, Pedro Leone, and all the other of the U collection of "yippers," riders, and ropers, serve to make life miserable for Countess Du Cello, the new boss, until they decide that one shall marry her and thus relieve the others of unpleasant everyday events. The groom is selected by lots, and is nerved up by the plentiful supply of squirrel whiskey. The title is "Double Crossing Cupid."

Hobart Henley for the first time in his screen career, last week experienced the work of directing and not playing in a picture, when he was in charge of making "June Madness," a two-reel subject, which gives Roy Stewart an excellent part. Henley has been in pictures almost four years and in that time has appeared in upwards of a hundred subjects, many of which he has directed. His most recent photoplay has an unusual story written by Willis-Woods. The principal character is a woman hater, who rather than serve as best man for a friend, goes west to investigate a supposed worthless mine. He is held up by a "woman-bandit" and robbed of his money and jewelry.

Arriving at the mine owner's place he finds in the owner's daughter, a decidedly different girl, who causes him to change his opinion of her sex. That evening he discovers she is wearing the ring the bandit relieved him of, and accuses her which brings out the confession that she accepted it that afternoon from her lover, a cowpuncher, and they are to elope on the morrow. The man starts back to the village to cause the arrest of the highwayman, but enroute he is held up by the girl, and while her lover is fighting for his liberty as a result of a note sent him by the girl to serve as a warning but instead gave information to officers, decide their lives would be incomplete without each other. Gypsy Hart is the girl, and Frank Brownlee the cowpuncher.

An adventuress attempts to steal the affections of the sweetheart of her daughter whom she abandoned years before, serves as the principal feature of the program subject, "Leone's Daughter," being filmed by U Director Allan Holubar. There are two periods to the story, the first being when the adventuress' daughter is a small child and becomes the adopted daughter of a bachelor physician. When grown she falls in love with a young man of questionable past but the adventuress, not knowing the true identity of the girl, wins the youth from her, and later the girl is happy for she learns of the love of her foster father for her. Director Holubar appears in the leading role—that of the physician,—and has an exceptionally strong cast consisting of Francelia Billington as the girl, Maude George the adventuress, Little Zoe Rae, Paul Byron, Mrs. Frank Whitting and Charles Cummings.

"The Rented Man"

"The Rented Man," is the name given a child picture made by Ruth Ann Baldwin, with Francis Marion and Elizabeth Janes in the featured parts. A child, left in the care of a housekeeper, by his parents, when chided by a neighbor's little girl because he did not have a father, induces a man who rooms in the same house to be his daddy at so much rent per week, which ultimately brings about the marriage of the child's mother and the man. The grown-ups of the single reeler are M. K. Wilson, Claire McDowell and George Pearce.

In "The Vegetarian," a single reel comedy produced by Capt. Leslie T. Peacock, a dominating wife causes suffering in the household when she decides that all shall be vegetarians. After many attempts to bring meat to the home, the husband finally causes the local newspaper to carry a scare story concerning the new disease in Russia, the "ricketts," caused by a vegetable diet. The article explains that victims are seized with a severe shaking and their faces are covered with blotches. This disease appears at the home and iodine works wonders on all, including the wife. Then steaks, chops and roasts are again added to the menu of the home. This company has also filmed "Repeating the Honeymoon," the principals in both being Al McKinnon, Eileen Sedgwick, Eugene Walsh and Charles King.

Joe, the Universal chimpanzee, is the only member of the cast for "After Midnight," a single reel comedy being produced by Zoo Superintendent Rex Roselli. The chimp impersonates a "jag" returning home in an intoxicated condition.

Ruth Stonehouse is to hear the word "mother" many times during the day in the future, for she has adopted a little six year old orphan boy named Raymond.

William Beaudine, who for three months has been making Joker Comedies at Universal City, last week accepted an offer of the company, and signed a three year contract. His most recent production is "Trunks and Trouble" in which all the regular members of the company enjoy jitney rides in an exact model of the first automobile made. This is a one reel comedy.

A change has been made with respect to the five reel production "The Reward of the Faithless," by which Betty Schade, who has been seen in Universal films for the past three years, was given the star part. Originally it was intended this should be taken by Cleo Madison, but she was transferred to another director. Wedgwood Nowell plays the lead opposite, and Claire DuBrey has an important part.

George Bronson-Howard, the author who wrote the stories for the Yorke Norroy series, has been placed in charge of the company, and is now directing the making of the second episode which features Kingsley Benedict.

Owing to the absence of Lee Moran, who is ill, Director Louis Chaudet is filming a comedy featuring Eddie Lyons and Edith Roberts. This has been titled "Sailing At Four," and is from scenario by Bess Meredyth.

Improvements at Selig Zoo

A number of improvements are being made at the Selig Polyscope zoo which will greatly add to the beauty of this remarkable public park. The improvements include new elephant houses, extension of enclosure around the entire grounds, the moving of the aviary to a more conspicuous place in the park, and extension of the lawns to cover every spot of the thirty-two acres included in the zoo. General Manager James McGee is also causing the construction of a dam above the property to prevent floods from heavy rains, which in the past have caused damage to the property. Last year during the rainy season, the zoo lost many of its valuable birds and some smaller animals when they were drowned by flood waters.

Al Green, who for three years served as assistant to Director Colin Campbell, and who has made several subjects under his own direction, has been called to Chicago, where he will produce three and five reel pictures. He left for the east last week, and was accompanied by Vivian Reed and Charles LeMoyne as his leading players, and Harry Newman as cameraman. Before returning to the coast, Director Green and the company will go to Mississippi where they will film exteriors for several southern stories. The titles of the plays to be filmed under the direction of Green are not known at the western studio.

A new two or three reel subject titled "The Golden Thought," is now in production at the Selig studio under the direction of Tom Mix, who with Victoria Forde, play the principal parts. There is a prelude to this picture in which Eugenia Besserer appears as the mother, and little Lillian Wade and Roy Clark her children. A number of years elapse, and Mix takes the part of the grown-up son, and Lillie Clark the daughter. Victoria Forde takes the role of the owner of a western saloon, dance and gambling resort.

It has been announced that an eight reel subject based upon several big blackmailing "enterprises" to be known as "Beware of Strangers," will be filmed at the Selig zoo. Director Colin Campbell will be in charge of the making of this picture, but as yet the entire cast has not been selected. The story is spoken of as an expose of the methods employed by high-class crooks, and the principal character is the man who owns an organization known as the International Cigar Company, which in reality is an international crime syndicate.

Louis Joseph Vance, who is writing the serial "Patria" for the International Film Corporation, arrived in Los Angeles last week to arrange for the making of additional episodes for this subject. Mrs. Vernon Castle and members of the cast were retained in the east in order to complete episodes started there. Mr. Vance has been busy viewing sites for studios and vacant producing plants, and within a few days will make known the location of the first International studio in the west. His staff here includes Jacques Jaccard, director; Jack Wells, assistant; and Henri Vallejo, cameraman.

Bess Meredyth, manager of the scenario department of the Meaney Exchange, has added to her duties the representation of authors, and will look after the selling of motion picture rights of the works of George Bronson-Howard, Samuel G. Blythe and other well-known writers.

Will M. Ritchey, editor Balboa scenario department, has gone to New York where he will write future episodes of Pathe-Balboa serials. It will be of advantage to be near the releasing office, and make possible the reading of all scripts prior to the time they are put into production.

Rolin at Work on Plumber Story

The Rolin players, under the direction of Hal Roach, are now filming a plumber's story featuring Harold Lloyd as Lonesome Luke, and Bebe Daniels. This consists of two reels.

It has been announced by General Manager Whiting that the Rolin Company has made a three year contract for the making of comedies for the Pathe program which becomes effective at once. This long term agreement was made as the result of the quality of all Rolin-made comedies which have been released by Pathe for more than a year.

Alice Lake (Keystone)

The Rolin studio is undergoing a change which will make it possible for the company to work during the rainy season. The entire diffusing system is being waterproofed. Another improvement being added is the addition of more than two thousand dollars' worth of stock sets.

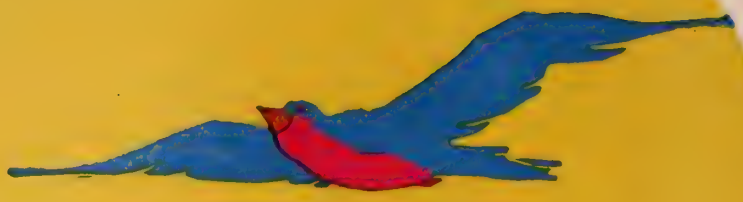
The Rolin Company has added two new members to their organization; David Voorhees, said to be eight-one inches in height and as lean as the beanpole of fable fame, and Arthur Harrison.

Charles Spencer Chaplin and Mutual players have begun the filming of a roller-skating rink story. The script provides that each one of the troop shall become proficient in the art of retaining their equilibrium, and the stage at the studio has been the scene of many tumbles that will not appear on the screen. Eric Campbell, the six-foot-two heavyweight, is reported to have ruined one section of the flooring, and other members are nursing bruises which in some instances require meals served from the mantelpiece. General Manager H. P. Caulfield is putting in all his time preventing the artists from completely destroying the plant.

Alice Lake, who all of a sudden has risen to stardom, playing leads opposite Roscoe Arbuckle in Keystone comedies, entered upon her motion picture career with the Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn. For quite a time the vivacious and pretty little actress did small parts for this company, playing chiefly in comedies under the direction of Wally Van and Sidney Drew.

When Roscoe Arbuckle started production at Fort Lee, New Jersey, last summer Miss Lake applied for a position and was accepted. The first Keystone in which she appeared was "The Moonshiners," and in two subsequent release, namely "The Waiter's Ball" and "A Reckless Romeo," she made decided successful appearances.

When the time came for Arbuckle to depart for Los Angles, he was in need of a leading lady and with the consent of Mack Sennett, Miss Lake went West.



BLUEBIRD

UNUSUAL in story, treatment and plot development the BLUEBIRD Photoplay, "The Price of Silence," is convincing evidence of the merit of the widely-known BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's The Thing."

Realizing the importance of good acting in the production of an even performance, the stars—Dorothy Phillips and a brilliant supporting cast were chosen because of their suitability to portray the characters perfectly. Thus you get a STAR play and STAR Players as well.

The plot of the drama deals with the life of a young woman who bears the burden of the tragic romance of her early years. It is vivid, human, appealing, wholesome and inspiring. Staged with convincing realism it is a perfect achievement of the silent drama.

Every week BLUEBIRD advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post carry the story of BLUEBIRD photoplays to ten million readers, the cream of the moving picture patronage of the nation. You can share profitably in this tremendous publicity by showing BLUEBIRDS in your theatre. Book through your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

New Laws and Court Decisions

This department is designed to keep the industry informed of all news concerning new or projected laws, Federal, State, County or Municipal, that may affect the business, and all events involving any branch of the trade with the authorities in all sections of the country

Pennsylvania Censors Again Emphasizing Their Old Poster Examination Decrees

WELL, here they are at it again. The Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. An order has been issued by the Board that all papers connected with new films must be sent to the Board or otherwise the film certificate will be withheld.

Heretofore it was only in isolated cases that the paper on the films was called for, but hereafter it is said the posters and other advertising matter must be sent with the film to be censored. It is understood that a certificate will not be issued for the film until this ruling concerning paper has been complied with.

The Pittsburgh film men, both exchange and exhibitors, favor a movement to go into the courts to enjoin the censors from putting into effect such a sweeping ruling and it is up to the film men of the entire state to test the legality of the order.

Newsstands are permitted to show magazines and other books which contain pictures that would not be permitted in any film, and this matter of discrimination would certainly not be upheld by the courts.

Why is it that the exchanges and exhibitors do not take a more active stand against the censors? The many films that are ruined by their work is enough to cause them to lose their temper times without number, but still that does not get them anywhere and the cutting of pictures continues worse as time passes.

The exchangemen are powerless under the existing laws to regulate the matter and must abide by the work of the board. Some of the best pictures on the market to-day are kept out of Pennsylvania as a result of the action of the State Board of Censors, and exchangemen are highly incensed.

Court Rules Sunday Shows Illegal

A DECISION, branding Sunday motion picture shows illegal, was handed down by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department, at Albany on Wednesday, November 22. The decision resulted from a "test case" in which Leroy H. Bender, an Albany exhibitor, was tried for violating a local ordinance prohibiting Sunday exhibitions.

Bender was discharged on a writ of Habeus Corpus, Supreme Court Justice Morschauser of Poughkeepsie, holding that the law had not been violated. His decision was based on a ruling of the Appellate Division, Second Department, in 1908, that the Sunday law did not apply to moving pictures.

Last Tuesday's decision conflicts with previous decisions, but inasmuch as Associate Justice John Wodward did not agree with the decision of his four colleagues, an appeal can be taken to the Court of Appeals.

The opinion of the four Justices whose ruling decided the case was written by Justice Lyon and contains, in part, the following:

"If the existing law is in any way unjust or unsatisfactory, the remedy is by application to the Legislature to modify or annul it, not by application to the court, whose sole duty is to construe it and say what the Legislature meant by passing it."

The decision was based upon seven words in the statue, "or other public sports, exercises or shows." The statute refers directly to hunting, fishing, gaming, etc. It will remain for the Court of Appeals to decide whether picture shows are to be classed with Sunday hunting, fishing and gaming.

New York exhibitors do not view the Albany decision with alarm. They will not be affected unless the Court of Appeals should uphold the ruling. S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto, said that the movies are such an important factor in the Sunday life of New York that the people would not tolerate a Sunday closing law. More than 1,000,000 people attend greater New York's theatres on Sunday, he said, and closing them would entail a loss of more than $150,000 a week.

Police Commissioner Woods said that no action would be taken here until he was officially informed of the decision and its application in New York.

Frederick H. Elliott, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, told a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS that the decision, while not viewed with especial alarm by the association, would be taken up in detail at the meeting of the Board of Directors on November 29. His personal opinion, he said, was that the exhibitors should stop going into court to settle such matters as this, but that they should go directly to the Legislature.

"If the exhibitors will get together," he said, "their case can be presented forcefully to the various State legislatures, and their demands will probably be met. The Albany decision is timely, for it happens that Sunday closing ordinances are to be one of the main topics of Wednesday's Board meeting."

Mr. Elliott said that this meeting would be attended by representatives from the Pacific Coast and the Middle West, who were confronted with the same problem.

HIGH-HANDED ACTION OF DEPUTY SHERIFF LOSES "THE HIGH HAND," IN SIX REELS, TO PITTSBURGHERS

The Weiland Film Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., will not get "The High Hand," a six-reel feature film, as soon as officials of the company expected.

Benjamin Blumberg, of Terre Haute, acting for the Celebrated Players Film Company, of Chicago, attached the film recently, following a show at the Crescent theatre, Terre Haute.

Jack Roberts, deputy sheriff of Vigo County, took charge of the film and the Weiland Company is to be sued for $100 in damages for breach of contract. Ben Van Borssum, owner of the Crescent, who figures in the case to the extent of showing the picture at the theatre, is guiltless of wrongdoing

The Weiland Company is said to have the State rights of Pennsylvania and two other Eastern States. Instead of confining its operation to that territory, it is alleged that the company has been encroaching on the territory belonging to other men, and the suit has been instituted to prevent further encroachments.

BIRMINGHAM SUNDAY LAW HAS EXPIRED

The city Moving Picture Ordinance, regulating the Sunday opening of photoplay houses in Birmingham, Ala., went out of existence with the injunction, according to the authorities, and a new ordinance will be necessary before any referendum election can be held. October 1 was the date set by the old ordinance for the election, and it being impossible to change the date in the old ordinance, a new petition and ordinance will be required.

'FRISCO LICENSE TAX MAY BE ABOLISHED

The recently adopted ordinance doing away with the censorship of motion pictures at San Francisco, may have also done away with the necessity of paying a license tax.

The City Attorney has expressed an opinion that such is the case, but a definite ruling on the question has not been made. It will soon be time, however, to collect the regular fee, and it is anticipated that the matter will be definitely decided before then. The annual revenue from this ordinance will be required before anything definite may be announced.

EVELYN GREELEY FINISHES A DIXIE SUBJECT

Evelyn Greeley, who recently completed her first feature vehicle, "Tempest and Sunshine," will finish her work in the second Dixie Film release, this week. It will be a filmization of the sentimental ballad, "Just a Song at Twilight."

The Dixie Film Corporation, with headquarters at Chicago, and studio facilities in Florida, sponsored both productions.

Evelyn Greeley, part heir to the great Greeley estate, sought film fame in a somewhat different manner.

She came to New York over a year ago and accepted parts as an extra girl at the Equitable and World Film studio. Without making her identity known, she studied the various angles of screen work, and would then go to see the finished product on the screen. She followed the director's moves at the studio, then watched and weighed the result on the screen. And within six months, was selected as the featured player by the Dixie Film Corporation.

Within the past week, Miss Greeley has been chosen by a well-known program head to play opposite one of the principal male stars.

"Tempest and Sunshine" and "Just a Song at Twilight" will both reach the trade within the month.

FRED MURPHY HOLDS FIVE-REELERS IN CONTEMPT

General Manager Fred B. Murphy, of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, states that in his opinion the solution of the present disturbed conditions in the motion picture world with its attendant high cost difficulty, lies in the supplying and distribution of really good one, two and three reel pictures.

"There is only one thing I can say, and say that most emphatically," said Mr. Murphy. "The moving pictures business is a five and ten cent business first, last and always. In this belief I am thoroughly sincere. The great fortunes of the business were made when it was of the dime and nickel order.

"There is hardly a story that is now being told in the multiple reel feature that cannot be told with greater force and convincing power in one or two reels. Yet the tremendous cost of five, six or more reels is freely indulged in by the producers and foisted upon the public at great rental cost to the exhibitor and higher prices of admission charged to the public, all for the boast of bigness. And the cost of features with its attendant search for effects and rapidly diminishing supply of scenario material is getting greater and greater. The tax of that extra cost is having its deleterious effect upon all branches.

WORLD FILM ALTERS A TITLE

William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, is a firm believer in the supreme necessity of good names for motion pictures. He has just substituted the title, "Broken Chains" for the release formerly called "The New South," which stars Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell.

"My Official Wife," Vitagraph, in Demand

Reissue of Successful Production Starring Clara Kimball Young Sought After by Many Exhibitors

ALTHOUGH the announcement that Greater Vitagraph would reissue "My Official Wife," with Clara Kimball Younge, Earle Williams, Harry Morey and a host of other Vitagraph favorites in the cast is but a few days old, several hundred requests by mail and wire have been received asking for reservations and open dates.

This unexpected response to the bare announcement of this reissue is most satisfactory to Walter W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, and to the exchange managers.

Every star in "My Official Wife" has a large personal following. The popularity of Earle Williams, Harry Morey, Rose Tapley, Mary Anderson and Eulalie Jensen is so assured as to be a matter of record.

The production is to be a de luxe edition, embellished with beautiful titles and otherwise brought strictly up-to-date.

Much Ground Covered Both Here and Abroad by Cameramen

THE Gaumont Company announces that there will be two installments of the Mutual photo-novel, "The Vampires," during December. The first will be the third episode, "The Ghost," released December 7. A week later "The Dead Man's Escape" will be issued. Each episode is complete in three acts. There are nine episodes altogether, the final one not being released until January 18.

The first of the single-reel releases is "Reel Life," No. 31, December 3. It will contain pictures of a passenger-carrying aeroplane, "Modish Coiffures," dressed by a Fifth avenue hair dresser, the prune industry in California, and how to dance the Biltmore waltz.

"Tours Around the World," No. 5, released December 5, will take spectators for a visit to Venice, Senegal, France's West Africa colony, and Jersey, the largest of Britain's Channel Islands.

The fourth Gaumont single-reel of the week is the Mutual Weekly.

The second week in December opens with "Reel Life," No. 32. This release of December 10 shows the olive industry in California, how to preserve the teeth to insure good health, how turpentine is made from waste timber, and how to dance the Two Two, a novelty dance.

"Tours Around the World," No. 6, released December 12, show the Nile River, Carcassonne, a feudal town of France, and Lake Lucerne, Switzerland.

"See America First," No. 66, released December 13, shows Pasadena, Cal., known as the "city of roses." On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, animated by Harry Palmer. The fourth single-reel of the week is the Mutual Weekly.

ENTHUSIASTIC BROOKLYN CROWD SEES VIOLA DANA

A record audience greeted Viola Dana, the Metro-Columbia star, when she appeared in person at the Palace theatre, Brooklyn, recently. It had been announced that she would be present at the showing of her new picture, "The Gates of Eden."

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Independent Distributing Concern Formed in Denver

THE Supreme Photoplays Corporation has been formed in Denver, Colorado, to distribute "superlative photodramas." This distributing organization will cover the states of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

The president of the new concern is Earl H. Radetsky, a well-known Denver business man. Louis Goldstein, who has been associated with the Universal Company since it was first organized, is secretary and general manager. The sales manager is Leslie Thompson, who was for a long time connected with Paramount and Universal in the Northwest, and is generally accredited a business getter.

Reproduced herewith is the formal announcement of the Supreme Photoplays Corporation:

"It is the intention of this concern to exploit the super-productions in this territory. We have ample capital and facilities to put over the biggest kind of productions. Our knowledge of the territory in which we shall operate is based upon eight years' experience, and we are in a position to afford independent productions of merit an outlet in this territory."

Omaha Exchanges Active

THE activity of Omaha's exchange managers is always a safe barometer of business for a large part of the middle west. If they have a speculative, excited appearance, business isn't what it should be, but if they have a happy, busy experience, and if they can't say two words without ten employes rushing in with this or that telegram, or this or that question; if they say, "Oh, yes, I'll be here at 9:30 o'clock to-night," it is a sign they are enjoying prosperity.

Harry Heyman, manager of the World branch in Omaha, recently ran out of film boxes. After vainly trying to borrow some from the other exchanges—so short of film boxes they were holding their breath—he was about to give up in despair, when a big shipment of films was brought in by the expressman. "It is service, and quality," he declared, breathing easier. "We're having the biggest run we ever had out of this office."

Curley Calvert, manager of the Bluebird bureau, sits up nights figuring just how many minutes it will take to get a film from one exchange to another. He is almost running short of releases, and fears he will have to tell some exhibitor some day that there isn't a Bluebird in the house. Last week Calvert started to keep a file of letters complimenting his pictures, he said, intending to send the nice little collection to the New York office. When the letters overflowed the garage, piled up in the basement, crowded the employes in the poster department and threatened the repair department, Calvert declares he sent them by an extra freight train, leaving it to the home office to see how popular Bluebird's are in Omaha's territory.

J. P. Gruwell, representing George Kleine's office at Kansas City, went through the Omaha territory recently, and declared prosperity met him everywhere. He found newer and better houses, and better and more prosperous exhibitors than on his last trip, he said.

UNITY SALES BUYS ASSOCIATED EXCHANGE IN KANSAS CITY

The Unity Sales Corporation announces the purchase of the Associated Film Service, which has been operating in Kansas City, Mo., for some time. Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of Unity, concluded the arrangements during the trip which he is now making through the western cities.

G. B. Howe, who has been the general manager of the Associated, will be manager of the new exchange for Unity.

The exchange will be known as the Unity Film Corporation and, besides the "Mutt and Jeff" and "Katzenjammer" releases, which the old exchange has been handling, they will also take over the output of the Unity Sales Corporation, including "The Yellow Menace," "The Lottery Man," "The Marriage Bond;" also "The Land Just Over Yonder," "Humanizing Mr. Winsby," and the other special releases now being produced for Unity by the Dudley Motion Picture Manufacturing Company.

EXCHANGES IN BUTTE, MONTANA, REPORT EXCELLENT CONDITIONS

Manager Walt Coughlin, of Mutual, Butte, Mont., reports business jumping away up, and since putting on a roadman, extra help has been employed in the shipping department.

Manager Tipton, of Metro, Butte, also reports capacity business that makes close and heavy bookings necessary. With "Tip" on the road supplementing his work, Booker Todd has to limp to keep up.

Manager Hudson, of Universal, Butte, is not saying anything. He hasn't time. Business keeps him at the office nearly every night until late hours.

Pathe's force in Butte works every night, and business is good enough so that shortage of shipping cases made it necessary to borrow of other exchanges. Manager Coughlin graciously loaned his competitors a couple of cans. In this connection, it is pleasing to note that with competitors in the same business, the Butte film exchange managers are glad to do a good turn for one another.

KLEINE OPENS BRANCH AT CLEVELAND

George Kleine announces the opening of a new exchange at Cleveland, O., for the purpose of handling the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service in that territory. Exhibitors in that section were formerly served by the Kleine branch at Pittsburgh, but the growth of Ohio business has necessitated two exchanges in that state, which is now divided between the office at Cincinnati and the new Cleveland branch. Manager Harry Reavey is in charge of the new exchange which is located in the Sincere Building, at East 4th street and Prospect avenue.

ROSENBAUM FOR SEATTLE ARTCRAFT EXCHANGE

Arthur S. Kane has placed H. G. Rosebaum in charge of the Seattle, Wash., exchange of the Artcraft Film Corporation at 1214 Fourth avenue. Mr. Rosebaum will handle the Mary Pickford pictures beginning with "Less Than Dust" in the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. Mr. Rosebaum is widely known among the exchanges in the West. He opened the Triangle exchange in the same territory.

CRESSEY ENLARGES OFFICES

The J. A. Cressey Interests, distributors of Clara Kimball Young productions, and other Selznick releases, have secured the entire second floor of 1815½ Main street, and have equipped one of the most elaborate suite of offices in Dallas.

J. Davis is now in charge of the booking department for the J. A. Cressey Interests. Mr. Davis is well-known in that territory having been bookkeeper for the Fox Film Corporation, also when Mr. Byrd took charge of "The Fall of a Nation," Mr. Davis took charge of the bookkeeping department for the company.

"UNBORN" RIGHTS FOR TWO STATES BRINGS FIFTEEN THOUSAND

Frank Zambreno, one of the directors of the Eagle Film Company and Billy Dunn, president of that organization, have purchased the state rights to "Unborn" for Illinois and Wisconsin for $15,000, and will distribute it independent of their Eagle interests.

"IGNORANCE" IS COMPLETED BY PRIVATE FEATURE FILM

"Ignorance," a morality picture in six-reels, has just been completed under the direction of J. A. Fitzgerald for the Private Feature and Film Manufacturing Company, of Cleveland.

Earl Metcalfe, former Lubin star and director, plays the leading role, that of a fearless and upright District Attorney. Strong in the supporting cast of "Ignorance" are Eleanor Black as the girl who becomes the victim, because of her ignorance of the social evil, Ethel Tully as the society girl, and Arthur W. Mathews is the leader of the underworld. Mr. Fitzgerald also plays the role of "Red, the Peddler," described by the author as "the meanest and lowest thing on God's green earth."

ONE MILLION FEET OF FILM RUINED IN UNIVERSAL FIRE, CHICAGO

One million feet of moving picture films, worth from $150,000 to $200,000, were destroyed in a spectacular fire in the loop, Chicago, early in the morning of Wednesday, November 15.

The burned films were the property of the Laemmle Film Service Company, 205-7 West Washington street. Carl Laemmle, pioneer in the moving picture business, is president of the company. The Laemmle concern occupied the second and third floors of the building.

The fire started in the stock room of the film service company shortly after 5 o'clock. Explosion after explosion, as the highly inflammable films caught fire, followed.

A. L. Sherman, the night manager, and seven men were at work in the film service.

POPE TO SEE "CIVILIZATION"

Some time ago it was announced that Thos. H. Ince, the producer of "Civilization," was prepared to grant facilities to his Holiness the Pope to witness "Civilization."

With the departure for Europe of Frank P. Ward, of the Harper Film Corporation, who bears letters of introduction from officials of the United States Government, and the Spanish Ambassador to the Courts of Madrid and to leading personages in France, Portugal and England, the arrangements for the special showing of the picture at the Vatican will be advanced a stage.

FRANK IN STRAIGHT ROLE FOR METRO

J. Herbert Frank will appear as an everyday American, a traveling salesman, in "The End of the Tour," Lionel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro-Columbia feature. On account of his aptitude at make-up, the actor is frequently cast to play foreigners of various nationalities. With Mme. Petrova in "The Orchid Lady," an early Metro-Popular Plays and Players release, Mr. Frank plays Dr. Mendoza, a representative of a South American republic, but in "The End of the Tour," he rejoices in the opportunity of being a plain Yankee.

Suffrage Is a Force in "War Brides"

Parallel Is Drawn Between Australian Women's Votes Against Conscription and a Similar Condition in Selznick's New Picture

FOR the first time in the world's history women's votes have decided an all-important war issue in a country that is one of the self-governing units in a mighty empire.

In the nation-wide balloting in Australia last week the voters turned in a heavy majority against conscription. The women of New South Wales and Queensland rolled up the heavy negative vote.

By a coincidence Herbert Brenon's first Selznick Picture of Nazimova in "War Brides," now playing an engagement at the Broadway theatre, has as its very basis the demand of women for equal voting rights in national government whereby they can approve or veto the plunging of their country into war.

"War Brides" has undergone expansion since it was first seen by the American public as a vaudeville playlet. Herbert Brenon's film makes "War Brides" not merely the story of a women who defied a monarch and his empire in the name of motherhood, but an accurate and large picture of the domestic and economic effects of warfare upon the women, children and unfit civilians at home.

"The Masque of Life" Is Full of Thrills

Picture Marketed by Signet Film Corporation Begins Engagement at La Salle Theatre, Chicago, and Draws as Well as at the Park, New York

THAT the American public likes thrills and good old-fashioned heart interest stories has been amply demonstrated by the success of "The Masque of Life," the film introduced to America by J. L. Kempner of the Signet Film Corporation, 220 West 42nd street, New York City. Mr. Kempner first saw "The Masque of Life" in Europe, where it was called "The Circus of Death," and was in ten-reel form. He secured the rights for America, and re-editing the film for the American market. The result has been that the ten-reel picture, even then filled with action, has by means of the trimming down to seven, become tense in practically every moment when it is on the screen. Though made in Italy, it has none of the faults which are usual with foreign made films, as the parts are invariably acted with moderation, and the directors have never allowed the spectacular of the film to carry them away from the brilliant love story which gives its basis.

Rita Jolivet Getting Clubby With "Pete" in "The Masque of Life"

The particular novelty of the film is supplied by the acting abilities of Pete Montebello, a chimpanzee with human intelligence, and acting ability. Little Pete supplies a good many of the thrills of the film, including the scaling of a lightning rod wire on a 360 foot tall chimney, carrying with him a real live baby, but what is even more difficult, Pete has to play an emotional role, and when the little girl is grieving over the death of her child, Pete sympathizes with her and actually cries himself.

Never does the film approach the grotesque or repulsive, though the New York papers seem to agree in calling it a "thrill" film. Every one of them mentioned, in addition, its strong story, sumptuous magnificence of production, and the unusually beautiful photographic affects which are introduced. "The Masque of Life" has just begun an engagement at the La Salle theatre, Chicago, where according to critical comment, it is as well liked as it was at the Park theatre, New York.

JUST TO MAKE TALK

By LONGACRE

HOWARD IRVING YOUNG is coming back to Broadway and is bringing with him the entire Seventh Regiment and a trunk full of scenarios written in off-hours down in McAllen, Texas. When he wasn't hatching a picture plot or acting as a private for Uncle Sam, Howard amused himself editing The Rio Grande Rattler, the weekly newspaper published by the New York division of the National Guard. There is a reliable but not authentic report out that Howard will sneak around and see what Broadway looks like after one in the morning.

Both Pearl White and Irene Castle are chasing about in Preparedness serials these days, but it is not true that President Wilson thinks of appointing either or both of them to the post of Secretary of War.

Fred Mace has wired his way to fame. He did it for a dollar. The scores of newspaper extras, the counting and recounting of votes, got on his nerves, and feeling he had a straight hunch, he sent a rhyme to Joseph P. Tumulty, secretary to President Wilson, by wire. It made a hit with Joe, for he gave it to all the press associations, and Mace expects to receive clippings for the next month, and no matter where the Keystone films are shown, it is thought the fans will chant his rhyme to the tune of "Molly-O." Here it is:

Oh, Joseph dear, and did you hear
The "Hughes" that's going around,
They're counting lots of ballots,
But enough cannot be found.
They've counted once, they've counted twice,
They'll count a whole lot more,
But when they finish counting up
'Twill be Wilson four years more.

Reviewers received a severe shock when "The Bugler of Algiers" was shown. Harry Carter appeared and showed no villainous traits at all.

Edward Jose, directing "Pearl of the Army," showed Ralph Kellard the other day the proper way to kiss Pearl White. Ralph wasn't persistent enough for Jose and finally the director sprang out, seized Miss White and planted a kiss on her lips that lasted for a minute and ended in a smack that made the walls blush. "There," he said, "you've been kissing for the Pennsylvania Board of Censors. I want you to kiss for the rest of the United States."

Harold Lloyd vows he will hereafter wear a wrist watch, for while working in a scene for a Rolin-Pathe comedy, he was bitten by a monkey where the watch should have been.

The Lasky studio has a property man named Tate, who because of his speed has been dubbed "Hesi-Tate," all of which will some day cause the loss of blood.

Olga Olonova, who has dropped the Olga altogether, only has a birthday once in seven years, because she was born on the banks of the Nile at the moment a turtle with the likeness of the moon engraved on his shell crept out upon the bank. This turtle bathes perpetually and only dries himself after seven wet years in the Nile. And Olonova can't possibly have a birthday unless he emerges. According to the turtle she is only three years old.

Harold Frederick Rendall is now a proud father. On November 21 Mrs. Rendall presented him with a nine-pound daughter, Gloria. Being original we announce that mother and child are doing very well.

One of the big cigarette manufacturers has applied to Alice Brady for permission to issue a cigarette named after her. "It ought to draw well," wrote the manufacturer. "Pshaw!" exclaimed Miss Brady, in writing by way of reply. "It would only go up in smoke." This was headed "Richardson's Amusement Notes."

Joe Lee, a state's righter, has a brand new feature for review. It's a six-pound boy.

Speaking of Joe, we would like to know how to write the business in which he is interested. Is it State's Rights, State Rights, State's Right, State Right or what?

Here's one on Howard Hickman which that British journal printed.

"I hope you try hard."
"How'ard?"
"You lead in questions of strife?"
"No, in 'Civilization.'"
"A strenuous part; what did you take?"
"I took the Count."

Director Chautard built an elegant Venice scene for Alice Brady's coming picture, "Frou Frou," in Piermont, New York. When the company arrived to take the scene it was discovered that the water was frozen over ever so gently and that snow had fallen. "Emile, bring me my snow shovel," said Alice, as she stepped into the gondola, "I'm liable to need it before we're through Venice."

Imagine the commotion that must have prevailed about Los Angeles film quarters during election night. Wilson or Hughes for the coming four years—and would the Golden State go dry?

The Longacre Lampoon

All the News That Fits, We Print Longacre Square, N. Y., December 9, 1916

EDITORIAL

At the luncheon of the National Board of Review, the remark was passed that everyone admired and sponsored the so-called children's picture except the children. A rather interesting comment this. The producers, out of the goodness of their very hearts and the itching of their very pockets, go to all the trouble of making simple pictures with juveniles in the leading roles. The exhibitors actuated by the same reasons decide to show them and the parents co-operate, and send the children and, after all, the children don't like them.

We, for one, sympathize with the children. The average child is a better critic than the average grown-up when it comes to pictures, and naturally the average child doesn't want to see a foolish story presented rather amateurishly when he can comprehend better stuff. Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Marguerite Clark, Charlie Chaplin and William S. Hart, we wager possess a larger following among the children than any infant prodigy can ever hope to have.

LOCAL NEWS

—Many from here attended the Sc. Clb. ball last wk., it being held at the Tavern Astor, one of the best hostelries not far away from here.

"LIBERTINE" MAKES HIT IN SAN FRANCISCO

"The Libertine," produced by the Triumph Film Corporation with John Mason and Alma Hanlon, and directed by Julius Steger and Joseph A. Golden, has created a sensation at the opening performance in San Francisco at the Empress theatre. Sol L. Lesser, president of the All Star Features Distributors of San Francisco, has wired Mr. Steger that the success of the picture in 'Frisco was nothing short of phenomenal.

Hundreds of people were standing in line all day. The audience applauded at the finish for more than three minutes and the Censors recommended it as one of the greatest moral lessons ever shown on the screen. The first New York showing of the picture will be at the Burland theatre, Bronx, for one week, beginning November 26. Alma Hanlon will appear in person during the engagement. The demand for bookings for "The Libertine" all over the country has established a record.

"THE SPOILERS" ENJOINED IN FOUR STATES

Judge Reid, of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa, Cedar Rapids Division, sitting at Dubuque, Iowa, Friday, November 3, after hearing arguments for two days, directed the attorneys to prepare an order enjoining the Gate City Feature Film Corporation from further exhibiting "The Spoilers" in the States of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri and Kansas. The suit was originally brought on July 5, 1916, by the Selig Polyscope Company. The Friedman Film Corporation offices in Minneapolis, Minn., is now handling the state rights of "The Spoilers" in the territory mentioned.

MONMOUTH FILM SERIES DOING WELL IN ALL STATES

IT is announced by Ike Schlank, president of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, that the Monmouth Film Corporation series, "Jimmie Dale," alias "The Grey Seal," is being booked heavily throughout the country through Unicorn channels. The recent tour of the United States made by Vice-President and General Manager Jules Rubenstein, of the Monmouth concern, produced splendid results. The Jimmie Dale series consists of 16 episodes of two reels each.

PREPARATIONS FOR CHICAGO OPENING OF "INTOLERANCE"

Considerable interest is being shown by Chicago theatre managers in the outcome of the "Intolerance" opening which is now scheduled for November 28. The Colonial theatre has been in the throes of elaborate preparations which indicate that the Griffith film will be put on in style as it was in New York.

Howard Herrick, general press representative for Griffith, and R. Ellis Wales, chief of his technical and research staff, have been in Chicago for some time assisting Mr. Griffith.

New York and Los Angeles are the only cities so far invaded by the big spectacle, which may or may not have considerable effect upon the legitimate theatre business.

The Man Who Bought Rights to "The Crisis"

Westerner Coming to New York to Live, Made Fortune on States Rights of "Birth of a Nation"—Will Repeat with "Crisis"

THE story of Harry A. Sherman, buyer of photoplay productions and state rights—President of Sherman-Elliott Company—and the newest movie millionaire, involves a typical Westerner, yet a product of New England. He was born in Boston in 1884. His elementary education he received in the public schools—his college degree in the University of Hard Knocks.

State right buyers were startled about two years ago by the announcement that Harry Sherman had the rights for "The Birth of a Nation" for seventeen Western states. His road companies carried an orchestra of twenty-five pieces, advance men, electricians, property men, two operators and a projection machine.

It was the opinion of a great many so-called film experts that Sherman was "stung" when he paid a quarter of a million dollars for the rights of these seventeen states. However, Sherman's judgment has been vindicated, and the receipts of the "Birth of a Nation" companies to date total very close to a million and a half dollars. He is now operating four "Ramona" Companies on the same plan in the West, and by the first of the year intends having not less than six companies in this same territory showing the big Selig production, "The Crisis."

Mr. Selig recently projected "The Crisis" for Mr. Sherman, and afterwards said he wanted a quarter of a million dollars for the rights for United States and Canada. Sherman said "You're on," thus completing in record time the biggest individual picture purchase in the history of the industry. In the five weeks that he has been exploiting the sale of territorial rights for "The Crisis" all territory has been disposed of to film men of keen judgment, as the following list will show:

New York State to the Warners; Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia to the Masterpiece Film Company, a corporation headed by H. P. Wolfberg; Sievers the Middle West; Missouri to William Sievers of St. Louis; Michigan to John H. Kunsky of Detroit; a group of seven states to Fred Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky.; a group of three Southern states to the States Rights Company of Jackson, Mississippi; California, Arizona and Nevada to the Warner Film Attractions of San Francisco, and New Jersey to the Master Photo Attractions of Newark, N. J.

Mr. Sherman and his family live in Minneapolis. He intends in the next few weeks to make his permanent residence in New York City, where a man of his calibre belongs. A short time ago, a new feature came into the house of Sherman—the greatest of all—that feature is a baby girl.

"BOUGHT AND PAID FOR" DRAWS WELL IN PHILADELPHIA

FORMER CHAPLIN DIRECTOR IS ENGAGED BY UNICORN

Fritz Wintermeier, who directed Chaplin in "His Night Out," "The Champion," "In the Park," "A Jitney Elopement," and "The Tramp," has been engaged by the Unicorn Film Service Corporation to direct the "Billy West" comedies.

H. M. Miller, manager of the Alcazar theatre, of 69 West Madison street, Chicago, states that during the run of "His Married Life," the crowd was turned away twice during the afternoon, and even as early as ten o'clock in the morning. Mr. Willis reports that M. M. Rubens, manager of the Motion Picture Reporting Service, 814 Schiller Building, Chicago, has rated the picture at 90 per cent., and will also book all the "Billy West" series for all of his houses.

In connection with the "Billy West" series, Ike Schlank, president of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, announces that an extensive advertising campaign will be carried out. This will include newspaper advertising and several novelty "stunts."

EVELYN BRENT TO APPEAR AS A METRO STAR

Evelyn Brent soon is to appear as a Metro star. In less than two years Miss Brent has stepped from the part of an unknown "extra" to that of a star.

Miss Brent was preparing herself for a teacher in the training department of Hunter College here, when she had her first experience in the screen drama. One morning she remained away from the college with several girls and worked as an "extra" in Madame Petrova's play, "The Heart of a Painted Woman," which was being produced at one of the Metro studios. A natural dramatic ability immediately asserted itself which, coupled with the fact that she "screened" remarkably well, brought her to the attention of Madame Petrova. She was offered a small part and from that time on her rise has been spectacular.

OLONOVA IS TWENTY-ONE, BUT ONLY THREE YEARS OLD

Olonova, the famous Russian beauty who has the vampire role in the Consolidated serial "The Crimson Stain Mystery," can celebrate her birthday only once in seven years. Olonova was born on the banks of the Nile, down in Egypt, and on the day of her birth a turtle emerged from the river. It bore a moon on its back. The turtle only comes up for air once in seven years, and hence, according to all superstition, Olonova can only celebrate the day of her birth with the appearance of the Turtle Moon.

PROVEN A POPULAR ATTRACTION BY QUICK RETURNS

Thus early in its career, "Civilization" has entered upon that stage of it which indicates more eloquently than anything else the sterling value of the picture as a popular attraction and money-maker for the exhibitor. After making a run of three consecutive weeks at the Strand theatre, Newark, N. J., it returned to the city for a further run at other theatres. This establishes another record in connection with the production.

Older Manufacturing Firm Makes Announcement

Important Development in Star Exploitation Briefly Outlined by Employer of Chaplin and Others

PRESIDENT JOHN R. FREULER is visiting New York this week for conferences with a number of important picture interests. The establishment of new New York offices in the Longacre region of Broadway will also have his attention.

Mr. Freuler now announces the closing of a contract with Marjorie Rambeau, who is to appear in a series of pretentious productions under the direction of Frank Powell.

J. C. Graham, assistant to the president of the Mutual, assigned to the special commission of employing the biggest motion picture stars available, is making New York the center of his operations. It is Mr. Graham's mission to represent Mutual on Broadway and to conduct negotiations with prospective Mutual stars.

"I want it clearly understood by everybody who has any weight or importance in the picture world, everybody who has recognition, standing, status and ability, that there is nothing too big for the Mutual," said President Freuler.

"If any star or director has something important to submit we are ready to consider it. We are now equipped to put through to a successful conclusion any picture proposition possible. We are not interested in propositions that may be classed as merely 'average' or 'fair.' We want nothing but the big, the best, the preeminent.

"I deem that we have an obligation of service to the motion picture exhibitor and to the motion picture public, and in the execution of that obligation we propose to deliver only the highest attainable entertainment and amusement quality in our product.

"The contract by which Mr. Powell will produce certain remarkable features for our distribution is one of our opening steps. Other important announcements in connection with Powell productions may be expected very shortly.

"An index of our policy has been afforded to the motion picture world by the Chaplin $670.000 contract, which I think I can say with all due modesty, has been about the biggest thing in picture finance concerning any single star in the history of the business. In this connection, as a pointer of policy I may also refer to Mary Miles Minter, Richard Bennett and Margarita Fischer."

The closing of a contract with Miss Rambeau represents a considerable attainment in itself. She has been sought by a number of the other more important motion picture producers. For more than a year she has been weighing alluring propositions.

"I have felt it to be of the most importance to me that the productions in which I am to appear on the picture screens shall be of a fitting character and adequately presented to the theatre and the public," observed Miss Rambeau at the closing conference at which her contract with the Mutual was signed.

She is now appearing in "Cheating Cheaters" at Eltinge theatre in New York. Her motion picture contract will in no way conflict with her work on the speaking stage. It is one of the purposes of the Mutual in establishing big New York studios to make available the services of the important stars of Broadway in Mutual pictures.

MOROSCO COMPLETES "REDEEMING LOVE." WITH KATHLYN WILLIAMS AND THOMAS HOLDING

The completion of "The Redeeming Love" at the Morosco studio and the scheduling of the photoplay for release on the Paramount Program for December 28 marks a double stellar debut. Kathlyn Williams, one of the most popular stars on the screen, makes her debut as a Morosco player, and Thomas Holding, who co-stars with her, appears for the first time under the banner of that producing company. In the case of Miss Williams, the picture represents her first appearance on the Paramount Program.

BUSY DAYS FOR ROBERT WHITTIER, WHO ALTERNATES IN THREE METROS

These are busy days for Robert Whittier. After having been engaged to play Frederick Richie in Ethel Barrymore's screen version of Margaret Deland's great novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie," he stepped into the leading male part of the picturization of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's famous poem, "A Reverie in a Station House," opposite the star, Frances Nelson. No sooner was this important detail arranged than he found that he had also been cast for Viola Dana's forthcoming Metro-Columbia wonderplay, "Threads of Fate," to take the part of an anarchist labor leader. In the three different productions, Mr. Whittier has had to change both his "make-up" and his mental attitude early and often.

Mr. Whittier comes to the picture drama with one of the most finished stage experiences that could be given an actor. He had the privilege of six years of European training, three years of this time being spent at the Grand Guignol in Paris, the home of artistic "thrillers." While there he played in Ibsen's "Ghosts," later appearing at the celebrated Comedie Francaise, an unusual distinction for an actor not a native Frenchman.

Returning to America, Mr. Whittier became affiliated with Philadelphia's Little Theatre, staging the plays and undertaking leading parts. Important parts kept adding to his reputation and he starred in a dramatic version of "Parsifal." Although Mr. Whittier's connection with Metro might be called his first response to the luring click of the picture machine, he really was one of the first stars to enter the field. Fourteen years ago at the request of Thomas Edison his "Parsifal" was screened, and it is still being shown.

QUALITY FILM SERVICE TO DISTRIBUTE FOR MOSS

The Quality Film Service of Pittsburgh has completed arrangements with the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation whereby it will become the exclusive distributor of the one-a-month Moss Feature program in western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

H. A. Lande, manager of the Quality, plans to launch this program for his territory by releasing on the 1st of December "The Power of Evil," written by George Bronson Howard, which has met with success elsewhere. This will be followed by "Boots and Saddles," a screen version of Eugene Walter's play, scheduled for release on the 15th of December. In January the Quality will release a Moss feature with Marie Empress.

HORSLEY PUBLICITY AGAIN IN CHARGE OF POPPE

The publicity and advertising departments of the David Horsley interests are now in charge of Harry H. Recently he was associated with Chester Beecroft in the New York office of the American Film Company.

Next Brenon-Selznick Story Nearly Filmed

Remaining Views of Victor Hugo Tale to Be Photographed in the South Where Imitation Venice Has Been Discovered

HERBERT BRENON has half-completed the second of his Selznick-Pictures productions, which is now announced as "Lucretia Borgia," adapted from Victor Hugo's drama, with Florence Reed in the title part. So speedy has been Brenon's progress on this production that it will be ready for release within the next few weeks. With "War Brides" running at the Broadway theatre, it is not impossible that "Lucretia Borgia" will be completed in time to give Mr. Brenon the distinction of having three of his creations showing concurrently—"War Brides," "A Daughter of the Gods" and "Lucretia Borgia."

William E. Shay, who has appeared in numerous Brenon productions, will be seen as the Duke. The romantic interest in this drama is contributed by Victor Hugo's story, which is to the effect that the one bright spot in the career of horrors of Lucretia Borgia, was her love for a son whose existence was itself unknown to the court in which she lived. This son is played in the Brenon production by Richard Barthelmess, who was "the youngest son" in "War Brides."

Within the next week or ten days, Mr. Brenon will take his entire company to St. Augustine, Fla., where a number of exterior scenes will be made. The action is supposed to take place in Venice, and unrivaled opportunities for beauty of scene are offered in St. Augustine.

There is a current superstition that "the public doesn't want costume plays." Mr. Brenon, however, believes that the public wants good plays, and does not care whether they are so-called "costume plays" or not, so long as they tell interesting stories.

"One trouble with a great many players," says Mr. Brenon, "is that as soon as they don the trappings of centuries gone by, they want to strut and swagger and pose. I don't know—nobody else knows, either—how men and women walked in the fifteenth century, but there is no reason to believe that their gaits were so different from those of men and women walking up and down Broadway to-day. The women may have moved a little more slowly in their court gowns, weighted as they were by jewels and gold and silver brocade. But there is no reason why a drama of these ancient times should take on the aspect of a funeral procession. If a man was in a hurry, he hurried; if he was amused, he laughed; if angry, he frowned; all just about as you and I. I believe that the so-called costume play can be made intensely human and interesting, if we will only devote our attention to bringing out the human qualities of the characters, instead of allowing the gorgeousness of the settings to clog the action. I can at least promise this, 'Lucretia Borgia' will be no mere pageant."

"COSSACK WHIP" SCORES, EXCHANGES REPORT

Edison's "The Cossack Whip," just released through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, has scored a triumph, according to reports from each of George Kleine's twenty-three distributing offices.

Pre-service dates, played in a long list of America's leading theatres, headed by Marcus Loew's chain of New York houses, have resulted in crowded houses and enthusiastic audiences. Return dates are being booked in practically every instance.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG APPEARS AGAIN ON DECEMBER 11

"The Rise of Susan," with Clara Kimball Young as its star, will be released upon the regular World Film program December 11. This is not a part of the World's special Clara Kimball Young service and has never been shown outside the corporation's own projection room.

EDUCATIONAL FILM CORPORATION MOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS

The Educational Film Corporation, which has been distributing its scenic and educational pictures through independent exchanges, has moved its executive offices from the seventh floor of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, to the eighth floor of the same building. The success which has attended the company's efforts has made it imperative that more space be obtained for the office staff of the organization.

The company has been in business only a short time, but the quality of its product has been so high that the pictures are being booked in the best houses throughout the country. In New York City, they have been featured on the program of the Rialto theatre, under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel, for the past six months, without omitting a single release. This speaks most highly of the Educational Company's scenics, as it is in the choice of his shorter subjects that Mr. Rothapfel is particular.

The Educational Company's pictures have also been shown at the Strand theatre, New York City, under the direction of Harold Edel, for solid week bookings, and at the Broadway theatre and other Broadway houses, also in New York City. The pictures may be booked through independent exchanges in almost every territory.

The success of the company is due to the efforts of Mr. E. W. Hammons, Vice-Pres. and Gen. Manager. Mr. Hammons is a college graduate and a member of New York's most prominent clubs. He has had a very successful career in the Real Estate business, in which he was President and General Manager of several of the largest development companies in New York.

In speaking of the company, Mr. Hammons said, "We are producing the best scenic and educational subjects that can be obtained. We are releasing them on a reasonable basis so that most every theatre in the industry can book them.

"We are releasing our pictures only through the best exchanges who are more than satisfied with results. Very shortly we shall announce that all territories have been closed."

INCREASED TAX FOR PHILADELPHIA HOUSES IS LIKELY

At a recent meeting of the Finance Committee of the City Council of Philadelphia, Controller Walton suggested to Chairman Joseph B. Gaffney as one of the methods of getting increased revenue for the city, the raising of film theatres permits. It was said this would net $60,000. It is purposed, however, to grade the new scale for a fee on the amount of business done.

A new source of revenue suggested is the paying of a license by "moving picture film distributors," which is estimated would bring in $10,000 to the city.

The plans as outlined are suggested in an effort to gain sufficient revenue for running the city without increasing the tax rate. Some other industries will also bear increased rates. Philadelphia theatres at present pay $100 city license whatever their seating capacity. This, in addition to State and United States taxes.

Old Man Coincidence Is Vindicated Again by Photoplay

Fabrication of Fine Arts Script Writer Comes to Life in Treason Trial Now On in Canada

THERE have been innumerable instances of novelists anticipating some great stride of science, notably the case of Jules Verne, the celebrated French writer, in describing the modern submarine long before it was perfected. Now the motion pictures have proven themselves equally prophetic.

The supreme criminal court of Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, is considering a case on its calendar which involves an invention that was introduced in "The Flying Torpedo," one of the first Triangle feature releases, starring John Emerson, the director who is at present producing the new play for Douglas Fairbanks. The invention in question is that of an aerial torpedo which may be guided through the air by radio waves.

According to the official reports on the current Canadian situation, John Jacob Bleiler, resident of Canada for some fourteen years, stands charged before the supreme criminal court on four charges of nearly equal seriousness. He will answer to charges of attempting to commit treason; conspiracy to commit treason; inciting the inventor of the aerial torpedo to commit treason, and trading with the enemy.

"The case hinges upon Edgar Hadenstrom's invention of an aeroplane control," says the Edmonton Journal, "by means of which a torpedo may be sent a distance of 300 miles, dropping bombs on predetermined points, before returning to its base. The device is intented for use during war times; and it is alleged that the accused tried to influence the inventor to turn his aeroplane control over to the German government."

Curiously enough, the negotiations are alleged to have been going on at just about the time "The Flying Torpedo" was in the making. The plot of this play, by Robert M. Baker and John Emerson, revolves about an eccentric writer of detective stories who foils a band of international spies and makes use of the aerial engine of destruction in defense of the nation.

Neither Mr. Baker nor Mr. Emerson had any way of knowing of the Hendenstrom invention. The flying torpedo in the photoplay of that name was the sheerest fabrication on their part. They had been greatly interested in the submarine warfare waged in the great conflict abroad, and, looking for something novel in the line of national defense, they concluded that the same kind of machine that was working such havoc in foreign waters, would, if adapted to use in the air, be ideal for their purposes. That is substantially how the idea of "The Flying Torpedo" came into being.

Probably the strangest coincidence of all is that "The Flying Torpedo," the Triangle-Fine Arts play, just chanced to be the week's bill at the Empress theatre, Edmonton, during the first week of the Bleiler-Henderstrom trial.

SPECIAL VENICE SET FOR "FROU FROU"

For a forthcoming World Film production, "Frou Frou," starring Alice Brady, Director Emile Chautard needed a Venice scene with canal and all, and was unable to get just the right effect in or around the Peerless studio in Fort Lee, New Jersey. As a consequence he procured a location in Piermont, New York, twenty miles above the studio center. A creek formed the necessary canal and Venetian houses were lined up on either side of the water. These were built at the studio and transported to the location by automobile trucks.

All this effort occupied five weeks of time and required the services of twenty-one carpenters. The gross cost of the set figured in advance to be not more that $5,000 is said to have amounted to over three times that much.

There was no reason to believe that this set could not be taken in the studio, but after Mr. Chautard saw the street built there, he realized instantly that it was not realistic enough to meet the situation. All this trouble and money was expended on a single scene that will not occupy the screen more than two or three minutes during the picture's projection.

INTERSTATE FILM PLAYS UP ADVERTISING

The Interstate Film Company, with headquarters at 1304 Vine street, Philadelphia, not only sells to Pennsylvania, but to several adjacent States as well. Under its general management are the Fairmount Film Company, the Eagle Projection Company, and the Philadelphia Exchange handling Bluebirds and Universals. C. V. Carrick, district manager, believing that local pushing will greatly stimulate the demand for his company's productions is putting through an advertising campaign on a most extensive scale. Interstate is taking large space in every leading paper in the territory which it covers, and is using besides all trolley systems in that region to bring to the attention of the picture patron the merits of the pictures it is exploiting. The Bluebird slogan, "The Play's the Thing," will be the watchword in this big drive.

Newest of Great Feature Companies Depends upon and Wants the Greatest Directors

IT has just been learned that the Artcraft Pictures Corporation is ready to negotiate for the services of the very best directors in the industry for its producing organizations. In accordance with Artcraft's progressive departures from the conventional in its endeavor to improve conditions which, in turn, will tend to improve the general quality of the present photoplay standard, an interview with Mr. Walter E. Greene, president of the concern, discloses a novel policy that will greatly benefit its directors, as follows:

"Yes, we are ready to negotiate with the master-directors of the business, and will afford them every opportunity to present their best efforts.

"The directing end of the Artcraft pictures will be given particular attention, and the Mary Pickford Company, the Geo. M. Cohan Company, and other producing units of this organization will proceed along lines that present progressive departures from present studio rules and regulations. In fact, these 'rules and regulations' are just what the Artcraft producers will avoid.

"When we announce that our subjects are produced by the director we mean just that. The Mary Pickford Film Company, for instance, does not hand its director a script at the eleventh hour while he is still working on the last subject, stipulate a time when the new production is to be finished, or handicap him with other limitations as evidenced in the average studio. Our producer is given the story four weeks in advance of the date on which the actual production will commence. He is given more than sufficient time to fully study his forthcoming subject, and to lay his plans. His creative capabilities are given wide play, and he is allowed ample time to test the practicability of his ideas.

"The motion picture industry represents an art, and should be treated as such. The talented artist does not sit down and portray a wonderful idea in a specified time. His time is his own, and he proceeds in his work accordingly. There is no one to tell him how much paint he should use, nor how long he should work on his subject. He thinks, plans, makes tests, and when his work results in a masterpiece, he is more than repaid for any apparent waste. Of course, the director could hardly proceed along the lines of the average artist, but at the same time he should be allowed to work with much the same feeling as the artist who is ambitious to turn out a masterpiece. He should be allowed to create and improve his handiwork, and should be allowed to finish it properly before he is asked to commence work on a new subject.

"In connection with the final work of the director, this, to my mind, is of chief import. Although it is readily apparent, few seem to realize that the great director is to the photoplay what the great editor is to the newspaper. The scenario writer may be a wonder, every player in the cast may be an artist, the cameraman may be an expert, the laboratory may be efficient, but it is up to the director to not only get the best efforts out of each department, but—after they have been obtained—to put them together so that each will appear to best advantage in just the same manner, as the editor, who gets the best work out of the various members of his staff, and then places it before the public in the most effective manner.

"While it is our desire to give each director the greatest possible scope in order to achieve the best results, at the same time, we do not intend to allow this to affect the efficiency of our organizations. Miss Pickford, herself, has advanced, and is practicing a system, which while affording each director ample time to fully study, produce and prepare a subject for public presentation, prevents any waste of time. In place of waiting for the director to cut and assemble his subject before starting on another, Miss Pickford alternates directors, thus allowing the producer much more than the necessary time for his work."

GOVERNOR FIELDER AND THOMAS A. EDISON VIEW PRESENTATION OF "THE CRISIS"

Governor Fielder of New Jersey, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Edison were among the guests of honor at the first public presentation of Sherman-Elliott's production, "The Crisis," at the Lyceum theatre, Orange, New Jersey, Tuesday evening, November 21. This performance was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Club for the Orange Memorial Hospital. A large and exclusive audience packed the Lyceum theatre to view "The Crisis."

All the distinguished guests were so enthusiastic about the production that they personally congratulated George W. Fawcett, who attended the performance, on his remarkable interpretation of Judge Whipple.

OVEY AND WILBUR AGAIN AT WORK FOR HORSLEY

Activities at the David Horsley studios in Los Angeles are again assuming the proportions which characterized the place last summer. During the early fall operations were temporarily curtailed while a readjustment of policy was being made. At this time two companies are at work, and others will begin operations within a short time. The two are the Cub Comedy Company, headed by George Ovey, and a feature company led by Crane Wilbur.

The comedy organization is making a series of one-reel subjects under the direction of Milton Fahrney. The first number of the series is "Jerry's Double Header," which was released November 24 through the Mutual.

Crane Wilbur and his co-workers are making a series of eight five-reel feature subjects, which will be titled under the general heading of "The Morals of Men." The series is now half completed. Each of the eight subjects will be distinct, of course, though a morality theme is used for all. "The Painted Lie" and "Unlucky Jim" are titles of two of the pictures already made. No release dates have been set, but announcement to this effect will be made a little later on.

AMERICAN RE-SIGNS GEORGE PERIOLAT

George Periolat, who has been associated with the American Film company at Santa Barbara and has been seen in Mutual pictures for several years, has been re-signed by the American for another year.

George Periolat's screen career began in 1909. He has been associated with Universal, Essanay and Selig companies.

Some of his most recent appearances in Mutual pictures are in "And the Law Says" and in "The Valley of Decision," with Richard Bennett.

"THE BURLESQUE SHOW" A TWEEDLEDUM COMEDY

In "The Burlesque Show," which is the "Tweedledum" comedy to be released by Unity this week, Perez has an opportunity to offer his followers a release that is really funny from beginning to end. The picture of a tramp falling in love with the leading lady in a "Burlesque Show" offers this popular comedian full opportunity for comedy.

"YELLOW MENACE" REACHES TWELFTH EPISODE

Under the title of "The Aeroplane Accident," Unity releases the twelfth episode of "The Yellow Menace." In this episode spectacular aeroplane scenes are shown. Mingled with the aeroplane scenes and working through the entire episode, as a motive, the hatred and treachery of Hong Kong Harry is shown in its most violent form. The half-breed becomes madly jealous of Errol Manning and the rest of Najla's friends and, although hating Ali Singh with all his soul, he resolves to betray Manning and Najla and warns Ali Singh of a plot which would have meant the Demon's death.

BRADY ENGAGES RUSSIAN BALLET FOR REALISM

In a forthcoming Alice Brady picture for World Film, there are several scenes which show a ballet during rehearsals and performances. William A. Brady specially engaged Alexis Kosloff to direct and also to appear in them. Mr. Kosloff has long been associated with a troup of well-known Russian dancers, and he will use them in these scenes. It is rather a costly matter, but Mr. Brady feels well repaid when considering the realistic effect he will have in the completed production.

Expense and Labor Involved in Perfecting Vitagraph

Big Features Planned That Require New Departmental Heads as Well as New Departments for Them to Head—Well-Known Vita Stars Are Continuing

SPECIFIC instances are being revealed of the progress under way at the Greater Vitagraph plant in Brooklyn since the recapitalization last spring. To carry out the program of production, which is personally in charge of Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, an increase in facilities has been required. Some tremendous plays are in the course of completion, such as "The Secret Kingdom," "The Battle Cry of War," "The Girl Philippa," "Within the Law," "Arsene Lupin," "Whom the Gods Destroy," "The Soul Master" and the Frank Daniels and the Big V comedies.

The dynamo and boiler room has been doubled in capacity during the summer. The lighting plant in its increased form will soon be in shape for the greatest winter's work ever done at this studio. The changes of the negative room to new quarters, the enlarging of the directors' room, the moving of the scenario department into new quarters have already been announced, while Factory Manager Richard W. McFarland, whose recent appointment was followed by the shift last named, is busy upon other details. One of these is the reconstruction of the developing room with hardwood floors.

Although the appointment of Harold Bolster as business manager was announced a few weeks ago, some additions in other parts of the organization are only now confirmed. An art director has been appointed—Mr. Martin Justice, the well-known New York artist and decorative expert—has been installed in an office adjoining that of Commodore Blackton as assistant.

Another appointee of artistic eminence is F. P. Earle, brother of Director W. P. S. Earle, an artist of note, who has been at the studio for a month with a workroom of his own. His task has been to prepare certain sensational novelties in model work and in stop motion photography, some of which will be seen in finished form in the forthcoming multiple reel Propaganda photoplay, "Battle Cry of War."

There is a night crew to prepare sets for the day's work in order that no time may be lost. This is necessary since exhibitors are demanding one feature release every six weeks starring Anita Stewart, Earle Williams, Alice Joyce and Harry Morey, Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno, William Duncan and Mary Anderson, Peggy Hyland and Marc McDermott and Lillian Walker and Walter McGrail. The staff of directors include Paul Scardon, Van Dyke Brooke, Marguerite Bertsch, Charles Brabin, John Robertson, Wilfrid North, Lawrence Semon and W. P. S. Earle.

Film News From Foreign Parts

Late Arrival from Australia Has Different Story to Tell of Theatre Conditions There

I HAPPEN to be a recent arrival from Australia, with long association in the motion picture business in that country, and I feel compelled to correct some very glaring misstatements attributed to Mr. Helmrich in your columns.

His main assertions can be summarized as follows:

1. American exhibitors are behind those of Australia.
2. Australian theatres mostly seat 2,000 to 5,000.
3. They are comfortably filled four nights in the week and packed Friday and Saturday.
4. Prices are 10, 25 and 50 cents.
5. We take full pages in newspapers to advertise films.
6. That those "not fortunate enough" to view films in city houses sojourn to distant suburbs for that purpose.
7. His company's failure to make profit is due to its co-operative methods, and I deal with them seriatim.

One—Mr. Helmrich quite fails to tabulate those "new wrinkles" which your American showman could absorb to his financial advantage, and actually he might as reasonably assert that the managers of no first class American hotels (which are examples to the world) should visit Australia to learn their business.

There are no picture theatres in Australia to compare with the best American houses, either in design, appointments, music or projection.

Probably the most pretentious house in Australia is Hoyts, in Bourke street, Melbourne, running as a continuous show in daytime, and a straight three hours' entertainment after eight o'clock. This is a reasonably well equipped and appointed rectangular shaped hall, but to compare it to the Rialto, Strand or Audubon of New York would be absurd. The music is produced by a Fotoplayer (without orchestra); the seating is not luxurious, and the house lighting is comparable to that of an ordinary business office.

Two—There is no theatre in Australia seating 5,000; there is no theatre in Australia seating 4,000; there are possibly two seating 3,000; in the whole of Australia there are not more than thirty seating 2,000. The vast majority of our total, 700 picture shows (spread over 3,000,000 square miles) are wood and iron structures seating 1,000 to 1,800.

Three—The city houses of Melbourne and Sydney are reasonably well filled nightly. Saturday's packed, but the suburban or country exhibitor averaging one-third capacity from Monday to Friday is lucky.

Four—Prevailing prices of admission are three pence, six pence and one shilling, or 6, 12 and 24 cents, with occasionally a 36 cent section—the shows charging more form too small a proportion to be considered.

Five—Australian newspapers are no doubt filled in New York. Let them answer this statement.

Six—Suburban theatres are absolutely 'neighborhood houses,' and rely entirely on local residents for patronage; frequently to my knowledge, showmen of adjoining suburbs agree not to bill one another's territory.

Seven—They are no film exchanges in Australia making profits, either co-operative concerns or otherwise, the principal causes being heavy duty (4 cents per foot) big increase in average price of films, exorbitant freights, etc.—there are certain American film concerns who have recently had good evidence on this point.

The above contradictions to Mr. Helmrich's remarks are not intended in any sense as a "knock" to Australia—it is a great country, which I am proud to own as mine—but it is desirable that a fair statement should be made setting out the country's "film possibilities" to counteract the effect of any unwarranted "hot air" boosting which is too often indulged in by my fellow countrymen when abroad. I most heartily suggest that you invite members of the film trade in Australia (which has many readers of your excellent journal) to make their comments on these two analyses of Australian conditions, and judge for yourself as to the merit of my deductions.

Motion Pictures in North Honduras

THERE is not a playhouse for the spoken drama on the north coast of Honduras, and in the Ceiba consular district the only public amusements are motion-picture shows, of which there are two, one in Ceiba, the other in Tela, says Consul Francis J. Dyer, Ceiba. The house in Ceiba gives three shows a week—Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays.

Both of these houses secure their films from Guatemala City. The Ceiba theatre presents from 5,000 to 8,000 feet of film at each performance—French and Italian, and occasionally one from the United States; in the latter case usually a "wild west" film with cowboys and Indians, always popular with local audiences and provocative of boisterous applause. All comic and western films go well here. The foreign films are frequently of the society-drama type, which are less favored.

The Tivoli theatre in Ceiba seats 1,000. The entire front of the frame structure is occupied by the "cantina," where soft drinks, beer, wines, and liquors are served, as well as sandwiches. On the first presentation of a film the admission prices are 1.25, 1, and 0.50 pesos, local currency, equivalent in United States gold to 51.25, 41, and 20.5 cents. On the second presentation of a film the scale of admission is 1, 0.75, and 0.25 peso (41, 30.75, and 10.25 cents). When the lower scale prevails the house is often filled to capacity.

Usually the show begins at 8 o'clock and lasts until 11, with an intermission, which gives an opportunity to visit the "cantina," although drinks are served to patrons in their seats. Outside several little carts dispense popcorn, which meets with a ready sale, and the street venders also sell native cakes and sweetmeats and "frescoes," or cool drinks, consisting mostly of shaved ice and fruit syrup. The local American population contributes but little to the attendance.

Expenses are comparatively heavy. Frequently the box-office receipts do not meet them, but the bar makes up the deficiency. The cost of the films is $18 gold a night. The proprietor (Mr. J. Figols) says that if he obtained his films from the United States they would cost him $23 a night, but he has had an offer from the Cuban office of an American concern to supply him with films for a period of three months at 1 cent per foot. As his contract for the Guatemala films has six months to run, he has not been able to close with this offer, but would most assuredly do so at his first opportunity.

Dr. R. H. Wilson is lessee of the theator in Tela, which seats 400 persons and does a good business one night a week. Formerly it gave four shows a week, but now it is open only on Sundays. Like the Tivoli theatre, in Ceiba, it is on the Guatemala circuit. and therefore it has to use French and Italian films, although the American films are more popular. The price paid is $4 per 1,000 feet for 30 days.

Dr. Wilson has been in negotiation with the manager of the cinematograph in San Pedro Sula for the use of that theatre's films, which are procured from the United States, but the best terms offered him, he says, are 50 per cent of the gross receipts. The Tela theatre presents 8,000 feet of film at a performance, which lasts an hour and a half, and the admission price is 1, 0.50, and 0.25 peso (41, 20.5, and 10.25 cents).

There is no duty on rented films in Northern Honduras.

HOY REPORTING SERVICE ACTIVE

The Hoy Reporting Service has submitted its weekly list of exhibitors who are not entitled to credit consideration, and has strongly urged exchanges to protect themselves against losses by requiring large cash deposits in advance. Mr. Hoy has also reported settlements of many disputes between exhibitors and exchanges, and has cited one instance where an exhibitor sent claim to his office against a member of F. I. L. M. Club, which, after due investigation, was found to be correct and was promptly paid.

Mr. Hoy is arranging to address exchange managers in several cities where F. I. L. M. clubs are being organized. From indications, theatre managers throughout the entire nation will soon be members.

"LIFE OF CHRIST" RELEASED BY PATHE

A holiday production of seven reels in natural colors, "The Life of Our Savior," will be released by Pathe on December 3. Many important scenes in the life of Christ are reproduced. Among them is the last supper, which has been based on the painting by Da Vinci; the crucifixion, with all details carefully wrought out. Thousands of actors participated in the spectacle, and it is high in religious and historical values. The coloring is unusually good.

ATHLETIC SERIES GO BIG IN CHICAGO

The Selig Athletic Feature film series, released through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay service, is being booked in the large feature theatres in the United States and Canada. These films are proving of particular appeal to combination vaudeville and picture theatres. Among the latest to book this series is the Shaffer Brothers vaudeville circuit, Chicago. The first reel of the Athletic series so pleased at the Crown, Star and Victoria that plans were immediately completed to show each of the ten in the series for an entire week in each house.

Pathe Lays Plans for the New Season

Berst Well Satisfied with the Success of the Reorganized Pathe Program Releases Have Increased from Seven to Sixteen Reels Weekly

NINETEEN sixteen has been a year of accomplishments for Pathe. A successful one-a-week program of Gold Rooster features was inaugurated and more successful serials and series were released than have ever before been put out by any company.

But it is with even greater pride that J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager, surveys the situation for the new year, for already plans have been completed for all releases well into the summer of 1917.

Probably the most notable achievement of the old year has been the steady and rapid growth of the program. Seven reels were being released a week when Mr. Berst accepted the call to return to the management of the Pathe Company. Today the weekly program consists of sixteen reels.

Of utmost importance in the eyes of Mr. Berst is the new sales organization that has been built up by C. R. Seelye, business manager. Every week has seen a material increase in the business of all the thirty branches and Mr. Berst is confident that 1917 will even surpass the success of this year in Pathe's history in America.

Mr. Berst's views of the 1917 situation are of unusual interest because of his long connection with the motion picture industry and his deep insight into all of its branches.

"Pathe has builded on the solid rock of most careful organization and ample financial resources, and we stand secure," says Mr. Berst. "We are committed to a definite, fixed policy of quality pictures at prices that assure a fair profit to exhibitors.

"With the great number of features now on the market, we have been greatly gratified with the success of our one-a-week Gold Rooster program, which now includes six distinct series of features, assuring a wide variety. In a few short month the Gold Rooster features have been firmly established in the minds of the public and exhibitors as a dependable program of strong stories, powerful casts and high-class production. These features are now being produced by Astra, Thanhouser, Arrow and Balboa. We have some ambitious plans for the new year, which will be announced in a short time.

"Two new serials for 1917 have been completed—'The Neglected Wife,' founded on the famous stories of Mabel Herbert Urner, and 'The Double Cross,' the famous mystery story by Gilson Willetts. 'Pearl of the Army,' our new military serial released December 3, is also included in the 1917 serial program. We have two other serials in course of production and we are negotiating for the other two serials that will complete the 1917 program of seven serials."

All of the advertising and publicity departments have been greatly strengthened by Mr. Berst and exhibitors have expressed great satisfaction with the service they have received.

"LOTTERY MAN" READY FOR RELEASE BY UNITY

The Unity Sales Corporation, under the direction of Messrs. H. W. Harwell and W. L. Merrill have ready for release "The Lottery Man," the comedy-drama in five reels made from the well known Broadway play of the same name. Thurlow Bergen and Elsie Esmond are featured in this production.

It pictures the story of a newspaper lottery stunt, begun in the spirit of fun and adventure by the hero, who offers himself as the prize, but it almost ends in a tragedy when the hero discovers that an old maid attache of a fashionable establishment is the lucky person, especially as he has in the meantime fallen in love with a beautiful young girl. The day is saved, however, when the old maid announces that she would much rather marry the butler and leaves the hero to go his way undisturbed.

PATHE NEWS MAKES ANOTHER RECORD

The Pathe News followed up its succession of scoops on the German submarine merchantman "Deutschland" by showing pictures in New York theatres of her departure from New London for Europe on the night of the same day she sailed. As her departure was at 2:33 P. M., and the pictures were showing less than six hours later, it was a record achievement.

SOMETHING NEW FOR BESSIE IN COMING TRIANGLE

Bessie Barriscale will make her next appearance on the Triangle program in a psychological story by Leona Hutton, prepared for the screen by Lambert Hillyer.

Miss Barriscale will have the difficult task of portraying a dual role, something she has never done before in the films. Howard Hickman, Charles Gunn, J. Barney Sherry and Jerome Storm will appear in her support. The direction of the play will be in the hands of Raymond B. West.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"THE VAMPIRES"

(Gaumont-Mutual Series, Third Episode, "The Ghost," Three Reels; Fourth Episode, "The Dead Man's Escape," Three Reels)

REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THE most fascinating and startling melodramatic situations are hurled pell-mell into this episode in rapid succession, so rapid indeed that he who thirsts for the mysterious to solve will find plenty to slake that thirst. The Grand Vampire assumes the innocent role of a real estate dealer, and one fine day an Argentine gentleman desiring a bachelor apartment seeks one from this arch-fiend. He is suited, particularly as he wants an apartment with a private safe—of course he is not informed of the fact that this "safe" has a false back which opens into the apartment occupied by Irma Vep (Juliet Musidora), a member of the vampire clique.

The first investigation of the safe from the wrong side reveals nothing but a few sets of disguises, much to the disgust of Mr. Trep (Eugene Ayme), the real estate man.

The vampires then secure a position for Irma Vep, they having learned that large sums of money were frequently transferred from Paris to the bank's branch at Rouen by messenger. The opportunity presented itself in due course and Irma informed the other members of the band that the aged messenger would take the late train to his suburban home on the Saturday prior to the Monday when this money was to be taken to Rouen, and the bank's president had informed the cashier that in the absence of the messenger Irma should be entrusted on the mission. Consequently the band strangle Metadier, the messenger, and throw him from the train to his death. His body is found on the track by Moreno, the Argentine gentleman, who has it removed to his apartment and on searching the pocket finds a note telling of the proposed trip, so disguises himself as the old man and secures the money, incidentally throwing an awful scare into Irma, who, having been convinced of the old man's death is considerably perturbed over the appearance of "the ghost," so natural is Moreno's make-up.

Mr. Trep was informed of the old man's appearance at the bank and could not figure it out, but just now the time was considered opportune for another look into the safe, which being opened again from the rear disclosed the dead body of the messenger. Matters were now easy to solve—the Argentine gentleman was of their ilk.

While Irma and Mr. Trep are gazing at the body, Philip Guard, the ubiquitous cub reporter, surprises them, but he is overpowered and left for dead. He recovers, however, but before he can get away Moreno returns to his apartment and realizes the duplicity of the real estate agent when he discovers the back of his safe wide open and gaping into another apartment. He ventures in very cautiously, is overpowered by Philip Guard, who has already called for the gendarmes. About to be convicted he swallows something—supposed to be cyanide; is apparently dead and removed to the morgue. He, too, recovers, overpowers the night watchman, dons the watchman's clothes and makes good his escape.

Thus we have one exciting incident after another in such an array as to be sure to satisfy the most exacting.

"THE SIGN OF THE POPPY"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY STEVE TALBOT

ELABORATELY staged with intelligent attention to every detail, this story of an aristocratic drug addict is a credit to Charles Swickard, who directed it. Hobart Henley plays a dual role with ability, so that in the one part (of the cast-off twin brother) he is a most offensive personality, while as the patrician twin, who turns out well, he is quite likeable.

All is granted Gertrude Selby, as she has the camera lens in nearly every scene and to the exclusion of everyone else, although Mina Cunard appears once or twice. Some Chinatown scenes are shown, which are unique in that they show a clean Chinese shop interior, proprietor and street. A good conflagration is staged also, with no dashing-through-the-smoke stuff or maudlin antics such as is usual in the crowds that congregate before film fires.

The title of this play is derived from the poppy blossom passed to the head of the Marston family by agents of his enemy just preceding his mysterious death. Later his only known son marries and is living happily until overtaken by a series of inexplicable misfortunes which result in his apparent loss of mind and confinement in a penal institution. The wife, fearing the comment of her social friends when they discover her husband's state, engages a stranger who resembles Marston, to act as her husband. This laatter proves to be the until then unknown twin of her husband —a degenerate opium smoker who has wildly plotted the downfall of his brother and acquisition of the family riches and position. The falling into his power, too, of his brother's wife is a little too much, however, for his already tottering mental balance. After an assault upon Edith (Gertrude Selby), who has refused him some of the privileges of a husband, the degenerate becomes involved in a series of rapid and fateful occurrences which have startling results.

It is not unfair to the producers to reveal that the real husband escapes from durance vile about this time—recovers his memory—and strays into his own home. Further revelations would, however, destroy the admirably sustained suspense of this very superior feature photoplay.

The story is by J. Grubb Alexander and the excellent photography by Harry Maquire. Garland Briden plays Hop Li, the crafty Chinese merchant, with restraint, which is worthy of comment, as it adds much to the realism of the entire picture.

"THE SIN YE DO"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Sin Ye Do," starring Frank Keenan, is one of the strongest and best features that has come from the Ince studio in a long time. Based on a story by John Lynch, the scenario done by J. G. Hawks raises suspense to the nth degree and reduces padding to a minimum. It is dramatic to the extreme in every one of its phases. There is conflict of characters, conflict of passions—an awakening in a man who thought he knew the world. Even the court room scenes are powerful. For that matter they are the most powerful in the entire picture. And court room scenes are so often flat.

The Attack

Barret Steele is a lawyer who doesn't believe in the unwritten law at all. He thinks a woman ought to be able to protect herself. If she does not, let her take the consequences, is his creed. He is a man of loose habits himself. In fact he has a certain Mrs. Darrow running after him. Steele's best friend is killed by his stenographer. The unwritten law again. But the complexion of the whole situation is changed when Steele discovers that the stenographer is his own daughter. He defends her and wins the case. Then he goes to Mr. Darrow, who wants to kill him, but he lets him go for the sake of his wife and daughter who have been restored to him.

Mr. Keenan creates a strong character in Barret Steele. Playing with his customary suppression of expression he makes every scene, every close-up count. Margery Wilson is natural as the daughter and sterling support is given by David M. Hartford, Margaret Thompson, Howard Hickman, Louise Brownell, Jack Gilbert and Walt Whitman. Walter Edwards' direction is praiseworthy while the work of the Ince production department never showed to better advantage.

"HIS LAST SCENT"

(Keystone—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY STEVE TALBOT

ONE of the best of the Keystone type of kick-'em-and-run comedy. Of the old time Sennett crowd is Fred Mace, who is the errant husband of Alice Davenport and inclined to flirt with his steno, Cecile Arnold. Fritz Schade is the blonde's husband and as usual gets the worst of it throughout. Vic Potel, the erstwhile "Slippery Slim" of Essanay, does some of the funniest detective stuff yet shown anywhere. His train stuff (for which Director Charles Avery is probably responsible) is reminiscent of Raymond Hitchcock's first Keystone, but the remainder proves Victor a natural Keystoner.

Much credit is due the company for getting over such a riot of fast stuff without the aid of the usual mechanics. The camera work of R. D. Armstrong has much to do with the registering of every point. A first rate tear-chaser with Mace at his best.

"NANETTE OF THE WILDS"

(Famous Players-Paramount—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THE Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted Police offer a heroic theme that lends itself splendidly to story and drama, and Willard Mack's revival of this in pictures with Pauline Frederick as the wild Nanette will be well received. We were disappointed keenly, however, in the working out of a plot which offered a tremendous opportunity.

For personal bravery and heroism the Royal Red Coats have few competitors. And so when Jevne is murdered by the half-breed Baptiste, and O'Brien takes his life in his hands and invades the wilds where Nanette and her smuggling father and gang share their life with the beasts of prey, we look for real thrills and active proof of the stuff O'Brien is made of. Instead we have a stage-like performance, without the stage dialogue to make it clear. Miss Frederick does the best that could be done with such a series of situations, and admirers of this great artist will be pleased with her role as a whole and perhaps will see no unnaturalness in her acceptance of this brave soldier. But we have not yet discovered the dramatic purport of the extra male admirer and the trained bear cub.

The director put some exceptionally fine touches into the action, as for example the murder of Jevne by the half-breed. We see the murderer climb the tree in ambush, we see the rider at a distance unsuspecting his danger, then a shake of the tree top and the simultaneous fall of the guardsman, and we know, without even seeing the murderer shoot, who did the deed. Another clever piece of business followed the act of Nanette in sending Jevne, murdered, to camp tied on the back of his horse. The next time the horse feels the touch of Nanette at his head he shudders and so indicates to O'Brien that she was in some way connected with his master's death.

Pauline Frederick as wild Nanette will meet all expectations. Her success in a role so far different from the society drama which she has made such a marvelous record in is complete.

Pauline Frederick, with Willard Mack—of the Canadian Northwest

"Nanette of the Wilds" is a good picture, but there are possibilities overlooked in the story and the characters that will be missed by the critical.

"PATRIA"

(International-Serial)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"PATRIA" has as its star Mrs. Vernon Castle, and the drawing power of the serial must needs be based largely upon her popularity, for "Patria" and Mrs. Vernon Castle are synonymous. Supporting the star are a melodramatic plot and a generous supply of thrills if the first three episodes may be taken as indicative of those who follow after. The plot has to do with the villainy engineered by Mexican and Japanese spies which is directed against the United States. And Patria Channing and her lover, Captain Donald Parr of the United States Secret Service, are the chief sponsors of the United States in the various villainous attacks. Once in a while a few detectives or a crew of a revenue cutter gives them a helping hand, but the majority of times they go it alone—for the reason that they are heroine and hero and shrink from crying for assistance.

Louis Joseph Vance is the author of "Patria." Preparedness is announced as the theme. The first three episodes don't dwell on it very forcibly but no doubt it will come in due time. But at that a half dozen Patrias working in the interests of the country and there would be small need for preparedness at all. Patria can jump right into a motor boat, scoot out into the harbor and instantly locate a tramp steamer, and all this minus a chart and plus a fog. If she had been on hand when Baron Huroki and his aide marched right through the streets of New York City behind a wagon displaying a hundred million dollars, and when the Baron unloaded his booty and placed it aboard the tramp steamer, she doubtless would have stopped proceedings or else summoned a policeman or a revenue officer or her lover.

As it was, though, no one else gave it a thought.

Perhaps though devotees of the serial want the rapid action, the thrills and the romance that "Patria" offers, and perhaps they don't worry over logic. All well and good then. The first episode covers a conventional thriller served in ultra-sensational style, i. e., an automobile is shown dashing across railroad tracks and just missing the oncoming train by inches. In the second, Patria is about to be blown up by a bomb, but a pistol and a good eye save the day. She shoots the fuse and cuts it in two. In the third several rowboats full of villains are blown sky high by the sure fire from a revenue cutter, and besides Captain Parr is almost drowned in a scuttled ship. "Patria" has thrills in abundance.

The story centers about Patria, of course. She inherits a hundred million dollars which her ancestors have piled up from ages long ago for the cause of Preparedness. Baron Huroki, a Japanese spy, in league with other Japs and Mexicans, wants this money and tries in various ways to get it. This evidently is to be the main "struggle" of the serial. At the last of the third episode the hundred million has gone to the bottom of the bay with the scuttled ship.

Milton Sills as Captain Parr and Warner Oland as Baron Huroki have the other leading roles. The pictures are being produced by the Whartons and in the matter of production their work is adequate. In direction, however, there are innumerable inconsistencies. But if Mrs. Castle is big enough she can overshadow them, we suppose.

"THE YELLOW PAWN"

(Lasky-Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE F. WORTS

WALLACE REID and Cleo Ridgely are an admirable pair. The Lasky director who first put them in a picture together made an important discovery; that they somehow improve each other's work. With "The Yellow Pawn" they had an excellent story upon which to display their talents. The play has an unusual amount of suspense and interest.

The story opens with a close-up of a chess board. The various characters are the pawns, and the hand of Fate moves them over the board in an impressive fashion. "The Yellow Pawn" is a Japanese boy, a servant in the employ of an artist, Wallace Reid.

The dashing young artist meets a girl in a roadster in a picturesque stretch of wilderness, where he is painting. The motor breaks down and the girl and the artist share his sandwiches. That they love each other is foreordained by that ominous hand of Fate at the chessboard. But the girl is forced to marry a man she doesn't like, for his money; and the lovers are parted. Eventually, after the manner of Fate, the young man becomes the Rembrandt of the community. He is a popular artist, and he charges $1,000 a sitting or portrait and becomes wealthy.

Meanwhile the husband of the girl becomes jealous, and when the wife meets again her artist-lover, and she registers deep interest in his paintings, the husband, being only a pawn in the game, lets his wife have her picture painted. A drunken cousin of the artist here enters to complicate matters, and on the evening that the wife visits the studio of the artist, he, too, visits and is killed by the Japanese servant while attempting to steal the artist's money. The artist, to shield the girl, is arrested for the murder. The jealous husband is the community's prosecuting attorney. He arranges for a third degree to be held in the studio. The girl confesses her presence on the fateful evening, and just when the irate husband and district attorney, unlimbers his gun for action, the Jap servant creeps up behind him and stabs him. This removes all obstacles, and the White King and the White Queen of the chessboard are reunited.

Aside from the drawing powers of the Reid-Ridgely combination, the picture will be popular because of the unusual treatment of the story.

"ROSE OF THE SOUTH"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

ANTONIO MORENO and Peggy Hyland fit perfectly the roles assigned them in this pathetic drama of the days of '64. Arthur Train has furnished us a novel manner of presenting a theme that requires the most delicate handling, and Paul Scardon has furnished that careful touch which makes the story very real, with no attempt at overplaying the parts. Interest catches one from the opening scenes, in which that grand old man of the screen, Charles Kent, relates to the new generation of students in his old alma mater how a bullet-hole in the door of his old college room came there. "It was in sixty," and so the story unfolds as it was enacted, and a clever interweaving of sentiment and history presents itself.

Randolph, '64 (Antonio Moreno), is the favorite of all, and when he meets Marian (Peggy Hyland) it is love at first sight—also hate from that moment between him and Watkins (Gordon Gray), his rival for Marian's favor.

And so when the war breaks out, Watkins singles out Randolph (who has a colored slave with him) as the butt of the Union sentiment among the boys. Even a duel is framed up and Randolph is allowed to believe he has killed Watkins, until he discovers the hoax.

Tense Scene in Vitagraph's "Rose of the South"

Randolph, as a cavalry leader on the Confederate side, acquires the name of "The Flying Colonel." Watkins, in the Union Army, reaches officer's station also, and the two again meet at the home of Marian's aunt, when Marian helps Randolph escape after her aunt, whose sympathies are Union, has betrayed him into the hands of the Union cavalry officers. But Mose, who has faithfully stuck by Randolph, changes clothes with his master and enables him to escape to fight one last battle in which he and Watkins meet again face to face and die in each other's arms, with final forgetting of their long standing enmity in the thought of their alma mater, to whom, as two brave soldiers, they both drink a toast from one canteen. Marian, now a field nurse, discovers them on the field and ministers to their dying needs—then the story fades into the present and Marian, aged but still holding sacred the memory of her dead lover, joins the hushed awe of past days in the old college room and brings to the present the fact that those who remember those past griefs may still be among us.

This powerful story, told in such a new way, is finely interpreted by Mr. Moreno and Miss Hyland, with a most competent supporting case of Vitagraph favorites, including, besides those named, Rose Tapley as Marian's mother and Mary Maurice as Marian in old age.

"LONE STAR"

(American—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

AN instructive and interesting picture tending to prove that the Indian is what the white man's greed and avarice have made him and proving finally that beneath the dark skin beats a human heart, while as "Lone Star" (William Russell) remarks that beneath the thin white skin lies the "vaunted civilization" of the pale face. The theme is virile, well handled and its portrayal is artistic to a degree and without a doubt will prove a winner.

An Indian's love for a white girl, which is reciprocated, calls down the enmity of an irate parent and under stress the girl chooses her father as against the Indian.

The story opens on an Indian reservation when Lone Star's mother dies under the barbaric Indian methods of beating out the devil with incantations. Lone Star has already witnessed some cures effected by the Reservation doctor and confides to the latter that he has no faith in the Indian medicine man, whom he describes as a "damn fool."

Lone Star therefore decides to study the white man's medicine that he may later be able to administer to his own and he makes remarkable progress, and it is while studying in the East that he meets Nurse Helen Mattis (Charlotte Burton), who has decided to go in for such work rather than be the social butterfly her father and brother would have her.

Their acquaintance ripens into love and she is christened "Whispering Dawn" by her Indian lover, but the stern parent will have none of it.

Then follow scenes showing to what depths of degredation father and son can fall, the former through his refusal to make his tenement holdings sanitary and otherwise suitable for human habitation and the latter through his debauchery.

Lone Star has the opportunity of witnessing the phases of their life and commenting thereon, but he returns toward the setting sun without his Whispering Dawn.

"THE WHARF RAT"

(Triangle-Fine Arts—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

MAE MARSH is given ample room for the display of her girlish mannerisms—her inimitable moods, in "The Wharf Rat," written for her by Anita Loos. Miss Marsh spends most of her time disguised as a boy and a lesser actress than she might fail in getting her picture over because of this incumbrance, for a woman as a boy seldom convinces anyone.

It is usually only tolerated, but Miss Marsh makes you like it. She can toy with a girl's dress and long for it, ever so many more times than is necessary throughout the picture and can make you feel it, which is credit due her and no one else.

"The Wharf Rat" is a poor picture in other respects. It is a loose-joined affair and is stretched out to a remarkably thin extent, but if you like Miss Marsh you don't mind that at all.

Mae Marsh and Pauline Starke in a New Fine Arts—"The Wharf Rat"

Comedy is its major element; much of it comes as a result of the subtitles written by Miss Loos.

We agree with Douglas Fairbanks that she is supreme in this line. The humor and satire that she pens is far and above her plots. That makes two things of distinct advantage about "The Wharf Rat."

The story tells of Polly, who, with her grandfather, runs away from her step-mother, who conducts a ludicrous school for child culture and spiritual development. The old man believes he has committed murder and so disguises the girl as a boy to prevent identification. Romance enters the girl's life via Eddie Douglas, who hates women, and tells her so.

Eddie thinks she's a boy, but at last when she stands revealed to him in her true colors and clothes he says good-bye to woman-hating.

And of course the old man hasn't committed murder at all.

Robert Harron is a very good Eddie and Spottiswoode Aitken gets a deal of humor from his role of the grandfather—a lot of it lies in the step he affects. Josephine Crowell is the idealistic step-mother, who when peeved lapses into a regular lowbrow, and others are Pauline Stark, William S. Brown and Jack Brammall. Chester Whithey directed.

"A GAMBLER IN SOULS"

(Triangle-Ince—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS is a typical cast-away-on-a-desert-island picture with William Desmond and Dorothy Dalton in the principal roles. It makes entertainment of an average sort, although it must be confessed that its principal characters are not molded altogether convincingly or true to life and some of the deeds they do can hardly be taken seriously.

"A Gambler in Souls" has a minister that isn't even an extraordinary prude. He is impossible. Whenever something grates his sensibilities he rolls his eyes and prays. We have yet to see such a figure in real life and until then we refuse to believe they exist. Where was William Hart when this picture was made?

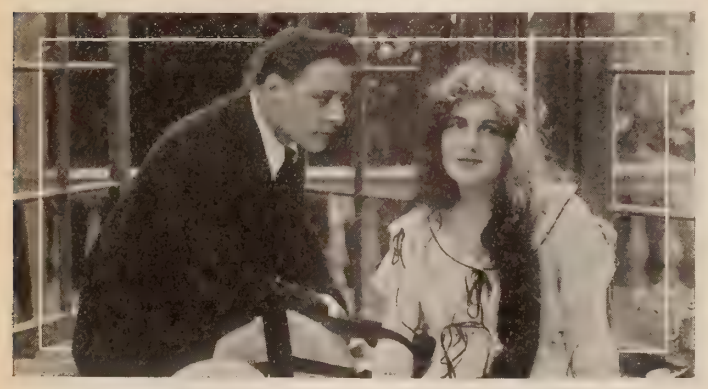
But there is a certain suspense accompanying the central situation of such a story as it is presented here in a dignified and unoffensive manner. There is the added attraction of a wreck of an ocean liner, which is good in all details save for the miniature figure of the ship proceeding jerkily through the water. If thrillers are in demand this phase of the picture might be featured to good purpose.

After the wreck the impossible minister and a chorus girl, impossible in the other direction, are cast up on the island and then begins the reshaping of both their characters. Some of the chorus girl's common sense goes to the minister, some of his superfluous godliness goes to the girl and they make about an even match, but though he loves her the minister remains stolid in his purpose to maintain a gulf between them and he is only influenced to claim her as his own by the arrival of another castaway on the island. Then it's a fight to the death and the minister wins.

Director Walter Edwards has chosen some fine desert island locations. The storm effects he introduces are unusual. P. D. Tabler and Charles French are the only other important members of the cast. The scenario was done by Lanier Bartlett.

"BIG TREMAINE"



(Metro-Yorke—Five Parts)

REVIEWED BY J. S. JUDD

AN absolutely clean story from beginning to end. It has good action; plenty of heart thrills; ends happily, and has a bit of mystery which is cleared up satisfactorily at the end. I venture, this good clean story would please the average audience much more than a film which has for its theme either the sex problem or crime. In view of this, why say that the story is improbable—just let it go that Marie Van Vorst has written a catching story, and that Henry Otto has picturized it in a very pleasing way. The Southern atmosphere—the story is located in Virginia—is finely brought out without being overdone.

John Tremaine, Jr. (Harold Lockwood), plantation born and reared, is given a job in a bank and sent to Richmond with a large sum of money for delivery to a depository there. Just before leaving he discovers that the girl with whom he has been in love is making love to his brother. Arriving at Richmond he finds that the money which he was delivering is short, and deeply hurt by the deception of his sweetheart, decides never to return. Obviously, he goes to Africa and stays there for seven years. Returning he finds the old home in a dilapidated condition, learns that his father died upon hearing of the missing money seven years before, and which in his absence he was accused of stealing, finds his mother almost estranged and learns that his brother has died.

From there on it is a case of rehabilitating himself and his homestead, and he again meets Isobel Malvern (May Allison) a childhood sweetheart and they gradually fall in love. Tremaine becomes a captain of industry and runs for the Congressional nomination. Isobel's father who was the banker, who first intrusted John with the money to go to Richmond, opposes and threatens to expose him if he seeks the nomination. Isobel takes an active part in securing the nomination for John, and leads a procession to his home. It all ends happily through David's widow giving up at that time a confession made by David before his death, acknowledging that he stole the money from John's grip before he left for Richmond.

May Allison gives a very pleasing tone to the picture, and Mr. Lockwood also must be given full credit for his part. The cast generally is good.

"THE WITCHING HOUR"

(Frohman Amusement—Seven Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE FROHMAN COMPANY never disappoints, and while "The Witching Hour" will not create an epoch, it will certainly create business. And business is much more tangible than an epoch. The picture, everything considered, is a better-than-program feature, and this we believe is Mr. Sherrill's aim. Aside from its excellent production which the directorial hand of George Irving has given it, "The Witching Hour" has a wealth of value lying right in the three words of its title. Augustus Thomas' play of the same name was widely known and popular, so the title is a commercial asset.

Perhaps if Mr. Thomas had submitted "The Witching Hour" first, and only as a scenario, the editor would have rejected it because of its episodic arrangement. The suspense rises and falls and results in one or two obvious anti-climaxes, but after all each of the episodes is so strong and so well presented that—the scenario editor might have taken it. Mr. Irving has worked in some masterful touches. His double exposure work, for instance, by which he pictures the thought running through the mind of a man is excellent.

The plot is based on the telepathic power of Jack Brookfield, a gambler. Unconsciously he suggests through his psychic power the method by which a political aspirant may kill the governor, and it is done. The son of old Brookfield commits murder, and the political aspirant in prosecuting the boy has all but won his case when Brookfield again brings his telepathic power to work on a member of the jury who holds out against conviction long enough for the exposure of the lawyer as the man responsible for the governor's death to change the verdict of the other eleven.

The remark has been passed that Mr. Thomas must have had C. Aubrey Smith in mind for the role of Brookfield when he wrote the play for the reason that the actor gives such a sterling performance. That, though, is always the case when a player does such creative work as Mr. Smith. He is a polished actor and adds strength to every scene in which he appears. Robert Conness as the political aspirant gives quite the best performance of his career. Jack Sherrill works hard as the boy. Marie Shotwell and Etta De Groff have prominent character roles. Helen Arnold, the much-touted beauty, is present with a ravishing profile, while others are Freeman Barnes, Lewis Sealy, William Eville and Robert Ayerton.

The scenario was prepared by Anthony Kelly; the photoplay done by William A. Reinhart.

"THE MARTYRDOM OF PHILIP STRONG"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

IF we have been beset of late with pictures claiming to "teach a moral," but which were at least questionable in that the teaching of the moral was by visualizing an immoral manner of living, that the latter way might be loathsome to those seeing the result of immoral life vividly presented, and if we have wondered whether pure moral teaching without the "spice" could interest deeply, here is the answer:

"The Martyrdom of Philip Strong" is an all-religious play. It is a clear, uncontradictable presentation of the spirit of brotherly love pictured to us in its last analysis. Showing every one of us where we have been selfish and not followed the teachings of the Holy Bible. Such is the powerful presentation of this play, through the symbolizing of "Brother Man," who suddenly wakes Philip Strong, personified by the minister of a rich congregation, who sacrifices wife, child and even personal reputation to the spirit of Christian brotherhood.

It may be imagined what a powerful theme this makes, and we can only say the dramatization is effective, impressive and ably portrayed. Whether this play will be a business getter or not will depend entirely on the religious character of the members of the audience. We are inclined to think that, without sensationalism, and winning its laurels purely through the force of dramatic intensity this picture will prove a strong asset to the Paramount Program. It is a heavy theme, seriously and capably handled. And as purely religious plays in the spoken drama have been received with great appreciation when worthy, we can see good reason why this play should hold an important place among the year's releases.

Robert Conness' work in the principal role is flawless.

"THE MAINSPRING"

(Red Feather—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY STEVE TALBOT

NEARLY every dramatic player about the Pacific Coast studios appears in this stock-exchange-mistaken-identity plot by Charles A. MacLean, which Jack Conway directed. Ben Wilson plays the lead and Francelia Billington is the girl, inasmuch as it is she who saunters through the conservatory with lips glued to Ben's at the finish.

The opening scene shows Wilson being ordered from his hall-room by the cruel landlady because he irons his only pair of trousers by gas-iron. Later when he is held prisoner in the home of Francelia and family and assimilates the aristocratic atmosphere, his wardrobe runs from tennis togs to riding rags without explanation. It is also worthy of comment that when a motoring friend invites him to help burn up the gasoline, Ben replies that he has no time, as he must hunt for work. The motorist replies carelessly, "That's easily fixed. Try newspaper work." And forthwith we see Reporter Wilson hired and assigned a most difficult interview.

Described as "The Rattler of Wall Street," a rival broker seems bent upon the ruin of Miss Billington's dady who is sick abed. Thomas Jefferson has a role described as "The Rattler's Fangs." The sick gentleman after a struggle finally admits that he will undoubtedly be ruined unless his son Larry gets back from abroad at once. Ben Wilson, who has just become a reporter and arrives to interview the invalid, is offered ten thousand dollars to impersonate absent Larry and thus bluff the "Rattler" and his "Fangs." In the meantime the real Larry arrives in the city and is kidnapped, and stock exchange scenes pile up the suspense, which results in confusion of the villains who work upon the principle that Larry is safely imprisoned, and are eventually confronted by the bogus Larry, who is none other than the reporter. Both characters are played by Ben Wilson, and in the Larry part he is cunningly moustached.

A vampire appears and has drinks with the latter while he is held prisoner, but otherwise she is not in the picture. Much yacht stuff on board the "Ituna" is shown, and a terrific storm tosses Reporter Wilson, who has also been kidnapped toward the finish, ashore mid the old familiar Keystone rocks. Ed Brady, who is chief scoundrel, is also cast up wrapped in sea-weed, with some of his assistants.

This production is one of decided merit, in that all the villains are severely punished in the end. The good hero wins the girl he loves and she has plenty of money because her hero was on the job to save father's millions when brother Larry was away. The storm at sea is quite stormy too.

"THE MISCHIEF MAKER"

(Fox—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY STEVE TALBOT

MARKING the advent into Fox films of Harry Benham, this is a noteworthy effort of that company, if there were no other distinctions. Opposite pretty June Caprice and opposed to unprincipled John Reinhard, Benham is the ideal hero and his personal pulchritude appeals as of old when he always had a tiny Thanhouserite to rescue or cuddle.

A great part of this picture is devoted to the "girls' boarding-school" atmosphere. It is, on the whole, pleasing and the dressing of girls and scenes appropriate and elaborate. A mildly humorous touch is given by the characterizations of the two spinsters in charge, portrayed by Inez Marcel and Minnie Milne.

The story by Alfred Solman concerns the rescue of the naughty school miss from the wicked artist's clutches, and is probable and ingenious throughout. Flashes of the "statue" of a nude lady and of the boarding-school faculty and pupils at their nocturnal capers will irritate the prudes and tickle their opponents. The lighting and photography are very superior and the subtitling intelligently done.

Margaret Fielding as the jealous maiden who makes the serious mischief by maligning her unconscious rival, Miss Caprice, is clever and shows no inclination to overact at any time. Mr. Benham's old-time fistic talents come into the camera's focus and are as telling in effect as ever—on his opponent and the spectators as well. Altogether a production well worth crediting to John G. Adolfi, its director; the company, the author, and William Fox.

"A MESSAGE TO GARCIA"

(Edison-K-E-S-E—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

ELBERT HUBBARD'S famous brief under the above title, has been read by almost every reading man, woman or child in the country. Picturized with the events leading up to and surrounding the sinking of the Maine, in Havana harbor, and the oppression of the cruel Weyler, it could not fail to be full of interest.

The introductory scenes covering the events leading to the decision of our president to send "a message to Garcia" include a raid by Spanish soldiers on the farm of Dolores' father, who is court-martialed and executed, and Dolores disposes of a traitorous and too amorous Spanish captain with his own dagger. Jose, Dolores' brother, now seeking revenge, comes upon a Spanish officer and his friends in a subterranean vault, and learning that the switches lead to mines in the harbor, throws these switches and the Maine is sent to the bottom of Havana Bay.

Here the meetings of the cabinet officers to decide what America will do are shown, while in flashes the scheming of the Spanish ambassador and his clever female spy, Rosa Gonzales, are made a part of the drama.

Titles, excerpts from the book, carry the forceful language of Elbert Hubbard, and then the messenger is found—one who, asking no questions, takes "the message to Garcia" and goes on his difficult way to evade Weyler's lines and reach the rebel chief.

From this point the play follows the adventures of Lieutenant Rowan, the messenger; the plots against him, and the meeting with Dolores, who finally makes it possible for him to reach General Garcia.

Throughout, the action is well sustained and above average in interest, aside from the splendid story. Robert Conness is possibly a little too "stagy" as the messenger.

"ALL MAN"

(Peerless-World—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

"HE may be a cow-puncher, but he's all man," is the theme of this play, by Willard Mack, in which Robert Warwick, Mollie King, and Gerda Holmes share what honors are to be gleaned from a not too impressive plot. We cannot mention a single brand-new situation in this five-reel drama. And the scenery is too beautiful for Montana, as the picture fans expect to see this wild and rough country. Even the bronchos, except two with brands, would pass as city-bred horses. They are not thin and wiry as they must be in their business of rounding up cattle on long ranges. An old stone wall in one of the foregrounds hardly seems typical of a new country with wild traditions and cowboys so rough they have to be licked into submission before the hero can go on with the plot.

To give an estimate of this picture as a box office attraction is hard. The trio of well known stars we believe will carry the interest, even in spite of the above mentioned shortcomings of story and direction. Mr. Warwick always ably interprets the big-hearted man who shapes his life according to a principle, who reaches the goal of ambition, and this is sure to please the theatre-goer. In this respect this play and plot will doubtless excite real sympathy in the admirers of Mr. Warwick. Miss King, after she awakes to womanhood and discovers that she loves "Jim," is a very likeable character. Miss Holmes makes the jealous, treacherous sister, who burns Jim's love letters to Alice, seem a very real character.

JOE FARNHAM HAS SOUTHERN STUDIO FACILITIES TO OFFER

THE Southeastern Film Corporation which now includes the Garrick studios of Jacksonville, Fla., is popularizing a slogan for the Southern city.

"Twenty-seven Hours from Broadway" is the text, and it refers to the studio facilities afforded in Florida by the Garrick Company, of which Jos. W. Farnham is New York representative, situated in the Candler Building.

The Garrick studio offers to producers in immediate need of locations, studio conveniences, factory or properties, everything necessary. The service of their location man who knows every inch of Florida is available day and night. Beautiful residences, business buildings, alligator and ostrich farms. Jungle, desert, ocean and river locations, and co-operation of the municipal police and fire departments are as certain as is the supply of high-class and intelligent extra people.

Mr. Farnham states that $25 to $50 will pay the daily rental of the studio and aids, according to service required, with special rates by the week. Leaving New York on Saturday afternoon, a company may be at work Sunday evening or Monday morning, and if scene and prop plots are sent in advance, all will be ready for the director on arrival.

A decided advantage in the factory appointments is the saving of time in having negatives developed on the ground and getting what retakes are required without delay. The climate in the Floridian South at this time of year needs no Farnham to spread its fame.

COMMONWEALTH PICTURE CORPORATION IS CAPITALIZED AT $2,000,000

THE Commonwealth Picture Corporation, with headquarters in Chicago, has been organized by H. A. Spanuth, who is also the president of the concern, with a capital stock of two million dollars. Co-operative principles are to be a feature of the enterprise. Some of the best directors and stars in the film business, it is claimed, are to be employed by the management.

"PEARL OF THE ARMY"

(Pathe—Serial)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THE first episode of "Pearl of the Army" starts off with a tableau of the Spirit of '76 which suddenly becomes animated; the drum, the fife, and the flag and all. And then you see Hughes and Roosevelt and Wilson speaking for Preparedness. And after that come some scenes of the militia going off to the Mexican border and after that comes Pearl White riding on a white horse and waving the American flag in the face of the camera. If these scenes don't set the average American audience to cheering nothing else will.

Apart from these preliminary passages the first three episodes of "Pearl of the Army" possess in themselves everything that a bona fide serial should possess. Thrills and mystery galore and conflict between a band of spies bent on securing control of America and Pearl Dare who combats them practically single-handed. We wager that George B. Seitz, who had a hand in the concocting of the plot along with Guy McConnell, introduced the mysterious character who enters in the third episode. Mysterious characters seem to have a permanent place in Pathe serials. This value has often been proven. This character, a man, shows neither pronounced heroic or villainous traits, but a little of both and so his presence is all the more mysterious.

Exhibitors as well as the writer know the composition of Pathe serials. And so we won't employ the old bromide "if the first three are a criterion of what is to follow, etc., etc." There is not much doubt about what is to follow when it is coming from Pathe.

The fourth, the fifth, the sixth and the seventh episode and so on through till the finish will probably be as good as the first, the second and third. And the first, second and third are good; excellent as serials. With serials though, logical situations have no relation, at least no serial has ever been proof against certain criticisms which take the logical viewpoint. But why drag in that which was exiled from the producer's category of words the moment the serial was invented.

Captain Payne of the army staff loses or has stolen from him plans and fortifications of the Panama Canal. Anyone of several persons may be the culprit. His rival for the hand of Pearl Dare, the woman who holds the secret of this man's past, Pearl's Japanese chauffeur, or the Silent Menace, a mysterious character heading the Foreign Alliance whose face is never shown. Captain Payne is drummed from service.

Pearl, not believing him guilty, gets a clue and pursues the Silent Menace to his hiding place and witnesses a meeting between the members of the Foreign Alliance. She is discovered but just escapes being captured by the foreigners. Payne is placed on a train to be transported to prison. Pearl goes along and so does Bertha Bonn, the woman with the past, who is menaced by the Foreign Alliance. The train is wrecked. Captaain Payne is killed and then appears a gentleman by the name of T. O. Adams who bears a striking resemblance to Ralph Kellard. Bertha Bonn has the lost plans and T. O. Adams tries to steal them from her, but is defeated in this plan by the Silent Menace. The episode closes after some precarious high diving and jumping from a cliff into the water and the plans are in the possession of T. O. Adams.

This much of the plot is told in the first three episodes known as "The Traitor," "Found Guilty" and "The Silent Menace."

It is evident that T. O. Adams is to be the mysterious character of the serial and Ralph Kellard as this fellow, shares featured honors with Pearl White. Others who appear are Marie Wayne, Theodore Friebus and W. T. Carleton.

"THE VALLEY OF DECISION"

(American-Mutual Star Production—Five Reels)

REVIEWED BY WILLIAM C. ESTY

IN this offering Richard Bennett forsakes the light comedy type of film he has been appearing in most recently to prove that he has not forgotten how to create throbs of the sort required for a problem play of the most ponderous kind. The plot has little to recommend it, being greatly inflated, and having only one or two strong moments.

The story brings in the popular subject of birth-control, and on this account may pass muster in houses where this issue is a drawing card. The consistently pessimistic tone of the play is lightened at the end by showing that the depressing events pictured were all a dream.

The film opens with an allegorical prelude, presenting various abstract qualities, such as Ambition, Pride, etc., as personified entities. These qualities are represented by the players who are later the principal characters of the play. The prelude adds nothing to the strength of the play and, presented as it is, is even a drawback.

Arnold Gray is a young reformer whose greatest ambition is to abolish child labor. He presents his views on this subject in several lengthy and didactic subtitles. His work interests Jane Morton, and their mutual interests lead them to the altar. Gray becomes a candidate for the governorship about the time his wife is about to visit the maternity hospital. A friend of the couple tells Jane that she should sacrifice her child for the sake of her husband's ambition. Arnold agrees to this, and the necessary measures are taken, Arnold is elected governor, but his child labor bill is defeated, and his wife dies. He then wakes to find it is all a dream, and decides that family responsibilities should take precedence over political ones.

Richard Bennett as Arnold Gray and Adrian Morrisson (Mrs. Richard Bennett) as Jane Morton struggle heroically with the plot. They invest it with every bit of interest their dramatic craft can devise. The support, consisting of Blanche Hanson and George Periolat, is very good. The players are unable to make brick without straw, but they make a game attempt.

"SNOW WHITE"

(Educational—Four Reels)

REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

THIS picturization of Grimm's fairy tale enacted wholly by juveniles can take its place near the head of the list in the library of children's productions. There are not many others near the head, and "Snow White" has a large field to itself, not so much because of its own virtues, but because of its competitors' lackings. The very fact that it is enacted by child players immediately takes away from it that finish which has come to be an ordinary thing in feature productions; but, on the other hand, it gives it an attractive glamour that will readily be appreciated by young theatregoers and smilingly tolerated by their parents.

There are some precocious youngsters in the cast. The girl who carries the role of the wicked princess enters about her work, which such sincerity that the effect created quite eclipses her faults. The young lady of the title role fits very well in her surroundings. It was, however, a mistake to cast a girl in the role of the king. She is always a girl, and no pose she strikes is sufficiently characteristic of the part to overcome the impression of femininity that she creates at the start. Perhaps though, such criticisms should not enter into a review of "Snow White," which is a class picture. It is fairer to dwell on the group of little fairies who dance about in many of the scenes and of the dwarfs who sponsor the cause of Snow White and of the wicked witch and her dog.

The plot is as exciting and absorbing to the younger mind of the present as it was to the younger mind of the past. Snow White is the prettiest girl in the land, and her stepmother, who is not pretty, wants to get rid of her. She tries in divers ways, but fails always, and, of course, in the end Snow White and her prince are united, and the wicked stepmother driven from the land. There are some picturesque exteriors brought into play, while the staging which is rather mechanical throughout and specially in the scenes where large groups are employed, can perhaps be forgiven. A director of such a picture must not only be adept in the art of production, but also in the science of kindergarten instruction.

"THE FLIRT"

(Metro—One reel)

REVIEWED BY J. S. JUDD

A GROTESQUE comedy. Heeza Flirt pushes his rival into the water and thinks he is drowned. This gives an opportunity for a pursuit over hill and dale and through forests, ending up in the home of the pursued beau's sister. After Heeza's Flirt has been burned out of the chimney and is about to be arrested by the sheriff, the man who is supposed to be drowned shows up, and everything ends happily.

Whether "Heeza Flirt" is related to the "Heeza" who is reputed to be so untruthful, or not—he is quite as funny on the screen.

JOHNSON RESIGNS FROM VITAGRAPH

Victor B. Johnson, who for some time has been in charge of the publicity department of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, Inc., tendered his resignation to Manager Walter Irwin last Saturday, and immediately severed connections with the company. Contrary to custom, Mr. Johnson has not "several offers under consideration," but is open for any position in the publicity and advertising line.

NEW EXCHANGES FORMED TO DISTRIBUTE CHRISTIE COMEDIES

During his stay in New York Charles Christie, business manager of the Christie Film Company, producers of Christie comedies, has interested William H. Kemble and H. Clark Mooney, prominent film men of Brooklyn, in the product of his company with the result that they have formed the K. and M. Film Exchange to market the Christie product for the entire state of New York. The present office is located at 587 Fulton street, Brooklyn, where both Mr. Kemble and Mr. Mooney are located. Within a short time, however, other offices will be opened in the remaining districts of the state.

Mr. Christie also reports that A. W. Blankmeyer of Detroit, Mich., has incorporated the Tri-State Film Exchange for the distribution of these comedies. He will handle the Christie output in Ohio and Kentucky and has opened offices in the Sincere Building, Cleveland, and the Strand theatre Building in Cincinnati. In Detroit Mr. Blankmeyer says the comedies are going over big, being shown at the Washington, the Regent and others of the larger and better class houses.

During his trip through the eastern exchange territory Mr. Christie disposed of the western Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights of the Christie product to the Liberty Film Renting Company, 938 Penn avenue, Pittsburg. This is the last territory that remained open and now the entire field of the United States is covered.

HUMOR FOUND IN FILM ON MARRIAGE AND MOTHERHOOD

In "A Short Sighted Crime," which will be released by Unity this week, Tweedledum is given a chance to be irresistibly funny, and he lives up to his opportunities from beginning to end. The story is very modern, even though it depends for its fun upon two of our very oldest institutions, marriage and motherhood.

Tweedledum's young wife, whom he has just married, is very fond of dolls, and, even though she ought to have been too grown up to cling to them, she cannot persuade herself to give up all of her make-believe children and secretly keeps one.

C. E. HOLAH GOES TO INTERNATIONAL

C. E. Holah, for the past year manager of the Cincinnati branch of the V-L-S-E and later the Vitagraph exchange, has accepted an appointment to take charge of the local office of the International Film Corporation to be opened here shortly. He has been succeeded as manager of Vitagraph by Stanley Hatch, who was formerly connected with the General Film Company.

Serial with Irene Castle Viewed at Strand

Out-of-Town Exhibitors Vie with Manhattan Showmen to Express Enjoyment of "Patria" Picture and Music Offered at Morning Performance for Their Benefit

FOLLOWING the private showing of the International's new patriotic serial, "Patria," at the Ritz-Carlton, on Monday night, more than 1,000 exhibitors assembled November 22 at the Strand theatre for the exhibitors' view.

Theatre owners from the metropolitan district as well as from Philadelphia, Washington, Boston, Hartford, Springfield and Pittsburgh were present.

As was the case on Monday evening at the Ritz-Carlton, three episodes of "Patria" were shown. A full symphony orchestra, under the direction of Prof. Vecsey of the Ritz-Carlton, furnished the incidential music, which has been arranged especially for "Patria" by Prof. Vecsey and Robert Hood Bowers.

The picture was afforded an enthusiastic greeting by the audience. Many of the scenes were loudly applauded—particularly the one in which Mrs. Castle makes her dive from the side of a steamship to escape the conspirators, who are endeavoring to secure the $100,000,000 defense fund.

Prior to the presentation of the picture an elaborate musical program was given by the Strand theatre pipe organ. The showing was a success.

Bluebirds for 1917 Already on the Wing

AS the Bluebird program advances to the close of its first year, there is promise of a half-dozen features that will further demonstrate to exhibitors and their public that "The Play's the Thing," and that Bluebird has a fine idea of what plays are good and what are best for the better class of theatres. Timeliness will be a destinctive feature of Bluebird's holiday offerings, when "The Right to be Happy," screened from Dickens' immortal classic, "A Christmas Carol" and "The Shriveled Soul," are shown on Christmas week and the week preceding.

Rupert Julian produced "The Right to be Happy" from E. J. Clawson's adaptation, and he will be the featured one among the players. Harry Carter will interpret Marley's ghost, and Francelia Billington and Agnes Vernon will be the featured actresses. This will be Bluebird's offering for December 18.

Lynn Reynolds has made a production of "The Shriveled Soul" to be shown as the Christmas week Bluebird. In this feature the closing episode shows a Christmas Eve scene of great human appeal. George Hernandez, who has won legion of admirers for his work in earlier Bluebirds by Lynn Reynolds will be the star, and his supporting company will be led by Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez.

For New Year's week the return of Cleo Madison in "Black Orchids" another Rex Ingram production, will be welcomed by exhibitors and their public who recall "The Chalice of Sorrow" in which Miss Madison was lately introduced as a Bluebird star. Wedgewood Nowell and Francis McDonald will be Miss Madison's principal support in the New Year's offering of the company.

Bluebird's for January 8 and 15 have been selected, but the order of their appearance is not definitely fixed. Violet Mersereau, in "The Greatest of These," and Dorothy Phillips, in "The Piper's Price," will complete the first year of the series. Miss Mersereau's new director, Edwin Stevens, produced "The Greatest of These," and the assertion is made that this is the best medium that has ever been supplied her.

Exhibitors are showing great interest in Bluebird's first special release, "The Eagle's Wings," a feature designed and constructed to advance nation-wide interest in the patriotic movement for industrial preparedness. This release will be made, December 4, independent of the regular program. Bluebird exchange managers are marketing the feature along states rights lines, and report an encouraging demand for exhibitions.

Radical Change Occurs in Detroit's First Run Plan

Regent Gets Paramount—Metro Franchise Goes to Majestic—Washington Wants Dollar Features—Broadway-Strand Retains Fox and Selznick Pictures

THERE is a complete change in the first-run situation in Detroit, which is of unusual importance, inasmuch as it reflects several new booking policies.

The Regent theatre, Woodward and Horton avenues, gets Paramount, and will run both releases each week, one three days and the other four days.

The first-run Metro franchise goes to the Majestic theatre, Woodward and Willis avenues. This house continues to hold its first-run franchise on Triangle and Artcraft. It pays for both regular services while playing only one picture.

The Washington theatre has the first-run Greater Vitagraph franchise, but it is understood that the Washington is to go to dollar pictures, running big spectacular features, only such as "Civilization" for indefinite runs, so the Vitagraph pictures will go into the Liberty theatre temporarily, and later into the New Madison.

The Broadway-Strand holds the first-run franchise on William Fox pictures and the Selznick productions.

NEW POISON ONLY MAKES MAN APPEAR DEAD

Enrique Moreno, introduced in the third episode of "The Vampire," again plays a leading part in the fourth chapter of this Gaumont-Mutual photo-novel, released as "The Dead Man's Escape," December 14. Moreno is the bandit who operates in opposition to the Vampires, the arch criminals of Paris. It will be recalled that he was in the hands of the police at the end of the third episode, "The Ghost." In the present release he foils the police by aid of a subtle poison.

FIRST AFFAIR OF NEWLY CHARTERED JERSEY LEAGUE

At a meeting of the New Jersey state branch of the Exhibitors' League, held November 17, it was decided to hold the first annual ball of the New Jersey Exhibitors' League on Thursday, February 1, 1917, at the Kreuger Auditorium, Newark.

The following officers were selected to take charge: J. G. Crawford of the Crawford theatre, Newark, chairman; Phillip Bomstein of the Criterion theatre, Newark, treasurer. Special arrangement was made with F. E. Samuels to act as secretary and manage the affair.

This is the first ball ever held in New Jersey under the auspices of the Exhibitors' League, which was only recently granted a charter.

IVAN ENTERS NEW TERRITORY

Harry Samwick, manager of the New York and New Jersey Exchange of the Merit Film Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, announces that the latest Ivan special, "The Sex Lure," has tended to install the Ivan Productions in favor with other high-class releases by the fact that he has just booked the photoplay de-luxe on the B. F. Keiths Circuit, the Proctor Circuit, the B. S. Moss Circuit, the Marcus Loew Circuit and all leading theatres throughout the two states, the opening date of which is November 13.

EDWARDS RETURNS FROM EUROPEAN BATTLEFIELDS

Nelson E. Edwards, of the International photographic staff, has returned from Germany after having spent the past year on the German, Belgian and French battlefronts. Mr. Edwards brought back with him many thousands of feet of film for the Hearst News Pictorial that he was unable to send.

"Of all my unusual experiences and adventures," said Mr. Edwards, "I am proudest of the fact that I am the only foreigner to have visited Keil Canal and Wilhelmshaven, the great naval strongholds of the German fleets. I was at both places soon after the sea fight between the British and German fleets off Skaggerak. There I made films of the battleships, torpedo-boats and submarines.

"I visited the Balkans and Constantinople and later I returned to Berlin and was accorded the privilege of going to the western front in the Vosges Mountains. Most of my films taken in that section were made under actual fire. Several times I barely saved my entire outfit from destruction from shrapnel by running into dugouts.

FOX BUSINESS IN DETROIT IS BIG

The Fox Film Corporation is enjoying a phenomenal business in the city of Detroit. The records of the exchange—verified by the NEWS correspondent—show that Fox is furnishing service at present to sixty-two theatres within the city limits of Detroit, seven of which are located within a stone's throw of the City Hall in the downtown section.

Dow Thompson, recently appointed manager at Detroit, is making a record for himself.

"Pearl of the Army" Backed by Big Advertising

Pathe's Preparedness Serial Will Run in Various Newspapers—Exhibitor's Advertising Comprehensive—Data for Scenario Contests Furnished

PATHE EXCHANGE is putting the final touches on a tremendous advertising campaign for its latest serial "Pearl of the Army." As it is based on preparedness the natural advantages of such a theme can be readily comprehended. The exhibitor will be provided with every possible advertising medium from twenty-four sheets to house heralds, while newspapers in practically every city of prominence will inaugurate the campaign by teaser ads and will follow with the story in serial form by Guy W. McConnell. Scenario contests and all data concerning them will be outlined to the newspapers and exhibitors, these to be conducted similar to those now being run in conjunction with "The Shielding Shadow."

Contracts have been signed with the following newspapers for publication of this nation wide campaign: Albany Knickerbocker Press, Atlanta Journal, Atlanta Constitution, Chicago News, Chicago Herald, Boston Globe, Boston Post, Buffalo Times, Buffalo News, Butte Post, Charlotte News, Charlotte Observer, Cincinnati Times-Star, Cincinnati Post, Louisville Herald, Cleveland News, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Dallas News, Dallas Journal, Denver News, Denver Times, Des Moines Register and Leader, Des Moines News, Detroit News, Indianapolis Star, Kansas City Post, Kansas City Star, Los Angeles Times, Los Angeles Record, Milwaukee Sentinel, Minneapolis News, St. Paul News, Newark Star, New Orleans States, New Orleans Item, New York World, New York Journal, Warheit (New York), Omaha News, Omaha World Herald, Philadelphia Ledger, Philadelphia North American, Philadelphia Telegraph, Pittsburgh Press, Pittsburgh Chronicle, Portland Journal, Salt Lake Tribune, San Francisco Call, Seattle Times, Spokane Review, St. Louis Globe Democrat, St. Louis Times, Washington Times, Washington Herald, Baltimore American, Columbus Dispatch, Columbus Monitor.

There will also be advertising in the following cities: Syracuse, Schenectady, Nashville, Chattanooga, Augusta, Birmingham, Macon, Jacksonville, Savannah, Knoxville, Ft. Wayne, South Bend, Peoria, Davenport, Springfield, Mass., Rochester, Ithaca, Elmira, Olean, Jamestown, Columbus, Dayton, Lexington, Huntington, Frankfort, Charleston, Bluefield, Toledo, Ft. Worth, San Antonio, Houston, El Paso, Pueblo, Cheyenne, Colorado Springs, Terre Haute, Wichita, Lincoln, Reading, Wilkesbarre, Scranton, Wheeling, Cairo, Springfield, Ill., and Memphis.

Essanay Announces Increased Feature Production

Saturday Evening Post Story and Popular Novel First—Henry Walthall Is Duck Hunting and Will Find His Next Picture Well Under Way on His Return

A PROGRAM change of importance to exhibitors has just been announced by President George K. Spoor, president of Essanay. Not only does the announcement advance on the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service program a widely advertised feature, but it indicates an increased production of multiples from Essanay.

"The Breaker" will be offered two weeks earlier than formerly announced. This will make it available on December 4th. Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig appear in the featured roles with Ernest Maupain heading the support. Fred E. Wright directed the picture. It was taken from Arthur Stringer's thrilling story in the Saturday Evening Post.

Composite Photograph of Ann Murdock, Holbrook Blinn, Nance O'Neill, Charlotte Walker, H. B. Warner, George Le Guere and Shirley Mason, Stars of "Seven Deadly Sins" (McClure)

To take the place formerly occupied by "The Breaker" on December 18th "The Phantom Buccaneer" will be offered. This is taken from "Another Man's Shoes," by Victory Bridges. Richard C. Travers and Gertrude Glover will appear in the leading roles.

"The Truant Soul," Henry B. Walthall's superfeature maintains its original date, December 25th. The picture is now in the process of assembling and will be ready for trade showing early in December. Mary Charleson takes the feminine lead in support of Mr. Walthall and Patrick Calhoun as the heavy.

On the completion of this picture Mr. Walthall left imemdiately for a duck hunting trip with J. C. Jenkins, an exhibitor of Neligh, Neb. On return Mr. Walthall will immediately begin work in a new feature.

"THE DEEMSTER" FROM ARROW SOON

The Arrow Film company's super-production of Hall Caine's famous book, "The Deemster," is rapidly nearing completion. During a period of over four months the entire cast has been working day and night at Block Island, and at the Arrow Film Corporation's studio, located at Yonkers, New York. Over 100,000 feet of negative have been taken, and it is expected that the picture will be released in from seven to ten reels.

Tabloid Reviews for the Busy Exhibitor

PRODUCTIONS FROM ALL PROGRAMS

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

"The Brand of Cain." (Selig. Three reels. Mon., Dec. 4.)—Not shown for review; the story follows:

George Wade is sent to America by his family. His monthly remittances from England are his only income, and this he spends on liquor and women. Wade meets Lennox, another Englishman, and Lennox gives him a half interest in his mine. Lennox goes East to meet his newly arrived wife, leaving Wade in charge of the mine. Wade sells the mine for $200,000 and steals the money. Lennox discovers this theft and attacks the ungrateful man. Wade kills Lennox, and goes to England. He cannot forget the "Brand of Cain," however, and a swift and unusual punishment comes to him.

Appearing in the cast are Kathlyn Williams, Harry Lonsdale and Wheeler Oakman. Colin Campbell directed.

"The Purchase Price." (Selig. Sat., Dec. 9.)—Not shown for review, the story follows:

Helen refuses the proposal of Van Dyke, a young clubman, but marries Howard, a young broker who she believes to be wealthy. Howard steals a large sum of money to meet his wife's extravagance, but is discovered. Helen now wishes that she had accepted Van Dyke.

Robyn Adair, E. J. Brady and Virginia Kirtley are in the cast.

"The Egg." (Essanay. Two reels. Tues., Dec. 5.)—This comedy-drama would have been far more effective if the whole plot had not been given away at the start. As it is, the dullest spectator can easily foresee the outcome, a fact that detracts from the interest. Richard Travers and Marguerie Clayton, the leads, handle their parts well, but are unable to inject much interest in the weak plot. Marjory Miller, an heiress, reads a book in which the heroine reforms a derelict and marries him. She determines to do the same thing, and picks out "The Egg," a character of the slums. "The Egg" is a hard-boiled one, however, and she makes little progress with him. She finally discovers that he is the author of the book that inspired her, and that his rough-neck habits are only put on. She marries him at once.

"A Waiting Game." (Essanay. Wed., Dec. 6.)—Not shown for review; the story follows: Ben, a shabbily attired hobo, enters a high-class cafe and orders everything in the place. He cannot pay for it, and a riot ensues. The manager thinks he has solved the affair by letting Ben work out his check as a waiter, but several costly errors prove this an unwise proceeding. Ben Turpin plays the hobo.

"A Failure at Fifty." (Essanay. Three reels. Sat., Dec. 9.)—Not shown for review; the story follows:

Old Tim is a successful factory superintendent until his college-bred son starts to work in the same place. The son inaugurates an efficiency system that breaks the heart of the old man: He leaves the factory and is called a failure by his family. Tim meets a young designer who sells him a half interest in a patent. The patent makes them both rich, and Tim's family is glad to welcome him back and call him a success.

In the cast are Thomas Commerford, Alice McChesney and Royal Douglas.

"Jailbirds." (Kalem. One reel. Tues., Dec. 5.)—A comedy of much merit which will surely find favor with any picture lover who has been introduced to Ham and Bud. Having left town to evade the law, these two worthies decide to get into jail anyhow, for they are hungry. They succeed, but under more favorable conditions than they anticipated for they are made guards and recognize among the prisoners one Roy L. Flush (Henry Murdoch) who is incarcerated for conducting a gambling house. The gambler's daughter Flora Flush (Ethel Teare) endeavors by a ruse and at the expense of the new keepers, to effect her father's release and would have succeeded had not a guard shot him as he was making his getaway. He is returned to his cell and the keepers are vindicated.

"The Wizard's Plot." Episode of "Grant, Police Reporter." (Kalem. One reel. Fri., Dec. 1.)—George Larkin as Tommy Grant of the Chronicle again covers himself with glory, this time receiving a clue from an anonymous note. Following the clue, he discovers that "Marvelo" is advertising himself as an extraordinary chess player. Professor John Atwood (Robert Ellis), by whom he is employed, is an anarchist of deepest dye and is using his every endeavor to stop the shipment of munitions abroad. After throwing a live bomb into the slip and getting on the trail of the bombmakers, Grant has a series of hair-breadth escapes. A fight in the rigging of a freighter is one among the many. For patrons desiring action aplenty, hazardous situations and tense moments, this episode should not fail to provide enough. In the cast are Ollie Kirkby, "the woman in black" who gave the clue; Harry Gordon as Inspector Rathbone and William McKay as City Editor Mansfield.

"The Trial Run." Episode of Hazards of Helen" (Kalem. One reel.)—A strain of humanism runs through this reel, which is replete with interesting situations and the photography is consistently perfect. The freight agent of a railroad is about to lose his position because of his inability to secure business, and at Helen's suggestion he tries to get the large contract of the Fruit Growers' Association, but without avail. The same day, however, Manager Morton (G. A. Williams) of the fruit concern meets with an accident and is pinioned beneath his own car with the inevitable Limited's screeching blast already within ear range. Helen looms upon the scene, sizes up the situation, mounts her pony and races away to meet the oncoming train. Just in the nick of time a more terrible disaster is averted and Manager Morton, anxious to show his appreciation of Helen's quick wit and quicker action, invites the girl to call on him.

Instead, however, she sends the agent who is in danger of losing out and a bargain is made that the business of the fruit concern will be handed over on condition that their present schedule of time can be beaten, so a "trial run" is proposed and accepted. A new record is made and the railroad gets the new business and the man in fear of losing his position gets a new lease of official life. Very interesting throughout.

"The Lineman's Peril."—Episode of Hazards of Helen. (Kalem. One reel. Sat., Dec. 9.)—This reel is literally filled with thrills, and uses to wonderful effect the sagacity of a dog. Tom Rogers (P. S. Pembroke) a lineman for the railroad on a tour, fell from a telegraph pole and lay prone across the tracks in the path of the Limited. Being unable to help himself owing to his hurts, the lineman scribbles a note which he places in the sweatband of his hat and dispatches via dog. Helen Gibson, the operator at Lone Point, gets the note; requisitions an automobile; beats the Limited by a nose and so saves the lineman from more serious injury. Teddy, the dog, shows almost human wisdom and of course is duly honored by being presented with a brass studded collar.

"Border Wolves." Seventeenth episode of "Girl from 'Frisco" (Kalem. Two reels.)—The trickery of low caste Mexicans is here amplified to a degree. Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson), so-called "Empire Builder" on account of his engineering feats by which he has been able to reclaim much arid land in the South and West, is about to buy a cattle ranch on the Mexican border and has established a credit of $50,000 in the local bank. A Mexican named Panchita learns of this and informs Gordoza (a walking arsenal with some following and described by the present owner of the ranch as "a patriot for revenue only") who decides upon a scheme to secure the money. Maria (Josephine West), a half-breed helper around the cattle man's house, is forced by Panchita to remove all the arms from the house, and this done a raid is planned. Ace Brent and his daughter Barbara are made prisoners and held as hostages while John Wallace (True Boardman) is hurried to the bank to draw the $50,000 on an order signed to Ace Brent. The money is on its way back when Barbara having caoled Gordoza into drinking more than his capacity makes her escape, purloins the musket of a sleepy sentry and starts out on a campaign of restitution. She rounds up the surviving cowboys and they start out to meet the party returning from the bank and a lively battle ensues. As a climax Barbara has the supreme satisfaction of shooting Gordoza, just as he was about to plunge a dagger into her father's breast. Wonderful scenery is shown and the pictures are remarkably distinct.

UNIVERSAL PROGRAM

"Pass the Prunes." (Nestor. Mon., Dec. 4.)—One of the best Nestor's of recent date written by Bess Meredyth and staged in a sanatarium with Lee Moran as the doctor in charge. In this role Moran has one of the funniest character parts of his life. Eddie Lyons and Priscilla Dean are the lovers as usual and win out against the villainous actions of Moran.

"Ashes." (Gold Seal. Three reels. Tues., Dec. 5.)—Featuring Claire Mersereau, this drama written and produced in the East by Robert Hill makes an average release of the heart interest type. The story is familiar at every turn, concerning, as it does, the slavey who is to get an inheritance, and the conniving parties who attempt to pass off one of their kind as the slavey, but the incidental business and the production help it along to a considerable extent and give it a pleasant surface. Stanley Walpole, Joseph Granby and Helen Slosson have the other principal parts.

"His Golden Hour." (Victor. Tues., Dec. 5.)—An exceedingly old comedy laid on a farm where the farmhand after all proves the hero by beating up the villain and marrying the farmer's daughter. The gags are all old, and the plot is not big enough for even one reel's space. Harry Wulze wrote the scenario for Roy Clements' comedy which includes Ed Sedgwick and Belle Bennett.

"The High Diver's Curse." (L-Ko. Two reels. Wed., Dec. 6.)—Dan Russell has the role of "props" in this amusing offering and creates a most ludicrous character. He works in a variety house, and is "in" on every act. He succeeds in spoiling the strong arm stunt, and in a sob playlet brings the hose into play for rain. For the star performance on the bill "props" has to play cupid and swing about on the wires. The audience takes this as an insult and the whole show ends in an uproar. Russell seems to be a sure-fire hit in anything nowadays.

"The Shadow." (Victor. Two reels. Thurs., Dec. 7.)—A fairly diverting mystery story that ends humorously, concerning the bet made by a society man that he can turn Raffles and get away with it. The man's identity is kept secret through the body of the picture, hence the mystery. Alan Holubar, Harry Carter and Neva Gerber are the principals. Eugene B. Lewis wrote the scenario. A Dittmars Educational trails on the last reel.

"The Call of the Unborn." (Imp. Two reels. Fri., Dec. 8.)—A conventional picture presented rather cheaply, as two settings and the exteriors form the backgrounds for all the scenes. The husband slowly drifts away from his wife to pay court to another woman, but the two are reunited by a mutual friend who influences the husband by telling him of the coming child. M. K. Wilson, Edith Roberts, Lillian Concord and Malcolm Blevins are the principals.

"Oh, You Honeymoon." (Nestor. Fri., Dec. 8.)—The manner in which the employes of a hotel reformed a non-tipping honeymoon couple is dwelt on with considerable humor in this release, which is the first comedy written and produced by Captain Leslie T. Peacocke for the Universal. He deals with delicate situations that are just decently risque enough to add suspense and spice to the reel. Alida Hayman is the lead. Quite worthy to be branded a Nestor.

"The Good Woman." (Bison. Two reels. Sat., Dec. 9.)—Another of William V. Mong's productions in which he casts himself as a Western bad man, who reforms when a good woman comes into his life. The climax comes when he becomes suspicious of the woman and discovers she isn't good at all, but she pleads and he forgives. Nellie Allen has the title role, while others are George Pearce, Harry Holden and Frank Witson.

"The Tramp Chef." (Joker. Sat., Dec. 9.)—William Franey as a tramp with a passion for cooking, who gets arrested and cooks for the town sheriff is the central figure of this Joker, produced by William Beaudine. It makes an average comedy, although the business done by the players is not quite as funny as usual. Others are Charles Conklin, Gale Henry and Milburn Moranti.

"The Penalty of Treason." (Rex. Two reels. Sun., Dec. 10.)—Douglas Gerrard and Ruth Clifford are featured in this. The daughter of Calienta is in love with Campi, the musician, and the date is set for the wedding, when three soldiers sojourning at the tavern insult her. She informs Campi, who seeks redress, with the result that he is bound and imprisoned at the Inn. While there he overhears the soldiers planning to sell maps of the country's fortifications, and when he gains his freedom through the efforts of his sweetheart, he reports to military headquarters all that he has learned. To his utter dismay, however, he is discredited, and it devolves again upon his sweetheart to save the day, which she does by entering the sleeping quarters of the officer involved in the transaction, and taking from his wallet the incriminating document. Result—dishonored officer, happy sweethearts, wedding bells, big reward. A timely military subject.

"An Artful Dodger." (Novelty. One reel. Sat., Nov. 25.)—An amusing picture in many respects; but not properly rounded out, and there are too many evidences of the bibulous habits of Bill Parsons, the rounder. To celebrate the consummation of a highly profitable real estate deal he and an old crony decide to hold a stag party—but as the subtitle announces "Every stag has his doe, and a very hilarious session ensues." He gets home "with the milkman," and is promptly ejected by his long suffering wife, who not only threatens him with divorce, but endeavors to have him served with the papers. There is where his talents as an artful dodger are put to several severe tests, for the process servers unsuccessfully resort to all kinds of subterfuges to entrap him. After living in his office for several days, and on one occasion being fed through the keyhole of the door by means of straws thrust into a bottle of milk from the outer office, he prevails upon his friend to intercede with his wife. This is done and the rumpus ceases just as he is declared heir to the estate left by an uncle.

MUTUAL PROGRAM

Reel Life, No. 30. (Gaumont. One reel. Sun., Nov. 26.)—Gathering cocoa is the first subject treated, and the various processes are admirably depicted from the gathering of the bean to the shipping of the dried product. Then follows "Up-to-date Fashions," under the supervision of C. E. Pressley, and "Things not generally known," which includes the fact that $750,000 annually is paid out by the insurance companies for various accidents. The gathering of scallops; some new dances now in vogue, viz. "Taps," "Two Two" and the "Baltimore Waltz." A really interesting reel and instructive.

"The Starbucks." (Mutual. Two reels. Thurs., Nov. 23.)—Opie Reed is seen in all his quaintness in this picturization of his extensively read novel. His piquant humor is apparent when Lige Peters, who has been refused Jasper Starbuck's daughter in marriage, manages to get himself appointed Deputy U. S. Sheriff, and threatens to jail Jasper Starbuck for moonshining and after showing the notice of his appointment asks Starbuck "Do you know what that means?" to which "It means I may have to kill you" is returned. But seeing that the chances are considerably against him he puts out his fires for all time. Peters, however, having been appointed, is determined to bring the old man to justice, and consequently effects his arrest. On learning that the prisoner, of his own volition, put out his fires, and had decided to quit moonshining, the Judge discharges him, much to the chagrin of Lige Peters

This is a picture that will appeal forcibly to all classes, it being full of pathos and heart interest.

"Through the Swiss Alps." (Gaumont. "Tours Around the World." One reel. Nov. 26.)—Some of the most charming mountain scenery with forestry and sunlight at its best as photographed for the most part from a moving train. Some of the views secured in the valleys and across gorges by the cameraman after he has alighted from the train, are superb. Such short subjects as this will make a perfect interruption for any program at any time.

"Fate and Death." Sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky" (American. Two reels). Mon., Nov. 20.—This is a very intense and descriptive picture illustrating to what lengths an unscrupulous brother, with his confederates, will go to secure possession of the priceless bauble—the "Diamond from the Sky." Through it all is shown most vividly the innate cunning of the gypsy—one who has been befriended by the owner of the jewel, and the means he resorted to, to circumvent the machinations of De Vaux (Ward McAllister), who is in league with the brother Blair Stanley (William Russell), to obtain possession of the gem. Quitta (William Tedmarsh), king of the gypsies, makes an ideal gypsy, quick of action, nimble of foot and ever on the alert, but in spite of all his watchfulness the diamond again falls into the hands of the conspirators and the youthful heir to Stanley Hall, Fairfax, Va., finds a watery grave.

"The Dawn of Betterment." (Mutual. Two reels).—The cast includes Edna Payne, Dorothea Wolbert, Herman Bainbridge, Robert A. Myles and others, and while the photographs are very good, the moral pointed is not so forcible, except that it proves that being "put through the mill" and getting a thorough overhauling on an Arizona ranch, implants a stern sense of manhood into a youth who up to this time had been allowed to run wild with unlimited capital at his command. Prior to his "deportation" he had made ominous reflections upon a poor stenographer, because she resented his overtures, but as the "Dawn of Betterment" approached he admitted that he had falsely accused the girl, hence his trip West. Out there he conducted himself in fine shape and on returning married the girl he had maligned.

"Buddy's Christmas." (Mutual. Two reels).—This picture, which features E. K. Lincoln, has a decidedly charming climax, coming as it does on Christmas eve, and incidentally puts to an end a long existing feud between the Allens and the Marvins, mountaineers. Though a feudist the surviving Marvin has a human heart throbbing in his breast, and although he carries out his threat to abduct and marry by force a pretty member of the Allen clan, he saves little Bud Allen from death by exposure, befriends and nurses the tiny chap and his kindliness so impresses Judith Allen (Elsie Glynn), who is virtually his prisoner, that she intercedes when hostilities are about to be resumed, and in the end the marriage is sanctioned. A Christmas tree, the lack of toys for same and Buddy's desire for toys impel Marvin to take desperate chances, but the picture is pleasing, and with the exception of a shooting scrap and a fight with knives, should appeal strongly to the youthful element of movie fans, at this season of the year. Others in the cast are Philip Hahn and Mabel White.

"Lass of the Lumberlands," Chap. 5, "The Burned Records." (Signal.)—How the "Recall" may have just the opposite effect from that of airing political graft is the theme of this chapter of the daring stunt-vehicle of intrepid Helen this week. Holmes has forced a decision by the railroad commission that his logs must be hauled over the rival railroad. When success seems assured, new obstacles are found. The Mayor refuses to be party to a frame-up which involves blowing up the engine room of the mill and the forced closing of the plant. So steps are taken to remove him and substitute a political hireling who will do this. The plan succeeds well, by using the rival mill employes to vote the new Mayor into office; but many of these votes are illegal. The records proving this, however, are burned by setting on fire the court house. Helen, imprisoned, looses her bonds and signals with a mirror that she will bring aid—she summons the State militia and is about to prevent the election of the new Mayor, when hope again is dashed by the refusal of the commanding officer of the troops to take action in the absence of proof, the ruse of burning the records having succeeded. What Helen's next move will be is a puzzle.

An extra thrill is furnished with Helen's hand over hand trip through mid air by the telegraph wire route.

"Mutual Tours Around the World." (Gaumont.)—Egypt, France, and Belgium contribute interesting parts to this educational-scenic. The mosques, the old gates, the narrow streets and the public fountains of Cairo, alternate with the familiar Arab types, mule drivers and veiled women. The gorges of the Vesebien River, France, in which it was interesting to note the modern trolley with its ugly poles has invaded, and views of Antwerp before the war, including the noted "corporation houses" and the harbor and quays.

Reel Life, Number 29.—Zinc smelting, fish catching (we judge, at Provincetown, Mass.), tea growing in South Carolina, and draping gowns on models from whole bolts of cloth "while you wait," furnish four very interesting topics for this magazine in pictures.

WEEKLIES

Universal Animated Weekly, No. 48. (Wed., Nov. 29.)—Women sell flags and Zeppelin souvenirs to aid wounded soldiers, London, Eng.; glimpses of German battle criusers near Heligoland; Illinois militia mustered out, Fort Sheridan, Ill.; Boston greets 2nd brigade back from border; Thanksgiving turkeys; Vanderbilt Cup Race, Santa Monica, Cal.; explosion kills four, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Congressman Bleakley flies to Washington from Philadelphia; Governor Whitman of New York on Mexican border; Army-Navy football game, New York City; girls dance in airy draperies, St. Louis, Mo.; spectators come via aeroplane to see Yale-Harvard football game; speed craft for capturing submarines, Long Island Sound; cartoons by Hy Mayer.

Pathe News, No. 95. (Sat., Nov. 25.)—Boy Scouts drill, Oakland, Cal.; peanut industry, Norfolk, Va.; Francis Joseph, late Emperor of Austria, as he appeared shortly before his death, Vienna, Austria; eight large engines shipped to Russia, Oissel, France; allied sympathizers congregate, Salonica, Greece; animated cartoon pertaining to the war by John C. Terry; manufacture of toys, Winchendon, Mass.; Vanderbilt motor race, Santa Monica, Cal.; and other scenes depending on localities in which shown.

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC.

"The Faithless Friend." (Pathe Re-issue. Two reels.)—Old style Western, featuring pals in the desert with one drink of water and a case of small-pox between them. The cur takes the water and leaves the small-pox on receipt of advice that the sick man's girl has fallen heir to big money and wants him back. All comes right in the end by his own demise taking place in the same desert under the eye of the one time pal who did not die after all, but married the squaw and is passing with his tribe just as the villain crawls in front of the camera. George Gebhardt is the heroic pal and shows his nobility of character by kissing his unfaithful friend as the latter expires, and then deserting his squaw wife and her child, to go East and get what is left of his old sweetheart and her fortune. The female lead seems to be a real squaw. A dozen other Indians appear.

"Fashions and Charity." (Pathe. One reel.)—Model named Betty in frequent sub-titles, appears in park and salon with Fall wraps which are for the most part green in color if descriptive leaders are to be believed. The "Charity" part of title probably provoked by opening scene which is interior of a children's hospital wherein "Betty" distributes flowers.

"The Shielding Shadow." (Astra. Two reels. Eleventh Episode.)—In this installment Bianca has a change of heart and attempts to aid Ravengar who is in desperate need. Thus does this episode earn its title, "The Great Sacrifice,' for the woman loses her life in an effort to dispose of dynamite which the villains have tossed into the cellar occupied by Ravengar, whom she loves. Both reels are full of action and besides the blowing up of a house and mountainside, there is a thrill in the leap of one character from the roof to the ground as he escapes from his four-story house after killing an intruder. A neat motive is pictured as he calmly enters his front door after the jump and is discovered seated in the library by servants who come to announce the murder above stairs.

"Luke, Rank Impersonator." (Rolin. One reel.)—Fast comedy stuff on the order of early Keystone Chaplins. Dining room scene with soup slinging and table tossing by company in evening dress. Stupid cop and semi-conscious vagrants get laughs in the exteriors. Luke plays Lord Helpus with a decidedly alcoholic slant which is not without its funny moments.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

ARIZONA.—Prescott: The De Luxe Theatre Co., Inc., is constructing a $25,000 house which will seat a thousand persons. H. O. Wilson, manager of the company, announces that it will be completed by the middle of February. Features will be the policy.

CALIFORNIA.—Riverside: The Loring theatre has been reopened under new management, and will be conducted by A. Latto. The policy will be to show only big feature films and road theatrical attractions. The bottom price for this house will be twenty-five cents.

Long Beach: E. Gagnon, formerly connected with the Empress theatre, has plans prepared for the erection of a new eleven hundred-seat house; and work of construction will be started shortly.

CANADA.—Saskatchewan: Manager K. M. Leach of the Eagle theatre has only recently opened the New Lyric theatre in Swift Current. Fox and Paramount features are shown. The interior decorations are unusually pretty and Manager Leach has girl ushers at work in the house. The New Lyric is considered one of the finest theatres in Saskatchewan.

ILLINOIS.—Mt. Carmel: The Joy theatre has just installed two large mirrors in the entrance of the theatre.

IOWA.—Alta Vista: On account of poor heating facilities the moving picture theatre has been closed for the winter.

Lamoni: I. R. Anderson, manager of the Grand theatre, has closed down.

Iowa City: The Princess Theatre managed by T. A. Brown, has been closed. Mr. Brown turned over the lease on the building to commercial interests.

Mutual Releases for Week of November 27 Include "A Dream or Two Ago"

MARY MILES MINTER, in a five-reel Mutual star production, "A Dream or Two Ago," from the American studios, and Margarita Fischer, in a five-reel Mutual star production, "Miss Jackie of the Navy," from the Pollard studios, head the Mutual schedule for the week of November 27.

"A Dream or Two Ago" is from the pen of Henry Arthur Phillips and was scenarioized by Arthur H. Gooden. This vehicle gives the lovable little Mary Miles Minter a great opportunity to display her charming mannerisms, and she does some exceptionally good work in it.

The story of "A Dream or Two Ago" tells of Millicent Hawthorne, the six-year-old daughter of a rich New Yorker, who is lost in a panic resulting from a robbery in a jewelry store. The little girl falls into the hands of a noted character of the underworld, a certain Mother Gumph. She is brought up in the worst possible surroundings and taught all the tricks of the underworld.

The girl, after spending a few years under the tutelage of Mother Gumph, becomes a match girl, and later, her beauty attracting the attention of a restaurant manager, becomes a cabaret singer in a cafe of rather unsavory reputation.

The unprincipled cafe manager traps the girl into a private dining room adjoining his office. Here a struggle ensues and the girl drops a purse which she had had in her possession years before, when she fell into the hands of Mother Gumph. This purse is the means of the girl's finding her mother and father. There is an intensely dramatic climax in this production and Miss Minter makes the most of it.

Supporting "Lovely Mary" in "A Dream or Two Ago" are Lizette Thorne, Gertrude Le Brandt, William Carroll, Orral Humphrey and little Dodo Newton, who does some very appealing work in the part of Millicent at the age of six years. The production was directed by James Kirkwood and is from the American studios.

The Margarita Fischer production, from the Pollard studios, is most thoroughly enjoyable. Miss Fischer portrays a new role in her latest vehicle, that of a lovely girl who masks as a sailor boy, and her characterization is wonderfully good. Harry Pollard is responsible for the direction of the production and is to be congratulated for the great success he has achieved.

Miss Fischer is given an opportunity in "Miss Jackie of the Navy" to display her light-hearted and sparkling personality.

Jackie Holbrook (Margarita Fischer) is the rollicking daughter of rich parents. Her mother is determined that she wed into the nobility, but this is not Jackie's idea of "wedded bliss." She is the belle of Coronado and all of the men worship at her shrine with the exception of Captain Robert Crowne, who is averse to the girl's actions.

Jackie decides to bring Crowne to her shrine on his knees and she assumes the place of a sailor on his ship. She sails with the ship to the Island of Vergania, where they are sent to quell an uprising of the natives. The girl's effeminate actions cause much mirth on board ship.

When the ship arrives at Vergania Jackie is one of the sailors to be sent into the interior. Here Crowne is captured by the Voodoo worshippers and is about to be offered to their gods when Jackie saves his life. Later, when Jackie's identity is discovered, it causes the sailors much delight, and Crowne, realizing that he has fallen in love with the girl, wins her consent to an immediate marriage.

On Monday, November 27, "When the Tide Turned," a two-reel Mutual drama, featuring Lillian Hamilton and Frederick Church, is scheduled for release. Both of these Mutual stars have proven their ability to inject heart interest into drama, and this production is a very good sample of their work.

"Tours Around the World," the one-reel Gaumont scenic, which contains beautiful and interesting scenes from war-ridden countries of Europe, will be released on November 28.

On Wednesday, November 29, "Mutual Weekly," which never fails to film all of the happenings of interest both in this country and Europe; "See America First," an interesting travel picture showing the noted and beautiful spots in America, and "Kartoon Komics," on the same reel, will be released.

A single-reel American comedy, featuring Louise Lester, and a two-reel Mutual drama are to be released on Thursday, November 30.

Friday, December 1, will have as its release a one-reel Cub comedy, featuring that ever laughable comedian, George Ovey, supported by the regular comedy Cub cast.

J. Warren Kerrigan will appear in an American drama in one reel, entitled "The Capture of Rattlesnake Ike." Kerrigan is well cast in this story of the wild West and the production is full of thrilling action. This production is scheduled for Saturday December 2 in addition to which is a one-reel comedy, title to be announced later.

Paddy McQuire will be seen in "The Wicked City," and Gaumont's magazine reel, "Reel Life," is scheduled for Sunday, December 3.

"JIM BLUDSO" FINE ARTS' NEXT WITH LUCAS

Wilfred Lucas will make his next appearance on the Triangle program in a Fine Arts version of "Jim Bludso," one of the most famous of the Pike County ballads by John Hay. It was this picturesque poem that first attracted widespread attention to the great American diplomat and secretary of Lincoln—long before he had dreamed that he would some day rank as our ablest modern secretary of stage. This will be the first feature that Lucas has done since the completion of "The Microscope Mystery." Following that production he was laid up for about two weeks with an attack of pneumonia, and has only recently recovered his accustomed vigor. It is expected that "Jim Bludso" will test his stamina to the limit, as the story is a swiftly moving series of events in the life of a two-fisted steamboat engineer on the Mississippi River.

As all readers of the John Hay classic will recall, the climax represents the burning of the big passenger steamer, "The Prairie Belle." In order to secure the essential realism for this effect, the Fine Arts Company has purchased the largest side-wheel river seamer obtainable, and will proceed to burn it to the water's edge. Lucas will direct his own production, and he has engaged Tod Browning to assist him. Olga Grey will take the lead in his support.

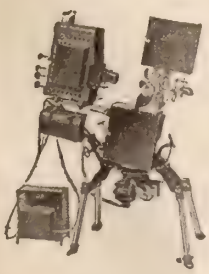
POWER'S LOOP SETTER

AUTOMATICALLY PREVENTS LOSS OF THE LOWER LOOP

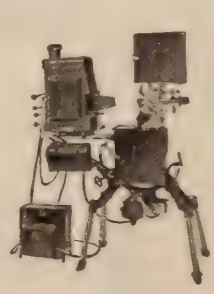
THUS ELIMINATING THE MOST FREQUENT CAUSE OF TROUBLE IN MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION

A DEVICE AS SIMPLE AS IT IS EFFECTIVE



AN EXCLUSIVE FEATURE OF POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH

When the lower loop is lost, the film necessarily rips or tears apart. While making repairs an impatient audience is entertained by a dark screen.



Power's Automatic Loop Setter eliminates this constant source of trouble by continuously maintaining the lower loop.

The loop forms around roller A. Any slackening of the loop draws the roller upward, thus disengaging the take up. The loop immediately assumes normal proportions. The roller springs into its original position and the take up again starts to operate.

Everything for Theatre, Exchange and Studio

Credit

LAST week's "get-together" editorial and the letters which it contained brought forth a letter from a prominent exhibitor who speaks feelingly of the condition which confronts us.

Before taking it up, let's see what started the argument and why our friend wrote in.

THE original question was "Where is the trouble?"—the "trouble" being a question of credit and why it is not as good now as it was two or more years ago.

* * *

IT is admitted that the condition exists to a greater or less degree all the way down from the manufacturer of equipment through the distributor down to the exhibitor. In working out a remedy, we must begin at the root of things—the exhibitor—and work back, as he is the man for whom the goods are produced and whose money keeps the wheels of production in motion.

* * *

WE already find a movement among the dealers—they are out to improve things—a step in the right direction, for anything which is progressive helps even though it does not ultimately work out eaxctly as planned. Any concerted action on their part will be in the form of enforcing credits and demanding security in one form or another. This is all right as far as it goes, but it is protective and not constructive.

* * *

OUR claim is that to be lasting and beneficial, the exhibitor is the man to start things.

Our friend writes:

Gentlemen:

* * *

YOUR suggestion that the exhibitors "get-together" is all right; it will cure a great many of the complaints which the exhibitor is voicing to-day. But how are you going to mix oil and water?

* * *

THERE are but two classes of exhibitors. Those who have succeeded, and those who haven't. The successful ones may be short-sighted and ignorant and doing for the industry at large a harm that can never be remedied. They may secure their film service by methods some men would not want to use. They may act on the principle that they alone have a right to exist and that the less fortunate competitor should get out. The unsuccessful ones are the ones who want to "get together"—and it is often physically impossible for them to do so.

* * *

AN organization in which the most successful men in the business will not join is weak and powerless. An organization dominated by the already strong against the weak is a minority organization. For there are fewer strong men in any business than weak ones. This, unfortunately, is the condition in the motion picture industry to-day. I refer of course to the big issues, the united "front" which a body of exhibitors could present against many of the obviously short-sighted and ignorant policies of the present distributing organizations.

* * *

"GETTING together" by exhibitors can be successfully engineered only where it affects interests which are common to the whole. Sunday closing, unfair taxation, unfair demands from organized employees, flagrant injustice to all theatres from any source, can be "organized" against, successfully, provided there are not personal animuses which keep certain members out. But even in this case, much can be accomplished by those who will get together for the common good. Unfair censorship usually fosters a get-together spirit, but even here frequently the most powerful exhibitors in the district are the ones who always show clean pictures and think "they" will not be affected.

COME to such questions as discrimination in service, pitting one exhibitor against another in bidding for service, high price of service due to such causes, there will be no "getting together" so long as the "hog" of the crowd is able to get near the trough and elbow the others away. And so long as the film exchanges let this "hog" get all the good films and starve the little fellow to death we will have no "getting together."

* * *

THE thing to do, of course, is for those who will get together, to do so for the common good, for the good of all exhibitors not alone themselves. Then it may be possible for the members of the association, who may be imagined to have helped one another to the point where they are, with a solid front, able to compete with the one or two dominating exhibitors who have refused to join them at the start, to compel even the "hog" to get out of the trough and give somebody else a chance.

Yours truly,

MAKING MONEY.

OUR friend who signs himself "Making Money" speaks feelingly, but there is another angle to be considered beside actually fighting adverse legislation such as Sun-

A B C of the Motion Picture Operating Room

The Final Installment on the Manufacture and Properties of Motion Picture Carbons—The Adaptor for Use with Silvertip Negative Carbons—The Formation of Craters—The Proper Setting of Carbons and Other Projection Remarks

INASMUCH as the lamp of the Motion Picture Projector of today is designed for standard size carbons, a special adaptor is necessary when using Silvertip carbons. It was found in the course of many experiments that steel and cast iron were too high in resistance, which caused overheating of the carbons, excessive needling, and short life. The engineers of the National Carbon Company designed a bronze adaptor; illustrated in Fig. 1, which is being furnished to the users of Silvertip carbons free of charge with initial orders. The life of a 6 in. Silvertip averages about seven 1,000 ft. reels of film, when used at the rated amperage.

In Fig. 2 we see the carbon in the adaptor ready to be placed in the lower carbon jaw of the lamp. The adaptor itself, by referring to Fig. 1 you will see is nothing more than two sections of bronze, so shaped as to fit each other, thus making a most convenient holder and one that will not give the trouble which is experienced by the use of one piece adaptors.

Proper Crater Formation

The formation of craters is an important factor in projection. Crater formation is directly dependent upon the setting and manipulation of the carbons. By setting the lower or negative carbon a trifle ahead of the upper or positive, on both alternating and direct current, better craters can be formed, resulting in increased candle power and minimum trouble at the arc. Continuous freezing of the carbons should be avoided, as the craters are quickly destroyed and the candle power considerably decreased.

Why High Amperage Is Necessary

The high amperage used in motion picture projection, especially for alternating current circuits is necessitated by the thickness and somewhat opaque condition of colored and dark films, and also by the fact that some of the light is obstructed by the aperture plate of the projector. The length of throw, size of picture, and type of screen used are all important factors in determining the amount of current necessary to obtain the most satisfactory screen illumination. High amperage on A. C. is also necessary because of the low efficiency of the A. C. arc.

It has been found, in the testing laboratories of the N. C. Co., that by maintaining a ⅛-inch arc length on A. C. throughout the trim of the carbons the best operating results are obtained. This arc length seems to prevent a double source of light, or colored ghost effect, so often noticeable where screens are illuminated with an A. C. arc.

Cause of Carbons "Needling"

Maximum "needling" or "spindling," as we term it, is reached when the carbon has carried the greatest possible current for a given set of conditions. The higher the current (amperage) the greater the needling. A ⅝ x 12 in. cored carbon will safely carry 60 amperes A. C., but when we go above this current consumption needling takes place, causing destruction of craters and correspondingly decreased screen illumination.

On direct current there is but one source of light to consider—the incandescent tip of the positive carbon. A quarter to half an inch arc length is necessary therefore to avoid obstruction of light by the tip of the negative carbon. A very interesting feature observed by operators when using the Silvertip as a lower is the absolutely clear space in front of the positive crater. No interference with the light from the very small negative carbon is noticed and no yellow cast of light is thrown on the screen from reflections of the negative carbon.

Why the Arc "Flickers"

When large diameter carbons are used on direct current, the amount of current used is usually insufficient to properly shape the tip of the carbon, and a blunt end results which causes the arc to wander, thereby producing a flickering light. The Silvertip negative has just enough surface at the tip of the carbon to keep the arc from traveling. At any time during the trim the arc can be started off smoothly and at full candle power.

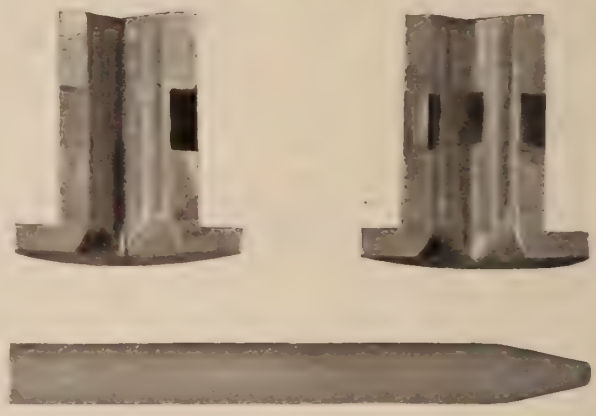

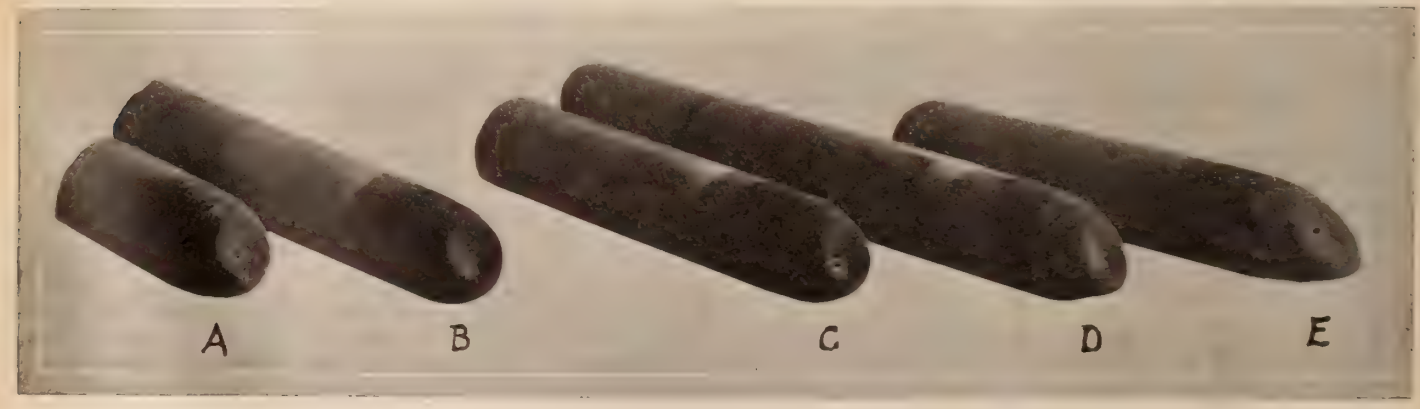

Fig. 1

Tests conducted in the past have demonstrated definitely that the size of the negative carbon together with the arc length are the direct causes in producing the proper crater shape. The use

Color Cinematography

The "Slow Kinemacolor" Process—Novel Methods Characterize the Production of Color Films as Practised by Wm. F. Fox—Securing Correct Color Distribution and Gradation—An Interesting Method Depending Upon Chemical Reactions

ANOTHER of the subtractive systems of color cinematography which is rapidly being brought to the stage of perfection is the so-called "Slow Kinemacolor" process. This interesting process is the invention of Mr. William F. Fox, the laboratory expert of the Kinemacolor Company of America, and the results so far shown promise an active future for the Kinemacolor concern.

In the course of his experiments Mr. Fox has evolved not one process but in reality three different methods of producing cine films the images of which exhibit extremely good natural color effects. A brief outline of the various ways in which this inventor achieves the same end will therefore prove worthy of study.

Taking the processes up in their order as disclosed in patents granted to Mr. Fox, the first method (disclosed in U. S. Patent No. 1,166,121) is worked as follows: A negative is made on panchromatic stock, using the customary Kinemacolor camera. When developed this negative is comprised of red and green sensation images alternating upon the film strip. A positive is next made from this negative, the same being after developments the exact reverse of the negative.

The Fundamental Principles

Getting down to the root of the system, it is ultimately proposed to print from the red sensation images and color them blue-green and then to print right on top of the red sensation positive another positive record from the green sensation negative images, the latter to be colored a shade of red complementary to the blue-green coloring of the red positive images. On further consideration, it will be seen that if we print from the red sensation negative images and superimpose on this a printed record from the green sensation negative images, the composite positive images, when not developed, will not have their transparent and opaque areas so disposed as to form, when colored blue-green and red respectively, a correct color record.

Mr. Fox has found, however, that if a print be made (upon positive stock of course) from the red sensation images of a previously prepared Kinemacolor positive film and if this be printed over (with the images in superposition) from the green sensation images of the original Kinemacolor negative, the developed result will be capable of taking up the two necessary colors in such manner as to correctly reproduce the hues of the objects photographed.

Making the Color and Monochrome Negatives

One mode of procedure is as follows: A "color negative" (so-called by the inventor) is first made by printing in superimposition on one strip a record of the green sensation images of the original negative and the red sensation images of a positive strip prepared from the original negative.

Next a "monochrome negative" is made, this being the result of printing upon one strip the superimposed red and green sensation images of a normal Kinemacolor positive.

Printing the positive for use in the projecting machine is now accomplished through the use of double coated positive stock (emulsion on both sides), an impression from the "color negative" being made on one side while an impression is printed from the "monochrome negative" on the other side (of the double coated positive stock of course).

After this projecting positive, printed on both sides, is developed fixed and dried, the side bearing the positive impressions from the "monochrome negative" is waterproofed with celluloid varnish to protect it from the subsequent coloring operations.

The images on the side of the film printed in contact with the "color negative" are now toned greenish-blue by immersion in a bath containing Vanadium chloride, Ferric chloride and other suitable ingredients. Toning completed in this bath the film is fixed in Hypo and washed, after which it is immersed in a red dye bath compounded with an aniline dye. When the red dye has been taken up sufficiently to make the highlights of the picture show approximately white, the dyeing is stopped and the film washed and dried, when it is ready for use.

As the purpose of the uncolored images (printed from the "monochrome negative") on the other side of the finished film has not been explained, it will be well to state here that these images serve to correct the gradations of the finished result, thus improving the rendition of any blacks and whites which may have been apparent in the objects photographed.

Another Method

A modification of the method above outlined is described in U. S. Patent No. 1,166,122 and is practised as follows:

A negative of the subject is again made (on panchromatic stock of course) with the Kinemacolor camera.

By the use of a special printer a positive is now made bearing (one right after another on the film strip) a record of the green sensation images on the original Kinemacolor negative.

The positive for use in the projecting machine is now produced by printing on ordinary (single coated) positive stock from the red sensation images of the original Kinemacolor negative and then printing over this, in exact superimposition, from the images of the specially prepared green sensation positive. After developing, fixing and washing this combined positive is toned bluish green in a Vanadium and Ferric chloride bath such as was previously mentioned, and, after fixing in Hypo and washing is dyed in a red dye bath as was also previously described. When the color effect is seen to be correct, the film is washed briefly and dried, atfer which the printed and colored picture surface of the positive is given another coating of sensitive positive emulsion. On this re-emulsioned surface, a correcting image is printed, this being formed by printing respectively from the red and green sensation images of the original Kinemacolor negative, the two printings being superimposed and in exact register with each other and also with the previously printed and colored images. When adding the correcting images only about one-half of the usual exposure is given when printing from the red and green sensation negative images respectively. The function of the correcting image is to improve the gradations in the finished positive as has been previously set forth.

In the two methods just described of producing these colored positives such a lot of double, triple, and one might say, quadruple printing is resorted to that, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to produce finished positives having the different color images in exact register and showing no vestige of overlapping color around the edges of objects in the picture.

Something New in Film Coloring

A much simplified and equally efficient method of making projecting positives in natural colors has been devised by Fox and is the subject of U. S. Patent No. 1,166,123.

This method which is, we believe, the one most utilized by the inventor, is very interesting, as it depends more upon chemical reactions than upon mechanical operations.

Again a negative of the customary Kinemacolor variety is made.

A print is next made on positive stock from the red sensation images of the Kinemacolor negative. A special printer must be used, as these red sensation images follow one right after the other on the positive strip. This red sensation positive is now developed and when correct density is attained, development is stopped by immersion in a bath of water to which a slight amount of acetic acid has been added. It is to be noted here that only a light exposure has been given in printing from the red sensation negative images.

Keeping the film in the dark room the developed red sensation positive has its images next toned bluish-green in a bath containing Iron perchloride, Potassium Ferricyanide and Hydrochloric acid. In this blue-green toning operation certain metallic compounds are formed which would prove detrimental to some of the subsequent operations. These are, accordingly, now eliminated by immersing the film (still in the dark room) for a period of about 30 seconds in a 1 per cent. Hypo solution. This brief immersion in the weak Hypo bath, while sufficient to free the posi-

TRAVEL GHOST AGAIN

Johnstown, Pa.: I am running a Powers 6-A machine with a two-wing shutter. When I frame clear up there is a travel ghost in the right-hand bottom corner. When I frame clear down the travel ghost is in the upper left hand corner. I have moved my shutter blade both ways, but when I get the ghost out of the bottom it is worse at the top. I have reached the point where I do not believe it is possible to get it out at all, but am writing you to see if you can help me out. When the framing lever is in the centre my picture is all right, but when I change my trouble begins. Am projecting a 14-ft. picture, lens, 4in., E. F., throw 60 ft., current 110 volts D. C., pulling 40 amperes. Condensers a 6½ and 7½. Are these the proper condensers to use? It does not seem to me as if they were, for I have to keep a large spot to get a good picture.

Answer: From your explanation of the travel ghost the only thing that I can see is that your shutter blade is not wide enough. This can be remedied by riveting on a strip of metal, making the blade somewhat wider; the width would have to be determined by experimenting. I have never favored the use of a two-wing shutter on D. C., and I believe that if you were to write to the manufacturer giving him the size of lens, length of throw, etc., he would send you a shutter that would enable you to get perfect results. If you are one of those who favor the two-wing shutter proposition you might make a drawing of your shutter and send to the factory describing the trouble you are now having and ask them to send you the proper size.

Regarding the condensers, you might try two 7½-inch condensers with your 4-inch lens, which would possibly give better results than those you are now using; before doing that, however, pull your lamp house as far back as it will go, then if the size of the spot is not reduced use the size condensers I have suggested.

TURNING SPROCKETS

James Jordan, New York State: The intermittent sprockets on both my machines are badly undercut. Will it do any harm if I take them off and turn them around, using the teeth on the opposite side?

Answer: Reversing the intermittent sprocket is rather a difficult job, and although you might do it successfully the chances are that you might not, and the better and safer way would be to either get a new sprocket or send the movement in to the manufacturer and let their mechanics do the job right. The life of the sprocket could be prolonged by the reversing process, but you would have to be very careful to see that the old pin holes in the sprocket bring the teeth in exact line with the tracks on the aperture plate, or else you would have to drill new ones, a task that might better be left to the manufacturer.

Undercut sprockets are caused by the pull of the film and can be materially decreased by careful adjustment of the tension. If the tension is too tight the strain in pulling the film through the mechanism will become so great that the best sprocket made will soon show signs of wear.

ANOTHER WAY TO CLEAN SLIDES

Jack Melcher, member of Local 355: In your Projection Department, under date of November 25, I see that you recommend the use of alcohol on slides. I have always found that there is always trouble in getting the smoky effect off with a rag, and consequently have discarded the use of alcohol in my operating room. In its place I am using the well-known cleaner, Bon Ami, for cleaning slides, condensing and projection lenses. I think if you will try this out, using a very thin coating of Bon Ami, you will see a remarkable difference in your projection. I wish you would give me your comments on this matter in an early edition of your department.

Answer: There seems to be some good points in favor of Bon Ami, as you suggest, but I am rather dubious as to using it on the surface of the projection lens; the surface of a projection lens must be kept as highly polished and as smooth as possible, and even though "it hasn't scratched yet" there is the possibility of its doing so unless great care is exercised in its use. The use of alcohol was recommended by me for this reason: There are times when you will receive a set of slides that are so badly gummed up and so sticky, from careless binding, that it would be a crime to project them upon the screen as they are. By the use of a little alcohol on a rag this substance may be quickly and easily removed; then by breathing upon the slide and wiping the vapor off with a clean cloth the slide will show no trace of fogginess. The same holds true with the projection lens. I experienced the smoky effect, but by allowing the alcohol to dry thoroughly and then breathing on the surface and wiping off with a soft clean cloth I was able to keep the lenses in first-class projecting shape. I would like to have operators try out both methods, Brother Melcher's and my own, and report on them.

MERCURY TUBE STARTS HARD

Harry Kanto, Dubuque, Ia.: I have been having a little trouble lately on account of the failure of my rectifier tube to start; have to jam my carbons together several times before it will pick up. What can be the matter?

Answer: It is possible that the tube is losing its vacuum. But unless there are bubbles in the mercury this would not always prove true. The principal cause for failure of the tube to start quickly is, it may be located in a very cold place; this happened some time ago in a certain theatre where the Mercury Arc was placed in the lobby of the theatre for advertising purposes. Everything was all right during warm weather, but as soon as it became colder the tube gave considerable trouble, which was remedied by placing the apparatus inside the theatre.

The safest thing for you to do would be to order an extra tube and keep it on hand at all times for just such an emergency. The putting in of a new tube will only take a few seconds time. In the newer type of Rectifier switches are so arranged that if anything happens to the tube you can instantly change from the tube to the reactance, using the reactance as an economizer. If your rectifier is not equipped with these switches, it should be. And the connections and switch are easily added. The General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., will send you diagram which will show you how to proceed if you write them.

CARBONS TO USE

New Rochelle, N. Y.: Can you inform me as to the best carbon to use on alternating current? Are there any good carbons made in this country? I have always used Bio's, but they are hard to get now. Would be pleased to have your answer as soon as possible.

Answer: It is not permissible for this department to recommend the product of any one manufacturer. There are several American carbon manufacturers who are putting out first-class carbons. Look on the advertising pages of the NEWS for their addresses and write each of them asking that they send you samples. Try out each make and the ones that give you the best results are the ones you want. Each operator has his favorite brand, therefore it is hard to come to any conclusion as to what constitutes the BEST. For the proper size carbons used with a given amperage consult the table in the "A B C of the Motion Picture Operating Room" which appeared in a recent issue of the NEWS

CANNOT GET A CLEAR FOCUS

Bayonne, N. J.: I am having trouble focussing my picture, it is impossible to get the entire picture in focus at the same time, when I get one point sharp another part will be out. Can you tell me the cause and how to remedy it?

Answer: It is quite possible that you have a worn aperture plate or the tracks are not true, or your tension spring is lapping over the track. My suggestion would be that you examine your aperture plate to see if it has not become badly worn or that one of the tracks has not worn faster than the other, and that your tension springs set square on the tracks and straight up and down. If the trouble is not there, then take out your projection lens and sprinkle a little talcum powder on the face of the front lens, put it back in, turn on the light, keeping the carbons frozen, so that you can look through the lens. The talcum powder will enable you to see an image of the aperture plate on the front lens, and if this image does not appear in the exact center of the lens, the lens needs to be squared up with the aperture. This is probably where your trouble is, if it is not in the aperture plate or tension springs.

A B C OF OPERATING ROOM

of a comparatively large negative carbon with short arc lengths is the immediate cause of the sharply indented crater formation encountered by many operations when using D. C. This defect can be overcome and the light on the screen greatly improved by the use of the Silvertip carbon.

Hissing at the Arc

Hissing at the arc, especially on D. C., and the flickering arc are caused by faulty carbon manipulation, or improper handling of the arc. Missing is a function of the length of arc, current and voltage. It occurs with any length of arc if the current is increased beyond that which the arc can carry. By lengthening the arc, thus decreasing the amperage, hissing can be avoided. On alternating current, hissing sets in at about 45 amperes and increases with the current. Flickering and hissing on alternating current arc also noticeable when the arc is not centered on the cores.

In Plate 1 we have a variety of D. C. craters which are worthy of study. A and B are poor craters due to low arc voltage. These carbons were consuming 30 amperes of current with a pressure of 45 volts, using a ½-inch solid carbon as a lower; notice the formation of the crater on these carbons and you will realize the amount of illumination being lost and the amount of current being wasted. C shows the crater formed where the current was 30 amperes with 45 volts, and using a 5/16-inch Silvertip lower, an improved condition is noticeable which can be still further improved as we see at D by allowing the amperage to remain the same, 30 amperes, and increasing the voltage to 52 volts, using as before a Silvertip lower, the crater is now taking on a more perfect shape and is forming itself so as to increase the illumination upon the screen, but the ideal condition has not yet been reached. E shows the crater formed with a current of 30 amperes and a voltage of 58, using the same carbons as in the preceding sets. The ideal condition has now been reached. The proper crater formation has been made and every available amount of light is being directed to the condensers in such a way as to increase the screen illumination and consequently the brilliancy of the picture, without any increase in cost for current consumption.

In concluding I wish to emphasize the importance of having the carbon holders and the adaptor free from scale or dirt to insure good electrical contact. This makes for longer carbon life and less needling, which means less ash deposit in the lamp house, and no heating or corrosion of the holders. With proper attention to these few details as outlined above there should be no trouble experienced by an operator in getting the best results.

To William F. Kunzmann of the National Carbon Company, whose hearty co-operation enabled me to present this paper on Carbons, I extend my thanks.

I. G. Sherman.

MOTION PICTURE OPERATORS OF NEWARK, N. J., HOLD ANNUAL DANCE

ON Friday evening, November 17, Kreuger's Auditorium, Belmont avenue, Newark, N. J., was the mecca for lovers of the dance, the occasion being the third annual reception and dance of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 244, I. A. T. S. E.

The various committees in charge outdid themselves to make this affair one of the most successful ever given by the Newark Local. The dancing began early in the evening and continued until a late hour, or early hour rather, for it was after three A. M. before the last horn blew and we donned our wraps for the return journey home.

That the popularity of "movie" stars is not on the wane was evidenced by the throngs that surrounded the box where was seated the one star who has been rightly termed "the operators' friend"—Rose E. Tapley.

Miss Tapley, with Watler T. McGrail, of the Vitagraph Company, were the first of the celebrities to arrive, followed later by Miss Mollie King, the winsome and pretty little star of the Pathe studios, who is now at work on a feature production for the World-Brady Film Company, and that ever popular leading man who is so well and favorably known to the thousands of movie fans that little is left to be said other than that Carlyle Blackwell was there.

Shortly after midnight Reginald Cooper, president of the local walked upon the stage and announced, in the full glare of the spot light, that he was about to introduce, though the introduction was unnecessary, the prominent stars who had consented to grace the occasion with their presence.

Miss King, the first to be introduced, responded very prettily, and by her charm and grace added to the already long list of her admirers. Carlyle Blackwell, when introduced, made the following characteristic remark: "I am a much better motion picture actor than I am a talker," and from the applause that greeted this remark it was evident that the majority of his hearers agreed with him.

The big surprise of the evening came when Rose Tapley appeared upon the stage, and President Cooper, waiting for the applause to cease, said: "Miss Tapley, on behalf of Local 244, Motion Picture Operators of Newark, N. J., it gives me great pleasure to present you with this token of esteem and admiration which is shared by each and every member of the organization which I have the honor to represent; it is the union card of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. of the Uinted States and Canada, and makes you an honorary life member of Local 244." Miss Tapley received the card, which was enclosed in a handsome morocco card case, with her name in gold on the cover, and with it the solid gold emblem of the local.

It was evident that this was most unexpected, for in making her response, which was in part: "I feel that in receiving this I am receiving a very great honor, and I wish to assure you that I will always try to prove myself worthy of being called your 'sister,' and you can not imagine the feeling that fills my heart at this time," and throwing her arms around Brother Cooper's neck she kissed him (and Cooper's wife there, too)!

After the introductions had been made the floor manager announced that all was in readiness for the grand march, the orchestra under the leadership of Professor Voss began to play and the dancers trooped out upon the floor, Miss King and Mr. Blackwell leading, Mr. McGrail and "Sister" Tapley, next in line, followed by President and Mrs. Cooper and the other members of the exectuive board, with their wives and sweethearts, the march was nicely executed and the ladies each received a handsome bouquet of flowers. Applause greeted the leaders at every turn, and Miss Tapley, with her "union card" proudly displayed, was the cynosure of all eyes and the envy of many. All in all the affair was a grand success, it being estimated that over two thousand were in attendance. Among those occupying boxes as guests of the Newark Local were: Rose Tapley, Mollie King, Lucette Vackey and the Messrs. McGrail, Blackwell and James C. Harvey. The Precision Machine Company was represented by E. M. Porter, general manager, and Messrs. Kaplan, Darrow and others.

The officers of Local 244 are as follows: President, Reginald Cooper; Vice-President, Thomas F. Burns; Recording Secretary, M. A. Carney; Treasurer, William C. Uessler; Business Representative, Jack Walsh; Assistant Business Representative, Michael D'Anton; Sergeant-at-Arms, Joseph Valentine; Trustees, Gus Benner, Edward Wiegers and Arthur G. Whelpley.

TINTING MOTION PICTURE FILM

In the following article, prepared by the Cine Film Division of the Eastman Kodak Company, will be found some interesting data concerning the characteristics and use of dyes suitable for Cine film tinting. Coming, as this article does, from the world's largest manufacturer of cinematographic film stock, the information therein contained will doubtless prove valuable to all readers interested in the technical aspects of film production. —EDITOR, Camera Department.

THERE are numerous ways of reproducing the color of an object on the screen and the precision of the color rendering may be varied from almost scientific accuracy down to a mere suggestion of color. The most perfect rendering of natural colors on the screen is produced by what is known as the three-color process which was worked out in France some years ago. This process consists of projecting three pictures simultaneously through red, green and blue filters, the images being superimposed on the screen. It is not likely that this process will come into general use in view of the extra length of film required—not to mention the special taking and projecting machines, coupled with skilled operation.

Where great accuracy in color rendering is not required, the two-color projection process may be employed, though in this case also twice the length of film has to be used, and likewise a special projector.

In view of the great advantages offered by having color in the film, numerous attempts have been made to reproduce natural colors on the film itself by a purely photographic process. So far this has not been entirely possible though most beautiful results have been produced by painting the film by hand or by means of stencils. Such a method of coloring is naturally expensive, considering that each individual picture must be treated more or less like a water-color painting, though in most cases the end justifies the means.

Still lower down in the scale of methods for producing correct color rendering is that of tinting the film, whereby a veil of color is produced over the black and white picture on the screen. Although somewhat crude, the effect is very pleasing and is usually preferable to no coloring at all. In drama, accurate coloring of the film is secondary so far as the public is concerned, since, when the mind is concentrated on the plot, only a mere suggestion of color is necessary, e. g., blue-green for moonlight, etc. The effect may be produced either by means of color filters used in front of or behind the projection lens, or by coloring the film itself. By using magenta, yellow and blue-green filters, usually consisting of sheets of dyed gelatine either individually or in combination, almost any color may be produced.

Color filters are seldom used at the present time, except for producing special effects, having been abandoned on account of the difficulty in keeping them clean, and because the operator must be continually watching the picture so that he may insert or remove the filter between two successive scenes. Beautiful effects, however, may be obtained by using a composite filter, the upper half blue-green and the lower half red, and placing it in front of the projection lens. The effect is to give a blue-green sky and a red foreground, the degree of shading being determined by the distance of the filter from the lens. The scheme was extensively employed in exhibiting the picture "Civilization" and has great possibilities.

The same effect as that produced by a color filter may be obtained by coloring the gelatine coating of the film, which process is known as tinting. In tinting, successful results are only obtained by close attention to details. The tint is attained by means of dyes, and as most dyes are prepared especially for use with textile fabrics, such as silks, woolens and cottons, a dye which will produce a beautiful tint on silk may be of no use for dyeing a gelatine film. The choice of dyes is, therefore, limited to those which give good results with motion picture film.

The dye must be inert, that is, it must not produce any action in the film. Many dyestuffs when used at a concentration as low as 1 per cent. will affect gelatine at a temperature of 70 F. and at 80 will soften the film to the extent of partial solution. A gelatine coating that has been softened in this way will lose its flexibility on subsequent projection, producing what is known as "brittleness."

There are several factors that produce brittleness. The dye may corrode, depending upon its particular make-up, or it may contain impurities in the form of adulterants, especially during war times. A good way to find out if a dyestuff is likely to develop brittleness is to heat a sample of film, half of it dyed, for forty-eight hours in an oven at 100 C. If any difference in brittleness is noticed between the dyed and undyed portions of the film after this treatment, the particular dye should not be used for tinting. To prevent softening of the film, only a diluted dye solution should be used, say, one of about 2-10 of 1 per cent.; a solution of ½ of 1 per cent. is seldom needed.

Another peculiarity of many dyes is the tendency of the dye to bleed or be washed out on immersion in water. If film, which has been tinted with such a dye, is allowed to remain too long on the racks previous to drying, the little pools of water left on the film will become charged with dye, and on drying uneven markings will be produced. This effect is very apparent on the screen, so that the selection of suitable dyes is further restricted to those which have the least tendency to bleed.

Hypo is another bitter enemy of tinted film and a dyestuff that is not affected by it must be used; otherwise any fixing solution left in the film, or any drops accidentally splashed onto it, will at once take out the color.

After careful experiments the Eastman Kodak Company has found the following dyes to meet the requirements as nearly as possible. They are known commercially as Chromotrop F. B., Orange G.R.X., Quinoline Yellow, Brilliant Patent Blue and Napthamine Blue 12B. In formulae they are referred to as Cine Red, Cine Orange, Cine Yellow, Cine Blue-Green and Cine Blue respectively. They are made in Germany and obtained through the dye houses in this country. From these five dyes almost any desired tint can be obtained by suitable mixtures. A beautiful green, for instance, is obtained by a combination of cine yellow, 9 ounces, 130 grains; cine blue green, 7 ounces, 175 grains and 50 gallons of water. If a deep, rich blue is desired, dissolve 4 ounces of cine blue in 50 gallons of water. The solutions are best obtained by dissolving the dyestuff in as small a quantity of hot water as possible and filtering through fine muslin. This solution is put into the tank and water at 70° F. added to make the required amount.

The above dyes are the commercial grades and contain about 20 per cent. loading material, but in view of the heavy dilution of the dye, this will not materially affect the film. Pure dye-stuffs can be obtained but their relative high cost prohibits their use commercially.

The usual strength of the dye bath is 1-5 of 1 per cent. Fire scenes, sunset and moonlight effects require a stronger bath, say, ½ of 1 per cent. To obtain the best results, only good, plucky, positive film should be used. Fifty gallons of solution will usually tint about 40,000 feet of film.

The dyeing is done either by the tank or drum method. If by the former, the film is wound on racks and lowered into tanks. While dyeing the racks must be agitated to prevent uneven dyeing and the accumulation of air bubbles. The drum method is somewhat easier to manipulate but requires more floor space. The film is wound on drums that revolve in shallow trays containing the dye solution. Ten minutes will usually be sufficient for tint-

Music and the Picture

Music Still Neglected in Smaller Theatres

THE real importance of supplying a good and suitable musical accompaniment to moving pictures is being acknowledged with greater insistence from day to day by all who are interested in this phase of the amusement. During the past few years there have been ever-increasing inquiries as to the suitable music for particular films. This has created the so-called "Musical Cue Sheet," a list roughly classifying the scenes into their various moods.

But when that is done, how much does the musician benefit?

The conscientious musician will strive to improve the appropriateness of his music as he plays to the film at each successive performance, but he is obliged to experiment in the presence of his audience, and by the time he has brought about a fairly good result the picture has finished its run at that theatre and an unknown film takes its place.

And this process must be repeated by thousands of musicians. No wonder that lazy or incompetent musicians give up the struggle in despair and resign themselves to playing musical doggerel. What is the remedy? Acquire an up-to-date music library and insist upon reviewing every feature before the regular performance, but this is impossible for musicians playing in theatres changing pictures every day. The only remedy is to provide every film with a specially arranged musical score in book form. But the musician should be able at once to recognize the dramatic possibilities of the pictures and be able to augment and support them through the medium of his art. But how many do this? Not many, and it is not because they are not capable to fit music to the various scenes of a picture, but because they do not possess the necessary suitable music.

Up to the Managers

No leader can afford to spend $5.00 or $10.00 every week for music, and the managers or theatre owners do not seem to realize that the effect of a moving picture is heightened to an extraordinary degree if each situation represented therein is brought into proper atmosphere and that this result can be attained only through the rendition of good program music selected with special reference to the settings of the picture.

Experience has also demonstrated that managers and theatre owners invariably cut down on their orchestras just as soon as their box-office receipts show any signs of diminishing. They do not seem to know that it is possible to make the orchestra a special attraction and that the public invariably enjoys and is willing to pay for hearing a good concert.

It is true certain incidents of pictures are difficult to illustrate with a fitting musical accompaniment. There are various reasons for this, although one of the principal ones is that most leaders are still equipped with the self-same sets of dramatic music they used years ago for the spoken drama and which consisted of short bits of music for rise and fall of curtain, series of comic episodes and not long enough to cover scenes in the picture.

Some of the better orchestras use extracts from more ambitious works such as Allegros from overtures, or excerpts from selections; but in most cases this is connected with great difficulties to find the marked page quickly enough, and very often orchestras begin to play the Allegro after the scene it was intended for is over.

Let us work together to help increase the value of the picture shows and prove to the different managements of theatres that music is important and indispensable. It make good pictures better and gives the public double value—a fine show and a fine concert.

MUSICAL REVIEW OF LATEST NUMBERS MOST SUITED FOR PICTURE PLAYING

"Mo-Ana," by Olsen—A fine and original Hawaiian Waltz—for ballroom scenes. (Witmark Edition).

"World in Arms," March by Teike—An extraordinarily fine March and a splendid number for topical subjects. (Carl Fischer Edition).

"Twilight," Intermezzo by Theo. Bendix—An exceptionally good number. One that will become an immediate avorite with your audience, suitable for bright scenes. (Chappell Edition).

"Love Me at Twilight," Fox Trot by Grant—A song hit from Lew Field's production "Step This Way." Suitable for ballroom scenes. (Snyder Edition).

"Chanson D'Amour, by Saar—A fine number for picture work. Most appropriate for a love theme. (Carl Fischer Edition).

Zigfeld's "Follies of 1916"—A selection containing all famous hits of a most famous show. Very good or an opening or encore number.

"On to Plattsburg," March by W. Lowe—A big favorite with Harvard assemblages and the Plattsburg contingents. A fine number for military scenes. (Oliver Ditson Edition).

Two Sketches by H. Frimmel—No. 1 Serenade, No. 2 Romance. Really artistic arrangements of these famous compositions which will appeal to every leader. Fine accompaniments for interior scenes of slow action. (Schirmer Edition).

LEON COLES BECOMES MUSICAL DIRECTOR OF NASHVILLE'S STRAND THEATRE

PROF. LEON COLES, formerly connected with the Alcazar theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., in the capacity of musical director, has recently been secured by the Peerless Amusement Company of Nashville as musical director of the Strand theatre. Mr. Coles comes to the Strand with some of the highest of recommendations as to his musical ability. It is a pleasure to note that General Manager Carson Bradford was very fortunate in securing Mr. Coles' services for the Strand. Since having taken up his duties as musical director, Mr. Coles' music for pictures are being widely commented upon.

THE DUDLEY IN BOSTON WILL OPEN WITH THE NEW YEAR

THE new Dudley theatre, Boston, is scheduled to open January 1. It is located on Washington street, near Dudley. It seats 1,500, and is the largest strictly picture house in Boston, and one of the best equipped, having every modern improvement, including a $20,000 Estey organ. Harry E. Gustin, formerly of the B. F. Keith forces, will be manager of the house.

Building and Furnishings

PHILADELPHIA REGENT THEATRE TRANSFORMED

THE Regent, small in actual size, yet booming large in the history of Philadelphia filmdom. For the Regent was a pioneer, not one of the barbarian, store converted things, but one of the first really, truly buildings put up decently in a good neighborhood, with real music and realer pictures, intended to cater to the people of discrimination and intelligence.

But that was about four years ago, almost ancient history in the swift moving panorama of present day celluloids and their palaces.

How much has come to pass since Al Boyd, that venturesome spirit, first put up the Regent! And when he put in that "organ with the human voice" and charged actually fifteen cents, we all stood around and gasped, but did not fail to crowd in to see and hear. Time's picture whirligig spun around faster than ever.

The big Stanley came right next to the little Regent and all the other big houses round and about. Then Boyd built the handsome Arcadia and sold the Regent to the Regent Theatre Company, comprising business as well as showmen in its personnel. They soon saw that the Regent, once a pioneer, must undergo a transformation to keep its place in the procession. Forthwith this was done. The house was closed during July and August last, and, after the expenditure of $20,000, celebrated its renaissance on Labor Day, 1916. In its new dress the Regent is as pretty a little picture house as you would find anywhere.

It is situated at 1632 Market street, right in the heart of "downtown," near shopping centres and railroad stations. But the nightly string of motor cars shows there are other ways of reaching the house besides train and trolley.

The theatre is substantially built, of gray brick with stone columns, and occupies a 50 x 150 feet space.

The lobby, with its marble wainscoting, tiled floor, mahogany woodwork, iridescent glass paned doors, Colonial mirrors and well done life-sized oil paintings of leading World and Metro stars attracts at once. So do the doormen, cashiers and footmen who, like the five ushers and even the water boys, are uniformed in old blue broadcloth with silver braid caps to match. White gloves and for the girls gray shoes and stockings complete this novel and attractive costume.

These colors carry out the motif of the theatre, which is all done in the artistic tones of blue, silver and gray.

The carpets, hangings and curtains across the screen are dark blue velvets; the seats are of gray wood, upholstered in blue leather, while the chandeliers and sidelights are of dull silver.

It is particularly in the decorations that this color scheme has full play. Here the blue background with its allegorical figures of the fine arts done in silver lend a distinctive charm to the whole and make a pleasing change from the usually rose or red of the generality of playhouses.

The lighting of these decorations by a system of dimmers that shows amber blue and red alternately are the greatest novelty to Philadelphians and add to the effect of the whole.

The J. B. Barbarita Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., were the decorators. Lit Brothers of Philadelphia furnished the hangings and carpets. Heywood Brothers and Wakefield of Philadelphia the chairs.

The screen is a Rembusch Crystal (gold) Fibre and was installed by the Calehuff Co., Philadelphia.

In the many improvements made in the theatre proper this year were the new floor and the new ventilation system. The floor is now bowl shaped, which reduces the capacity from its former 500 to its present 400, but every seat in the house is a good one. About $2,500 was spent in perfecting the ventilating system consisting now of exhaust ceiling fans and wall fans with ventilating fans over the lobby.

The building is heated by hot water and lighted by the semi-indirect method. One of the improvements is a cozy ladies' retiring room with enameled furniture, mirrors galore, every toilet accessory, dainty writing materials, even a well-filled medicine cabinet of first aids, all in charge of a matron. The men also have their room.

The original organ, a Kimball, is being overhauled to the tune of about $3,000. In addition there is now a small but excellent

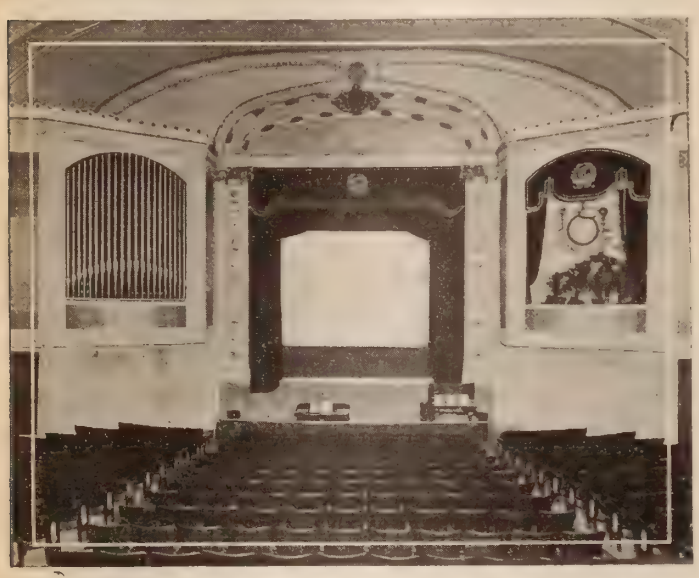
CUMBERLAND THEATRE, BROOKLYN, IS DISTINCTIVE

THE Cumberland theatre is located in the so-called "hill section" of Brooklyn, at Cumberland and Greene avenues, and caters to many wealthy residents. The building was constructed by the Sound Holding Corporation, of 164 Montague street, Brooklyn, who are the owners. The theatre's manager is president of the corporation. The construction and installation costs were approximately $100,000.



The Cumberland measures 75 x 80 feet, with a quaint exterior in cement stucco. In the lobby, several ornamental lamps decorated with leaves hang from the ceiling. From the manager's office, which is situated at the right of the lobby, stairs lead to the projection booth and business offices.

Composition flooring is used throughout the house, the interior being covered with green carpet. The seating capacity is 600, the seats being of upholstered leather. An ornamental frieze embedded with electric lights spells "something different" in interiors. A large lighted dome sends down a beacon of light during intermissions.

Mr. Manquis, the manager, claims to have the best projection in the city. He personally supervised the construction of the screen, and admits that its composition is a secret. A drapery covers the screen and is controlled by an electric push button in the projection booth. The screen is framed in gold.

At the screen's left is installed a $7,500 Austin organ. To the right of the screen is a singer's gallery, which is used frequently.

A span of 16 feet was left between the ceiling and the roof when the building was constructed, to provide for ventilation.

Floor of the Cumberland in Brooklyn

The Cumberland has a house staff of twelve people. Pretty girl ushers are a feature. Eight reels constitute a performance, and there are four performances a day. Mr. Manquis has a predeliction for Paramount pictures, although he occasionally exhibits such features as "The Birth of a Nation." His theatre has a comfortable and a distinctly refined atmosphere.

ELITE AT BOWLING GREEN, KENTUCKY, REOPENS

THE new Elite theatre, Bowling Green, Ky., formerly known as the Strand, which has been closed for several months, undergoing repairs, was opened to the public November 14. The house has been remodeled throughout and presents an up-to-date appearance. A new Power's machine has been installed.

FRESNO AMUSEMENT MEN RETURN JOYFULLY TO OAKLAND, CALIFORNIA

EMIL KEHRLEIN AND SONS, who conduct the Kinema theatre at Fresno, Cal., and who have been interested in amusement enterprises in other sections of the state, have taken a five-year lease on the premises now occupied by the Oakland Photo theatre on Broadway, near Fifteenth street, Oakland, Cal. The new owners plan to make extensive improvements in the house and will reopen it about the middle of December as the Kinema theatre.

A large organ will be installed and arrangements have been made for securing exclusive film service, it being the intention to show quality attractions only to the accompaniment of the best music obtainable. The Kehrleins are not strangers in Oakland, having controlled a house there several years ago.

CHICAGO EXHIBITOR SHOWS FAITH IN KANSAS CITY FUTURE

SAMUEL ZUCKER, of Chicago, has opened the New Centre theatre at 15th and Troost avenue, Kansas City. The building will cost $25,000 and is being erected by the Altman Realty Co. The theatre is controlled by the New Centre theatre company of Kansas City. No limit has been set to the furnishing of the house, it seems, and Mr. Zucker intends to make it the most up-to-date place in the city. To prove his belief in Kansas City as a motion picture town he has sent for his family to come here.

CHILDREN ENACT NEW FIVE REELER TAKEN ABOUT THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

THE Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago has completed the printing of a new subject entitled "Modern Mother Goose," to be released by the Fort Dearborn Photoplays Company, Inc. This is a five-reel subject acted almost entirely by children.

Mathew C. Von Betz, former actor and director for the Universal and other film companies, was the producer. Mr. Von Betz also wrote the introduction and re-wrote the entire scenario.

The principal exterior scenes were taken at the University of Chicago by courtesy of the faculty there.

LARGEST CALIFORNIA HOUSE FOR LOS ANGELES

WORK of constructing a motion picture theatre building at Third and Broadway, Los Angeles, was begun this week, and when completed it will be the largest in California. The building requires a space 129 by 196 feet, and will consist of twelve stories. The theatre will occupy a space 120 by 131 feet with seats on the main floor and one balcony. There will be no boxes, and the seating capacity will be three thousand.

REGENT, PHILADELPHIA

orchestra of two violins, 'cello and pianist under the leadership of Louis Van Es. The organists are Anton van den Brock and H. B. Ronillet. The music is made a special feature and so advertised.

Four out of the seven daily performances have orchestra selections and are called "de luxe."

Other improvements are the ice water through coils of pipes and the latest plumbing system.

In the operator's booth, where Rupert Sheiblein, George Gamble and Ferrell Morton alternately hold sway, there is a dissolving machine which can be operated by one man. Two Simplexes furnish the projection, the throw being 94 feet 3 inches.

A Potter money changer and Automatic ticket selling machine are used.

Twenty employees all told cater to the Regent patrons.

First-run World and Metro features divide the week, together with comics, scenics and news, nine reels being shown at each performance.

The prices have raised from 10 and 15 cents to 15 cents for matinees and 25 cents straight for all evening performances. Advertising is used extensively.

An electric sign outside the theatre, novel one sheet frames, indirectly lighted, glasses with painted designs and transparent signs constitute the lobby part.

All daily newspapers, display frames in hotels, an extensive mailing list, weekly programs, throwaway cards, take care of the printed part.

Hoffman & Co. of Philadelphia were the architects for the remodeling of the house.

Over 2,500 admissions were registered the first day of the opening and the patronage has been consistently large ever since.

Much credit is due Harry Bissinger of the Regent Theatre Company, who is managing director of the theatre, and to the young manager, Lionel Keene, many of whose live-wire ideas have been put into practice in the renovation of the Regent.

ing; more or less time will produce darker or lighter tints. The film is then rinsed in clear water. In drying, it is very necessary that surplus water should be first removed. This is done by tilting the racks or whirling the drum, or the surface of the film may be gone over with a soft sponge.

The process is necessarily very briefly described in a short article of this nature. For those interested, the Eastman Kodak Company has issued a book with examples of tinted film, with formulae for duplicating them, and very complete working directions.

(The book here referred to was reviewed and described in the Camera Department of the NEWS, issue of May 20th, page 3138. Its cost is $2.50 and it is well worth the price to those interested in film tinting or toning.—EDITOR.)

A LETTER FROM "SISTER" TAPLEY

On Friday evening, November 17, Rose E. Tapley, the popular Vitagraph star, was made an honorary life member of Newark N. J. Local 244, I. A. T. S. E., making her the only woman life member in the United States or Canada. In appreciation of the thought which prompted the boys to do her this signal honor Miss Tapley sent the following letter to the department:

November 18.

"MY BROTHERS OF THE I. A. T. S. E.:

"Last evening I had the great honor of being made an honorary member for life of your Local No. 244.

"I realize that this honor conferred upon me entails certain duties and responsibilities, so with this feeling at heart, I am writing to you to assure you that I shall always try to be worthy of the exception and honor which you have done me, and I want you to feel that you can always depend upon me to do my share in working for the betterment and advancement of the boys, my Brothers, who are so vital a part of the industry, and I shall always strive to see that they receive the recognition due them wherever and whenever it is possible for me to do so.

"Again assuring you that I highly appreciate and value the honor your Local, '244,' has done me in making me the only woman life member of your organization either in the United States or Canada, I remain

"Loyally and fraternally your 'Sister,'

"Signed. ROSE E. TAPLEY."

It has been announced that Miss Tapley is to retire temporarily from the acting forces of the Vitagraph Company for the purpose of touring the country as a speaker for the concern with which she has so long been identified.

TESTING FOR GROUND

Ralph Holmes, Wichita, Kan.: How can I find out when my lamp is grounded which arm is at fault, or whether the lamp is grounded or not?

Answer: A simple method of testing for grounds is to attach one wire of your test lamp to the rack bars of the damp, and the other wire to either of the carbon arms, with the machine switch thrown in but with no arc burning. If the lamp lights up the leakage or ground is in the opposite arm from that on which you have your test wire; for instance: fastening one wire by means of a clip clamp to the rack bar, touch the upper carbon arm, near the carbon with the end of the other wire; if the test lamp lights it means that the lower carbon arm is grounded; should the lamp not light on the upper arm but does so when applied to the lower it means that the upper arm is grounded. If it does not light on either arm then the ground is probably elsewhere. This is not a positive test unless the lamp is absolutely clean, for the lamp might become grounded through the deposit of carbon dust which, while it will not carry sufficient current to light the test lamp will cause some little annoyance in handling the arc. The best and surest test I know is to wait until the lamp is cold, then throw in the switch and with one finger on the rack bars place another finger on the carbon arm, taking care that you have insulated yourself from the floor of the operating room by either wearing a pair of rubbers or standing on a rubber mat.

If you feel a shock the ground is in the opposite arm to that from which the "kick" came.

tive of undesirable metallic compounds, does not materially affect the balance of the unexposed emulsion remaining on the film. After a thorough wash the film is dried, still remaining in the dark room.

When this positive with its red sensation images developed and toned bluish-green has dried, it is again printed upon, this time from the green sensation images of the original Kinemacolor negative, these latter being printed right over the previously treated red sensation images. The film is again developed and it is found that the alkaline character of the ordinary developer causes the bluish green color to bleach out of the previously toned red sensation images, thereby allowing the progress of the second development to be judged with ease. After fixing and washing the last printed or green sensation images are subjected (in daylight now) to the action of a bath containing Vanadium Chloride, Potassium Ferricyanide and Oxalic acid, which bleaches the green sensation images to a yellow color and at the same time restores to the red sensation images the bluish-green color which they had lost during the second developing operation.

Preparing Images to Receive Basic Dye

In turning the green sensation images yellow the Vanadium, Ferricyanide and Oxalic acid bath has mordanted them, thus preparing them to receive and retain a basic dye. This Vanadium bath, it should be noted, is entirely different in character from the Vanadium bath used for blue-green toning in the two methods previously outlined. After treatment with the Vanadium solution, the film is next fixed in a Hypo bath and well washed.

The next step is the dyeing of the green sensation images (those printed last) in a bath compounded with a red basic dye of such tint as will combine with their yellowish tinge to form a hue complementary to the bluish-green tone of the red sensation images. When such a result is attained and the red dyeing has proceeded far enough, the film images will appear to reproduce the colors of the scene photographed. Dyeing is then stopped and after immersion in a weak acetic acid (and water) bath and drying, the film is ready for projection.

The foregoing is a simplified description of some very interesting processes prepared for Camera Department readers from the complicated text of the patents cited. Now as to the results secured by the inventor.

We have a sample of this film prepared apparently by the last method described. The images exhibit a very satisfactory approach to "natural colors" and the film is, as will be inferred, intended to be projected on an ordinary machine with no filters or attachments and at regulation (16 per second) speed. We had the surprise of our life when we saw such a film projected, for the coloring reproduced on the screen was, indeed, most beautiful and faithfully rendered.

Color fringes or overlapping edges due to the double printing operation are sometimes in evidence, and a pink tinge in the highlights due to the action of the red dye bath is noticeable in most of the results so far exhibited, but the process, although a radical departure from other methods, will rank with any two color cinematographic process yet shown as regards fidelity of color rendition.

A study of the methods by which Mr. Fox produces his "Slow Kinemacolor" films will make it apparent that the mechanical and chemical operations upon which this process is based require knowledge of a highly specialized character. We are by no means satisfied that the average laboratory superintendent or the average class of laboratory help could cope with a process which depends upon such precise mechanical manipulation and upon chemical processing of such a quantitative nature.

The fact that special printing machines are required arouses interesting speculations, however, and we shall, in the next chapter introduce Camera Department readers to something new in printing machines, namely—optical printers.

day closing, censorship, etc. It is this—the cleaning up within the organization of the organization itself.

IF the struggling exhibitors get together, why should not the strong ones come in too? Can they hurt their position? Obviously not, for their presence will at least keep the others from scheming against them.

* * *

WILL their presence do any good? Most certainly, for if they do not do anything else, they will be able to help the question of credit which is the crux of the whole situation. An organization of this kind can work with the exchanges and supply houses, who would keep the secretary of the organization informed as to the credit standing of each and every exhibitor in the association and out.

* * *

IF they decide any individual's credit is bad they inform every dealer and exchange that further credit to "so and so" is not advisable. They are at once forced to pay all back indebtedness, after which they must show financial responsibility or pay cash.

* * *

WHAT does it mean? Financially irresponsible competition is pushed out of the business—it is the survival of the fittest. The number of seats in a neighborhood are automatically reduced until the people are taken care of properly and everyone is making enough to at least cover their expenses.

* * *

IT means co-operation all around to put it over, but if properly worked, it means better business to the more popular houses and actual money for the exchange, dealer, and manufacturers—Is it worth while?

NEW MEXICO BANKER BUYS SCREEN IN TEXAS FOR HIS THEATRE

THE new Crystal theatre, of Columbus, N. M., now being erected by J. L. Greenwood, president of the Columbus State Bank, will install a Minusa Gold Fibre screen No. 1, sold by the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, of El Paso. Mr. Greenwood assumed charge of the old Crystal a year ago, completely renovated the house, installed a 15-horse power engine and later added to his equipment three 30-horsepower engines to supply his theatre and furnish the town and camps with electricity.

The new Crystal will open about December 1 and will exhibit Bluebird features in addition to the regular Universal program.

WE HAVE MADE A CONTRACT FOR AN ENORMOUS QUANTITY OF THE

which runs into many millions and we are going to give you the benefit of the difference in price which we were able to obtain in placing this large order.

Our reason in placing such a large order is that we have been convinced that these Colored Portrait Cards of the Popular Film Stars are one of the best business stimulators ever used by Exhibitors. We have hundreds of testimonials from leading Exhibitors throughout the country telling us of the benefit they are getting from using same.

These colored photos of the popular film stars are made up on cards with post card back for mailing purposes, Wallhangers or cards, sixe 4 x 8, with a plain back, and also printed on Program Covers.

Every Exhibitor has at least one day during the week on which his business is not as good as the rest. Pick out that dull day and start giving one of the colored cards at a cost of a fraction more than one-third cent each to every patron who attends the performance on that day, and see how long it will be before that same day will show you the best receipts of any day in the week.

What these cards have done for others they will do for you. Order from your supply house at once. If they do not handle them order direct from us.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

WEEKLY NEWS OF THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION AND ITS 68 EXCHANGES

DECEMBER 16, 1916

Chaplin's Newest Mutual Comedy Is Entitled "The Rink"

FUNNY as he has been in the past, Charlie Chaplin has devised a wholly new set of pranks for himself in "The Rink." This is the eighth of the Mutual-Chaplin Specials. It is released the week of December 11. It presents Charlie in a wholly new atmosphere. He appears in a skating rink and a cafe. Perhaps you can imagine the fun that results. But you can't—for Charlie alone could originate such delightful fun.

New Comedy Situations.

Naturally, such a unique locale for his comedy as a skating rink enables the inimitable Chaplin to create some decidedly out-of-the-ordinary comedy situations. The laughable situations, alone would make "The Rink" a comedy long to be remembered, but when to this is added the funny "business" that Chaplin orignates, the production becomes even more uproarious. "The Rink" is the eighth of the Mutual-Chaplin Specials. It is booking now at all 68 of the Mutual film exchanges. Bookings can also be obtained on the following Mutual-Chaplin Specials: "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "The Vagabond," One A. M.," "The Pawn Shop," "The Count" and "Behind the Screen."

Helen Holmes Serial Is Highly Endorsed

Exhibitors all over the country are praising the new Helen Holmes chapterplay, "A Lass of the Lumberlands." All of them are pointing out that it is proving an even greater box-office magnet than they had expected.

The manager of the Theatorium at Richmond, Ind., writes: "It surely is a pleasure to say that the 'Lass of the Lumberlands' is a great serial. It is packing our house both afternoon and evening. We had to close the ticket window several times as we have no standing room to sell, but they go away saying they will come back a little later, and they always come back, too. We thought 'The Girl and the Game' a great moneygetter, but this one is even better."

From Aberdeen, S. D., the manager of the Bijou theater writes: "You will pardon me for not answering your wire re extra days' booking on 'Lass of the Lumberlands,' but I desired to know first if business would warrant it. I find that it does, so kindly book me for two days hereafter."

The five-reel Mutual Star Production released this week, is "Lonesome Town." Kolb and Dill are featured.

TWO NEW SERIES ARE

Seven One-Reel Star Comedies "Uncle Sam's Defenders"

READY FOR RELEASE

Two brand new series of motion-picture stories have just been released by Mutual. One of them is a series of seven one-reel Star Comedies. The other is a series of six single-reel subjects on the topic of Preparedness. Bookings on both of these new series can now be made at any of the 68 Mutual film exchanges.

The Star Comedies, as has been said, are single-reel subjects. Each features a famous comedian or comedienne. Their titles, and the stars who appear in each, are as follows: "Grouchy," featuring Tom Wise, released December 2; "Admirers Three," featuring Ruth Shepley, released December 9; "One Dollar, Please," featuring George Derr, released December 16; "Every Lassie Has a Lover," featuring Alice Dovey, released December 23; "Grimsy, the Bellhop," featuring Alex Clark, released December 30; "The Girl Who Can Cook," featuring Lois Meredith, released January 6; and "The Honeymooners," featuring George Derr, released January 13.

The "Uncle Sam's Defenders" series should have a wonderful appeal at this particular time, when the nation is seriously considering the subject of universal military training. The titles of the series are as follows: "From Civilian to Soldier," "Our Boys at the Border," "A Jack Tar in the Making," "Afloat and Ashore," "Scouts of the Sea and Sky," and "Bulldogs of the Deep." The first is released on Friday, December 8—the others appearing each following Friday.

Nance O'Neill Signs With Mutual for Star Productions

NANCE O'NEILL, famous star of both the screen and the speaking stage, is now a Mutualite. She signed a contract last week calling for her appearance in Mutual Star Productions. She is the second famous actress acquired by Mutual since the announcement of President John R. Freuler that he was going after the very biggest stars in the world. Last week it was Marjorie Rambeau. This week it is Nance O'Neill. Next week it may be any one of half a dozen famous stars with whom negotiations are now being carried on. The Mutual Film Corporation is determined to supply its patrons with feature productions starring the most notable men and women of the age. Announcements of the next few weeks will bear out the statement that it has them.

Brilliant Career.

Few actresses have enjoyed such a brilliant career as Nance O'Neill. For years she has been numbered among the most talented emotional actresses of the speaking stage. Born in Oakland, Cal., her debut was made under the management of McKee Rankin at the Alcazar theater, in San Francisco. Her first New York appearance was made at Weber & Fields', in 1896. She has been starred in such productions as "Madga," "Hedda Gabler," "Leah, the Forsaken," "Camille," "Ingomar," "Lady Teazle," "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "Macbeth." Critics have lauded her in every big city of the land. In pictures she has enjoyed a series of triumphs. She has appeared in Lubin, Fox, Metro and McClure productions. Film patrons know and admire her as much as do audiences accustomed to gather in the $2 houses of the speaking stage.

Has Toured World.

Not only in America is Nance O'Neill a name familiar to every theater patron. She has toured the world, and her engagements in Australia, London, Paris and other cities on the continent added to her fame. Inquiries now at the nearest Mutual Film Exchange will enable the exhibitor to arrange for an early booking of her first production under the Mutual banner.

"Diamond" Sequel Going Big.

Capacity business has been the rule at every theatre showing the $10,000 sequel to "The Diamond From the Sky." Thousands of people have been waiting to see if they won the prize offered for the best sequel, and the only way they can find an answer is on the screen.

MUTUAL

Announcing

Another Big Mutual Star

NANCE O'NEILL

THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION has just signed a contract with Nance O'Neill, the celebrated emotional actress, calling for her appearance in a number of new Mutual Star Productions. Miss O'Neill has enjoyed a brilliant career both on the speaking stage and in films. Critics everywhere have praised her wonderful art. She has been starred in such productions as "Madga," "Hedda Gabler," "Leah the Forsaken," "Camille," "Ingomar," "Lady Teazle," "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" and "Macbeth." In the new series of Mutual Star Productious she will be cast in roles of a highly emotional sort, in which she will have ample opportunity to display her talent. Early in 1917 these Nance O'Neill features will be available thru the 68 exchanges of the Mutual Film Corporation. Last week the signing of Marjorie Rambeau was announced. This week it is Nance O'Neill. Next week it may be any one of half a dozen famous stars with whom negotiations are now pending. The new Mutual Star policy for 1917 will result in providing exhibitors with productions in which are featured only the most notable stars of the age.

The Front Page

In this startling series of motion picture stories—each complete in itself—real reporters are shown really gathering the front page news which the public reads at its breakfast table. The perils faced by girl reporters in the underworld of a great city are shown in detail. Suave society blackmailers—crafty international spies—shrewd Chinese opium smugglers—terrified murderers—crooked politicians—rich society debutantes—police court habitues—all of these and more are but grist to the mill of the girl reporter. By sheer nerve she meets them all on their own ground—foils their plots—exposes their secrets—makes "copy" of their adventurous lives. The stories are filmed by real artists—produced with care—perfectly photographed. The first story in the series is released Dec. 28th. Each story is in two acts. A new story is released each week for fifteen weeks. Arrange for bookings on this big series NOW!

CHARITY

A SENSATIONAL EXPOSE OF CHARITY AND CHILD-WELFARE!

Featuring
LINDA A. GRIFFITH

Miss Caroline E. Hughes, president Child's Welfare Club, Philadelphia:

"CHARITY? is a wonderful play with a very good, strong appeal to the sympathies. It is sure to have a good influence."

Bishop Samuel Fallows, of Chicago, says:

"The play has a distinct value, sociologically speaking. It directs attention to abuses which stand in need of correction."

Mrs. Norton Smythe, president of the Woman's Home Organization of Philadelphia:

"I am strongly in favor of plays, such as this one, which direct the public's thoughts to children's welfare. We cannot have too many of them."

Madame Caroline Le Favre, a lecturer of international repute:

"CHARITY? is a great sermon. It appealed to me strongly because I have been gathering data along the line dealt with in Mrs. Griffith's remarkable drama."

SEVEN BIG ACTS!

These are some of the opinions of celebrated students of child welfare on "CHARITY?". "CHARITY?" is in seven big acts. As powerful in its appeal as "Damaged Goods." What are Superpictures?

The term Superpicture is a description-not the name of the product of any company

SUPERPICTURES will be unusual pictures, unusual in quality or subject or length, with unusual stars, unusual timeliness, or unusual box-office value.

SUPERPICTURES will be few in number—perhaps not more than twelve in any one year—chosen by impartial judges from the world's best product, without regard to the name of the producing company and without regard to the cost of the undertaking.

SUPERPICTURES will be confined to individual productions as distinguished from serials, or series, or travelogues, or news weeklies or any other productions of a continuous or semi-continuous nature.

SUPERPICTURES, Inc. will, however, release many important productions of the highest quality in fields that do not fall within the technical limits of the Superpictures definition—for instance, in the serial field—and in all such productions, the greatest care will be used to make the phrase "released by Superpictures" a guarantee of super-quality for that particular kind of production.

SUPERPICTURES, Inc. is not bound by contract to accept Superpictures from any producing company or group of companies—a unique situation in the film business which enables this company to maintain the highest standard that anybody can reach.

"O. K.—J. S. B."

On a Film is the Absolute Guarantee of Quality.

Commodore Blackton putting on a big scene

O.K.
J.S.B.

J. STUART Blackton is the pioneer producer in the motion picture industry.

For more than twenty years he has blazed the trail of film progress. Under the personal guidance of himself and Albert E. Smith, Vitagraph has led the field from the days of sixty-foot reels to this day of the Greater Vitagraph organization.

THE GUARANTEE FOR THE FUTURE

The experience of those twenty years goes into every Vitagraph feature.

Today Commodore Blackton personally supervises every Vitagraph production, just as he did in the beginning, personally directs the biggest undertakings and writes many of Vitagraph's notable successes.

On the floor of the studio, actually and intimately in charge of each production, Commodore Blackton does more than lend his name to Vitagraph offerings. Every foot of Vitagraph film, today as always, bears his personal attention and approval before it is released.

His "O. K." is as essential to the release of a film as the projection machine is to its showing.

"O. K.—J. S. B." is the sign of Vitagraph quality—the film standard for twenty years — the guarantee of box-office value and satisfied patrons.

Commodore Blackton, E. H. Sothern, and M. E. Stone, President of the Associated Press, discussing a new scenario for Mr. Sothern.

THE NEW YORK HERALD.

At the Rialto there was the first public showing of Edward H. Sothern in the Vitagraph Company's motion picture version of "An Enemy to the King," a romantic drama of France in the Huguenot wars, in which Mr. Sothern appeared several years ago on the real stage.

The heroine who is forced to play false to the chevalier impersonated by Mr. Sothern, is excellent. It is a delight to see the care with which the costumes and surroundings of an always interesting historical period are portrayed.

New York Press Unanimously Acclaims

The Sun.

E. H. Sothern in the film version of his stage success "An Enemy to the King," is the most interesting of the offerings in the Broadway picture houses this week. The screen version of the late R. N. Stephens's play at the Rialto was prepared by Frederic Thompson, and is elaborately presented by the Vitagraph Company.

"AN ENEMY TO THE KING"

with

E. H. SOTHERN and EDITH STOREY

A Triumph of Art and Dramatic Power

New York Tribune

Those who like costume picture plays will do well to see E. H. Sothern in "An Enemy to the King," which is the feature at the Rialto this week, and those who do not care for that style of play will do well to see the picture any way, for the work of Mr. Sothern and Edith Storey is worth while.

Mr. Sothern is a handsome and gallant Ernanton de Launay, but in spite of his great art it is not he but little Miss Storey who dominates every situation.

Perhaps this is true because one takes Sothern's perfection for granted and does not comment on it; but it takes a vast amount of personality to play opposite a star of such magnitude and not be eclipsed. Miss Storey was never eclipsed. She shone brightly from start to finish.

In "An Enemy to the King" she held the sympathy of the audience at all times, although her mission was to betray Ernanton de Launay. The onlookers loved her in spite of her treachery, just as de Launay himself did.

The play is beautifuly staged, with an attention to detail which is quite gratifying to those sensitive souls who feel that their day has been spoiled if a belle of the sixteenth century uses a lorgnette or the king of that period signs her lover's pardon with a fountain pen.

The World.

The play "An Enemy to the King," in which E. H. Sothern has been seen on the speaking stage, served to introduce him as a motion picture star to the patrons of the Rialto Theatre yesterday. With the same exceptional acting (for the screen) that characterized the first Sothern picture, which was shown recently at the Strand, it proved an interesting and effective work.

Playgoers, of course, recall that the story deals with the time of Henry III. and the Huguenot persecution and is an adventurous romance giving Mr. Sothern opportunity to display his skill as a swordsman. The company which had acted before the camera in support of the star included Edith Storey as the Huguenot beauty. A good production had been made by the adapters, Robert H. Stephens and Frederic Thompson.

The New York Times.

A motion-picture version of An Enemy to the King," which afforded E. H. Sothern one of his most popular romantic rôles when it was first acted by him, twenty years ago last September, was exhibited yesterday at the Rialto.

"An Enemy to the King" is an exceptionally artistic reproduction of a swashbuckling melodrama, with Mr. Sothern in one of those rôles in which he won his first fame and in impersonating which he has had few equals in his own generation.

The story of Ernanton de Launay, friend to Henry of Navarre, and of Launay's love for Julie de Varion, is well suited to exposition by movies.

The thrills of the melodrama have been effectively translated to the screen. Most of these arise from sword duels indulged in by Launay whenever he finds himself embarrassed by an adversary. Mr. Sothern was ever a most convincing hero with the foils, and, with the added illusion of the screen, his combats were more exciting than ever.

With the story and the actors satisfactory there remained the third element of mis-en-scène to make the picture successful. This was in keeping with the excellence of the other features. The settings fairly exuded the atmosphere of the period. The interiors had an air of solidity and were furnished with regard to the demands of the time, and the outdoor scenes were most pleasing. "An Enemy to the King," in short, is a film for Mr. Sothern to be proud of.

Gentlemen:

The week is now closing with Mr. Sothern's latest picture "An Enemy To The King" and I feel that I should like to express my appreciation and gratitude to the Vitagraph Company for the splendid manner in which they have handled it and for the splendid artistry and production of the picture itself.

In spite of the fact that it is a costume play and which is generally shunned by exhibitors, the picture has done an enormous business here and will play close to $14,000 gross, and not alone this but it has made a countless number of new friends for the theatre. The remarks heard throughout the entire week have been complimentary in the extreme. The daily press, as you know, has been unanimous in its praise and altogether the engagement was an unqualified success and an artistic triumph.

It is pictures like these that have a tendency to solidify and create new friends both for the theatre and for the industry itself.

You may use this letter anyway you see fit and I unqualifiedly give my endorsement to "An Enemy To The King" and I know it will meet with success everywhere it is shown.

Yours truly,

S. L. Rothapfel

This is the Opinion of the Director of One of America's Greatest Theatres:

"Permit me a word of congratulation to the exhibitors of the country upon the announcement that you are about to re-issue a de luxe edition of 'My Official Wife.'

"Of the many photoplays that have been produced during the past few years, this is one of the very few that will bear re-issuing. In fact, my own belief is that it possesses a re-run value greater than the first run value of a majority of new pictures. It should make a great deal of money for exhibitors."—Harold Edel, Manager, Strand Theatre, New York.

"My Official Wife" is not a part of the Vitagraph regular program, neither is it a special—but an extra offering put out as an additional service to exhibitors, because of its tremendous re-run value and money-making possibilities.

Pauline Frederick Off for South, too—"Silver Linings" Unusual Rialto Feature This Week.

By FREDERICK JAMES SMITH.

There's a film of unique interest at the Rialto this week. It's called "Silver Linings" and is a product of the Educational Films Corporation of America. Despite its title, it isn't a drama but a remarkable series of pictures showing cloud effects. There are some twenty-eight recognized cloud formations and this film presents all the distinctive or major forms. It required a year to obtain the various scenes and the result is a remarkable film, showing in rapid style just how the clouds form and disperse. Thus we see a storm blow up and pass within a few seconds. Unusual tinting and photographic effects are obtained. "Silver Linings" is well worth seeing. It's something more than a minor feature

TO MY PHOTOPLAY FRIENDS IN AMERICA:

I am on the job with Essanay at last. I'm here to stay. Count up my forty-six trunks and you will see I am prepared for some time.

Some people say you can't come back. I have exploded that theory for I am back after two years in the French army corps.

I have a new line of comedies which I believe better than any I have produced. I am jumping right into this work now and will be ready to announce my first release shortly.

I have been reported dead. I was wounded, but I am now feeling very much alive. I object to sitting at my own autopsy as long as I have laughs left in me. If I ever cease to make the public laugh, I will be willing to consider myself a dead one. But not till then.

I will be with you personally, on the screen, soon.

Yours for fun,

Volume XIV DECEMBER 16, 1916 No. 24

AN EXHIBITOR HAS HIS SAY

THIS week an exhibitor has something to say to "Keep the Ball Rolling."

There is some good, practical, showman sense—of direct box-office interest to exhibitors and of enlightenment to manufacturers and distributors.

* * *

THE exhibitor, apparently out of considerable experience, tells how to advertise the show—the ability to do which would put many a dragging theatre today solidly upon its feet.

* * *

THE writer has something to say later upon film service. If his second letter proves as meaty as this—and we have no doubt it will—we welcome it.

New York, November 15, 1916.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS Editor,
729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR:

YOUR Start the Ball Rolling articles are the best I have seen on the subject under discussion, and it is to be hoped they will be followed up with other letters and comments equally as good and to the point.

The two points which seem to me to be of paramount importance in these articles are the proper expenditure for film service, and appropriation for advertising on the part of the theatre.

I SHALL leave the film end to others, but the advertising I am going to discuss.

There is no reason why picture houses, and, in fact, all picture business, whatever the branch, should not be a steady, lucrative business, and in no sense a gamble such as the theatrical business has always been, vaudeville excepted. Its cheapness was what originally recommended it; don't overlook this fact.

THIS cheapness of admission was possible by reason of cheapness of operation. I contend, and have clearly proven it to my own complete satisfaction, that no newspaper advertising is necessary to a neighborhood theatre, and, as a matter of fact, I think a canvass of the entire country will show few who are doing it.

Now, regarding posters; lurid colors, sameness of subjects, poor reproduction and other details have made the majority of picture posters worthless.

YEARS ago posters had great value. The subjects were carefully thought out, and artists drew and redrew the sketches until they finally were about right. The show people who used them depended on the posters to bring about one-third of the business to the theatre; newspapers another third, and, the show making good and favorable mention by word of mouth, to complete the final third.

LET it be borne in mind that people did not go out for a walk and stroll up to the theatre, take a look at the posters outside to see what the show was, and then decide as to whether they would go in or not! They do this in the picture houses, allowing, of course, that the posters on the outside of the house draw the business, a point the writer does not for an instant wholly concede.

Does the reader appreciate the fact that the theatrical manager aforementioned depended upon the quality and attractiveness of his posters to draw one-third of his business? On the contrary, does it not strike the reader with full force that the film manfacturer has no direct interest at all as to whether the posters he gets out draw any money to the theatre, as he gets only so much for his film anyhow? The film manufacturer gets out posters as a matter of form, and not with the same interest as the theatrical manager used to do.

The writer believes in posters, but they should be discriminating and carefully thought out, well sketched and well lithographed, and not mere fill-the-gap colored sheets of paper.

On page 3275 of the NEWS, in the final paragraph of the first column, a chorus of motion picture advertising men replied to a question as to whether it was not possible for directors to make stills of the strongest situations in their productions. They said, "It hasn't been possible."

IF picture directors are willing to let that statement stand, it is a sad reflection on their ability and intelligence.

THEATRICAL managers made flashlights of the strongest situations only and everything had to be done by flashlights, with nothing like the facilities that the picture men have. It looks like a verification of the published letter (page 3272, first column, next to last paragraph), where the exhibitor writes: "Men are dictating policies about which they really know nothing."

I contend that a picture house in a neighborhood locality, showing evenings only, as a rule takes in under a thousand dollars a week, and this applies to fine, high-grade houses. The majority, with seating capacities of five and six hundred, won't take in half of that amount. The small-capacity house of three hundred seats in a business location, playing day and night, won't take in more than five and six hundred dollars a week.

NONE of these houses can afford newspaper advertising, and as a rule they don't require it. The business-street house is all transient trade and the neighborhood house has its regular patronage. There are always exceptions. In the small town, for instance, to insert an ad in the paper with a circulation in the surrounding country brings good results and is obviously an advertising necessity.

The large theatre, with 1,500 seating capacity, in the business district requires newspaper advertising, as these theatres draw from all sections, and not as the other houses mentioned. I do not think our page-one man had this type house in mind when he said no newspaper advertising was required.

WE have passed the stage where impossible posters draw money to a box office. Select the ones which you feel will reflect a credit to the lobby or front of your theatre, and refuse all others. Install a three-sheet frame on either side of the front of your house and also in your lobby, and have a neatly painted paper sign done by a sign-painter, stating just what your program is for that day and the star of each film, with name of manufacturer if you feel that same is an asset. Your patrons by simply reading over that sign can tell in an instant what your show is, and whether they want to see it or not.

VOL. XIV December 16, 1916 No. 24

SINCE the beginning of motion pictures no greater irritant has been so persistently offered the theatre patron by the exhibitor everywhere than the "time gamble." Never yet has a patron been able to buy his ticket of admission and enter a photoplay house, absolutely certain that he will see the show straight through from start to finish. Many, if not all exhibitors too, are at a loss to arrange a selected bill that will meet with the unanimous approval of every possible patron. It is quite an accomplishment to have booked each day, one picture that will appeal to twenty per cent. of the spectators. The other eighty per cent. are going to be grieved if they are compelled to sit through a production they do not like, in order to view the one they came to see in its completeness.

HOW simple to arrange some sort of a clock face in front of the box office of every theatre, which would inform the passer-by at a glance of the state in which the entertainment inside is then. By an arrangement of wires or even by personal attention from an employee of the theatre, this clock could be made, all day, a screaming appeal for patronage from the admirers of each and every particular star or company on exhibition—as they pass by!

* * *

THE busy photoplay fan who has but an hour to spare and wants to see Olga Grey in her latest Fine Arts drama which he knows is at the theatre he will pass on his way to lunch, need not risk eight or ten reels of celluloidic entertainment in which he has not the slightest interest—to say nothing of the possible loss of his lunch! He only has to glance at the clock face before the up-to-date exhibitor's place, and learn what is on the screen at the moment and how long it has been on, and what is the next offering and when.

THEN if his money does not slide across the box office ledge at that moment, it probably will later in the day, and most important of all, a friendly and satisfied patron has been won by the house.

A GOOD point would be to time the program carefully and mark on the sign just the hour each picture subject goes on. Copies from vaudeville—yes—but what of it? Aren't we exhibitors showmen, and should we not run our houses on show lines?

ANOTHER point—Why not frame the one-sheet posters of stars and hang them in the lobby as permanent display? Few of the one-sheets issued are good enough for the purpose, but the manufacturers would doubtless be glad to spend money for good ones and give them free to the theatres if they were assured they would be hung in lobbies. It would pay them to give frames as well.

Lack of co-operation, that is the trouble, regardless of the angle you view the business from, it is always there.

CERTAINLY the average exhibitor is glad to advertise a star and hang her or his picture up in the lobby, but not when the manufacturer asks him from 10 to 25 cents for the poster. There is a certain topical weekly which charges seven cents for a cheap type one-sheet which should be given free, as at the outside it doesn't cost over two cents to get out, and if a large edition was ordered it could be done for a cent and a half.

* * *

CLEAN, direct and judicious advertising is what is needed.

FEW posters, but good ones; painted signs of your programs; no heralds or stills.

I have found that the very best advertising was a specially printed program of the entire week's showing, delivered in the mail boxes for a radius of several blocks from the theatre, and has brought the very best results.

I AM figuring on getting out a calendar next year and sending them out once a month instead of with the entire monthly program on it. It involves a good bit of work to get out the same and to lay out a definite program so far ahead, but I hope to accomplish it. I intend distributing them over a wider territory and getting out a much larger edition than I do with the weekly folders.

THE calendars will be put in envelopes and delivered to each householder in hand instead of putting in mail boxes. In rural points they could be mailed. This is direct advertising, the best in the world.

PERSONALLY, I feel that I am going through the leavening period of the business. The cheap, "blood and thunder," five-cent man has practically eliminated himself from the business. The reckless "first run at any price" man is going to do the same thing. Then the conservative, solid exhibitor will be the factor, and a dependable one, providing, of course, that the manufacturing and distributing end do their part and show the proper co-operative spirit. Later on, I may give my views on film service, but much prefer to see it expressed by others in the meantime.

EXHIBITOR.

THE "conservative, solid exhibitor" is just the exhibitor we, too, pin our faith to for the broad, true development of the motion picture industry.

He will be the man running a community theatre, wherein he will give his patrons each week a composite view of the world's progress in art, literature, drama, news, science, travel, fashion, etc. He will be helped by the manufacturer and distributor of films—helped to receive and disburse his goods with a profit—just as the manufacturer today in other industries looks after his retailer's welfare. He will belong to a local organization founded upon the elimination of cut-throat competition and for the business welfare of each member—and through this local he will belong to a state and to a national body of exhibitors who will be a big and constructive power in and for the motion picture industry.

This isn't a Utopian situation. It will come about. The outlook is hazy now but the end is merely a matter of inevitable and economic development.

Goldfish and Selwyn Form $3,000,000 Corporation

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation Will Screen Many Stage Successes—Stock Is All Subscribed For—Margaret Mayo in Scenario Department—Studios in East and West

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is now prepared to announce its intentions to the motion picture trade. The statement was given out last Wednesday afternoon in Samuel Goldfish's office at 1451 Broadway, as follows:

"Samuel Goldfish, who resigned recently as chairman of the Board of Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Company has gone into the motion picture producing business with Edgar Selwyn, Archibald Selwyn, Margaret Mayo and Arthur Hopkins. They decided that the name of the new concern should be the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, the name 'Goldwyn' having been compounded from Goldfish and Selwyn. The corporation was formed with a capital stock of $3,000,000, all of which has been subscribed for by the organizers and their associates.

"The plans of the new company are elaborate. Motion picture rights to a large number of plays which are controlled by the individual members of the company have already been secured, and contracts with several well-known actors and actresses of the stage and screen have been signed.

"Margaret Mayo and Edgar Selwyn will take immediate charge of the scenario department. Arthur Hopkins will supervise all productions. Robert Edward Jones will be associated with him as art director."

Goldfish Is President

"The officers of the new company are as follows: Samuel Goldfish, president; Edgar Selwyn, vice-president, and Crosby Gaige, treasurer."

It has been known for some time that Mr. Goldfish was planning to form another motion picture producing company, and his activities with the Lasky and the Famous Players-Lasky Companies have convinced all of those who know him that the new venture would be stupendous. Mr. Goldfish has occupied a prominent position in the motion picture field for years. He was one of the founders of the Lasky Company, and a large proportion of the present success of that concern is credited to his aggressive efforts and unusual foresightedness. He became head of the Board of Directors when the Lasky-Famous Players merger took place.

Edgar Selwyn, vice-president of the new concern, is president of Selwyn and Company, theatrical producers. He is well-known as a dramatist and producer, and has been known for years as one of the most successful figures on Broadway, because of the manner in which he has applied his artistic talents to the stage.

The Selwyn family has been responsible for some of the most striking stage successes in recent years. Individually or collectively, Edgar Selwyn, his brother, Archibald Selwyn, his wife Margaret Mayo, and Arthur Hopkins have created and produced such popular plays as "Within the Law," "Fair and Warmer," "On Trial," "Polly of the Circus," "Country Boy," "Under Cover," "Twin Beds," "Baby Mine," and others.

Arthur Hopkins, Producer

Arthur Hopkins, the supervising director of the new Goldwyn enterprises, is a successful producer. His present Broadway production is "Good Gracious Annabelle."

Robert Edward Jones, the Goldwyn art director, is the man who has created a sensation in the art world with his scenic conceptions for the Russian Ballet, and other productions.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will produce pictures in California and in the East.

National Board Wants Children's Films

THE demand for special performances of films suitable for the family group and for young people, as a means of meeting certain problems that have arisen in the motion picture industry, is so widespread that the National Committee on Films for Young People (affiliated with the National Board of Review) has decided to take steps toward securing the definite co-operation of those in different parts of the country who are interested.

Plans for bringing about this desired co-operation through the affiliation of the various committees which have been formed in different communities, were prepared a few days ago.

It was decided to give the loose organization under which the various co-operating committees will work, the name "The Affiliated Committees for Better Films."

The following statement was given out: "The chief function will be that of exchanging information as to the causes of success and failure in the promotion of special performances of the kind described, answering questions and distributing lists of films suitable for special performances. It is to exist on the basis of service co-operation and independence.

Ochs Trial is Fast and Furious, but Results Are Few

Metro Attorney Present—Ochs Refuses to Testify—Stock Books and Ledger Are Denied Keppler—Reporters Are Unanimously Voted Out—Closed Session Lasts Until Evening

THE investigation of Lee A. Ochs, which is being conducted to determine whether or not he has used his office of president of the Exhibitors' League of America to further his personal ends, was continued Friday morning, December 1, at eleven o'clock.

Two hours were consumed in useless argument and debate. Repeated efforts on the part of Tobias Keppler, attorney for Fleischman and Goldreyer, to induce Mr. Ochs to take the witness stand were thwarted by Attorney Goldsmith, who is Lee Ochs' counsel.

It developed at an early stage of the hearing that the stock certificate books and stock ledger of Ochs' new trade publication, which Keppler had defied him to produce without avail, were examined by the executive committee at their monthly meeting on the Wednesday previous.

An atmosphere of nervous impatience, lightened by the bright and snappy remarks by the three lawyers present, prevailed at Friday's session.

Since the last postponement of the investigating committee that body has acquired the services of J. Robert Rubin, to advise them on legal matters. Mr. Rubin is attorney for the Metro Pictures Corporation as well as of "Variety."

Mr. Keppler did not arrive on time, so Mr. Goldsmith undertook to settle matters once and for all by calling his client, Ochs, to the witness stand.

Ochs Has Quick Answers

Ochs answered with apparent eagerness a series of questions.

"Mr. Ochs," questioned Goldsmith, "were the charges printed in 'Variety' true or false?"

"False."

"Has any stock been sold to any film company——"

"No."

"—in your new trade publication?"

"No."

"Or any employees?"

"No."

"Directly or indirectly?"

"No."

"The board of directors are Merrit Crawford, W. Stephen Bush, Mr. Blumenthal, Leslie Mason——"

"And myself," said Mr. Ochs.

"Is there any secret arrangement?"

"No."

"And the voting stock is held jointly by workers on the paper and the Exhibitors' League of America?"

"Yes!"

"And the voting trust, Mr. Ochs. Two of them are members of the League, are they not? And is not one a worker?"

"Yes," agreed Mr. Ochs emphatically.

Keppler Breaks In

Just about then Tobias Keppler, who had been delayed, walked into the meeting and commented that the worker who had voted had left the advertising department of the Metro Pictures Corporation to become a worker, and that of the two League voters, Ochs was one.

"Isn't it true," inquired Keppler, "that a man came to the editorial staff of the new trade paper directly from the advertising department of the Metro?"

No one volunteered to answer this question.

A debate followed concerning the order of procedure, in which the three lawyers participated, Keppler protesting against the presence of Mr. Rubin.

"I am here to represent 'Variety,' and I am counsel to the League," replied Mr. Rubin.

"Are you not also counsel for the Metro Company?" asked Keppler.

"I am," answered Rubin.

"Then," rejoined Keppler, "I demand the presence of an unbiased counsel before I proceed."

Rubin retorted, "I am unbiased. I came here only out of a desire to see fair play and justice done."

Sam Trigger, the chairman, exclaimed, "Mr. Keppler, you only want to put us to more expense!"

Rubin interrupted. "I suggest that all counsel be eliminated."

Ochs added, "That's what I say!"

Keppler, after order was restored, turned to Goldsmith, Ochs' lawyer. "I have a much better suggestion. There is a little matter of $100,000 involved—only a few pennies! Will you go to trial?"

Rubin Remains

Goldsmith laughed and answered, "Don't annoy me!"

The question of whether or not Rubin ought to be put out was revived; but Mr. Trigger interrupted, saying, "I asked Mr. Rubin to come myself."

Keppler thought this over and remarked, "I will withdraw my objection to Mr. Rubin if Mr. Ochs will produce the certificate books and stock ledger of the trade paper."

Charles Steiner, one of the investigating committeemen, arose and declared that the books were not necessary.

"Put it to a vote," he suggested. "Is it necessary to go into the Review question again? We were appointed to investigate the seven charges brought against Mr. Ochs."

Max Blumenthal, who is secretary and treasurer of the new paper, announced indignantly that he was custodian of the books, and that he had been ordered by the national executive committee not to show them.

Mr. Rubin then admitted that he was assistant secretary of the Metro, and he volunteered to requisition any officer of the company, all of whom would willingly testify under oath that they owned no stock, directly or indirectly, in the new paper.

Keppler replied, "I don't want that kind of testimony."

He requested that Ochs take the witness stand. Ochs declined. Goldsmith protested Keppler's suggestion, and addressed himself to the representatives of the trade journals. He said the press men were nothing but a publicity committee for Keppler. Why didn't they ever take down notes when he, Goldsmith, was speaking?

Ochs Refuses to Testify

Keppler ignored the insinuation and proceeded: "If I don't see the books; if Mr. Ochs refuses to testify, we must seek redress elsewhere. If Mr. Ochs is unwilling to answer questions as president of the National League, I refuse to put my clients, Fleischman and Goldreyer, on the witness stand."

Mr. Steiner arose. "I suggest that you ask Ochs to take the witness stand."

Mr. Goldsmith promptly answered, "I refuse. Fleischman and Goldreyer have not produced any real evidence against Mr. Ochs."

"Mr. Keppler, you have proved nothing against Mr. Ochs in the previous hearings," put in Sam Trigger.

"On the contrary, Mr. Chairman," replied Keppler with heat, "I proved everything!"

Keppler declared that, before he could proceed, he must have a copy of the telegram which Mr. Trigger had sent to the eight members of the executtive board, a copy of the minutes, a copy of the charges and an opportunity to assemble his witnesses.

Following another cross-fire, Keppler stated: "If Mr. Ochs will not take the stand, I will put Fleischman and Goldreyer on and examine them, but no one else shall cross-examine them."

Goldsmith and Rubin promised not to question Fleischman and Goldreyer.

The question of excluding the press, which Mr. Rubin brought up originally at Friday's session, was again mentioned. Mr. Trigger in opening the meeting had said to the press members, "Don't garble the reports. Give us a true statement of facts. That will be much better for the boys and much better for the exhibitors."

Reporters Are Eliminated

It was finally decided to oust the notebook-and-pencil squad.

Stag Party for Reel Fellows

At the November meeting of the Reel Fellows Club, Chicago, held at the Hotel Morrison, it was decided to hold the annual election of officers at the December meeting, and a nominating committee was appointed, which submitted three tickets, headed respectively by J. E. O'Toole, F. J. Flaherty and R. O. Proctor. The enthusiasm shown assures that the election will be an exciting and closely contested one.

A committee was appointed, headed by L. E. Lockwood, to arrange for a large stag party which will take place sometime before Christmas. This will take the form of one of the old time "frontier days" entertainment and promises to be a rousing success.

Exhibitors' Ball Brings Big Gathering to Garden

Art Dramas Beauty Contest and Pathe's Introduction of Pearl White Attract Greatest Attention—Scores of Stars Introduced to Admiring Throngs

THE sixth annual "movie ball" of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in Madison Square Garden, New York City, on Wednesday, November 29, Thanksgiving Eve. It was fairly well attended by those of the city anxious as usual to catch glimpses of their screen favorites. The biggest features were the grand march, the beauty contest held by the Art Dramas Corporation, Pearl White's entrance into the arena mounted on a horse and followed by a score of soldier boys, and the introduction of various stars from the musicians' platform, in which the Vitagraph Company was best represented.

Whether or not the ball was a tremendous financial success the league has not yet reported, but certain it is that several thousands of dollars were taken in at the gate. And without a doubt it was a great social success, both for those within the trade and those who came merely for the sake of satisfying their curiosity.

The boxes ranged around the floor of the arena, held for the most part by the representative producing companies of the industry, were occupied by many of the greatest stars. These loges of beauty and high salaries were well patronized by a gaping public throughout the evening, and whenever this star or that moved from the boxes he or she was trailed about the garden by a host of admirers.

Above the boxes a tier of seats were occupied by more of the members of the various companies. In the balconies people were allowed to roam at will and look down upon the gorgeous spectacle below. The garden was attractively decorated, the boxes and balconies being covered with artistic devices left there from the ball of the Ten Allies, held the night before. In addition, banners blazoned forth and proclaimed the whereabouts of the various companies.

The lighting of the garden was made a special feature. Several of the companies erected electric signs above their divisions, while during the grand march and other events the house lights were lowered and spotlights played on the notables as they walked the floor.

Municipal Heads Present

Something of a civic as well as a trade aspect was lent the occasion by the attendance of several men holding high public office in the city of New York. Borough President Marcus M. Marks and Douglas Mathewson headed quite a list of city notables, while License Commissioner Bell and various aldermen and judges lent added prestige to the gathering.

The beauty contest, held by the Art Dramas Corporation, was the center of great interest. There were many aspirants who flocked around the judges, anxious to make their presence known and to be given a chance to act before the camera. The judges of the contest, Dorothy Bernard, Jean Sothern, Gertrude McCoy, Grace Valentine and Lucille Lee Stewart, finally narrowed it down to two young ladies, one a blonde, the other a brunette. Unable to decide which appeared to be better suited to claim the winer's laurels, the five actresses were in a quandary until little Bobby Connelly of Vitagraph strolled out on the floor. He was asked to decide, and Bobby, being a picture expert, chose the blonde, Betty Scott. She will be given an opportunity to prove her worth in an early release of the Art Dramas Corporation. B. P. Fineman immediately escorted Miss Scott to the company's box.

P. A. Parsons, who presides over the destinies of the Pathe publicity department, gave the throng a great surprise when he sprang his stunt. Pearl White, dressed in her army costume, rode out on the floor accompanied by a band and several soldiers. They marched slowly around the garden, advertising "Pearl of the Army" for all they were worth, and were greeted by hearty cheering from all sides.

Feminine Charms Dazzle

Pathe stars were well in evidence throughout the entire evening. Florence La Badie and Gladys Hulette, the brightest players of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, entered the garden in Jinrikshas, escorted by other Thanhouserites, including Wayne Aery and Kathryn Adams. Florence Rose, who makes the Pathe fashion films, filled a whole box with the beauties who display the latest modes in her pictures.

"Silent Bill" Haddock, who was noisier than ever, introducing the stars, was kept busy for almost the full space of an hour. Anita Stewart and Paul Panzer got the lions' share of the hand clapping, if indeed it was able to distinguish who was the most enthusiastically greeted. Harry Morey, Ralph Ince, Lucille Lee Stewart, Huntley Gordon and a host of others, including Rose Tapley, the great friend of the motion picture exhibitor, were presented also.

Many of the stars proceeded to the garden in automobiles from league headquarters, at 218 West 42nd street. They were led by the Universal band, which attends about every public function nowadays. Universal was ably represented, too, for despite the fact that the greater part of its producing force is located in the West, Violet Mesereau, one of the most popular stars of the company, was present, and no one else there was allowed to go away without noticing her and her varied escort from the Universal home office.

Robbery Increases Uproar

The Monmouth Film Corporation, producers of the Jimmie Dale series, kept staging a fake robbery, which added to the general excitement. Down in the cafe an orchestra played for dancing. It had various leaders, including Earl Metcalfe, just back from a stay in Cleveland, and Therlow Bergen, hero of a dozen Pathe releases of the past.

Included among the boxholders were the Screen Club, the Exhibitors' League, Metro, Universal, Pathe, Simplex, Vitagraph, International, Essanay, Sherman-Elliott, Monmouth, Mutual Exchange, Mutt and Jeff, Unicorn, Nicholas Power, Herbert Brenon, Feature Film Corporation, Brook Film Corporation, Frohman Amusement, Loew, Kleine, Kalem, the National Association, the New Jersey Exhibitors' League and the F. I. L. M. Club.

Of the various stars who attended it would not be fair to single out a list of only a few who were there. The fact that there was such a great number makes it impossible to print a full list of the names, but the majority of those now working in the Eastern studios were present. The picture players seldom fail to respond to the exhibitors' call. Without them no ball would be a success. It is for them the public comes, and the members of the league were grateful to every player, from the stars to those of lesser note, for their attendance. Various of the film officials, representing every important producing company, were also present.

The exhibitors on the executive committee of the ball are listed below: I. N. Hartstall, L. F. Blumenthal, Wm. Hilkemeier, joint general chairmen arrangement; Louis F. Blumenthal, treasurer; L. E. Atwater, W. C. Smith, joint chairmen lighting; Lee A. Ochs, chairman reception; Thos. Howard, chairman program; Charles Haring, chairman ticket; Benj. Lyons, chairman wardrobe; Chas. Steiner, chairman floor; Tom Howard, chairman printing; Thos. Howard, chairman publicity and press; Bill Haddock, chief announcer; C. R. Martineau, master of ceremonies; Gus Koenigswald, chairman music; Otto Lederer, chairman badge; Wm. Hilkemeier, chairman decoration; S. H. Trigger, chairman entertainment.

STUDIO DIRECTORY IS VALUABLE AID TO HOLLANDER

Mr. William A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

Permit me to congratulate you on the excellence of your last studio directory. It is truly an achievement in the motion picture industry and quite an indispensable thing to me. Frequently I must refer to it for data and almost invariably I find the very information I seek.

I feel that you deserve the thanks of men and women occupying positions such as mine for the valuable aid this directory gives them, and the industry generally for giving it such a splendid book.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) W. K. Hollander,

Attorneys Retained by New York Film Men to Fight

Sunday Closing Decision Will Have to Be Enforced and Then Managers Expect to Successfully Enlist Public Sympathy and Aid to Good Effect

THE statute upon which was based the recent Albany ruling that Sunday moving picture shows are illegal was legislated in 1881—years before motion pictures were shown in America. Yet it is necessary for film men to hire lawyers and fight the decision.

John B. Stanchfield and Martin W. Littleton have been retained by New York State film men to dispute the recent decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Third Department.

A conference between the attorneys and the representatives of the Exhibitors' League of America and the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held Friday afternoon for the purpose of deciding upon an immediate course of action.

No doubt exists concerning the public's attitude in the question. Mayor Mitchel and other prominent officials throughout the State have expressed their indignation at the decision and are anxious to do all in their power to prevent the carrying out of a ruling which would deprive millions of people of their chosen Sunday entertainment.

Lee A. Ochs, president of the Exhibitors' League, said that he understood that the brief in the case of LeRoy H. Bender of Albany, who was the defendant in the action which led to the Albany decision, had been faulty, and that an application for the reopening of the case would be made on those grounds.

Theatres Will Challenge Ruling

Exhibitors in New York City will remain open on Sundays, pending a final decision of the whole matter. L. A. Pittner of Cohoes, said that while the Albany theatres were dark Sundyay, those in Troy and Schenectady were open.

Gustavus A. Rogers said Thursday that he had been retained to argue the appeal in the Bender case before the Court of Appeals, and expected that the hearing would take place on January 8.

In a lecture which he delivered before the College of the City of New York, Mr. Rogers said:

"It is the most curious and anomalous situation that while it is legal in this and other sections of the State to give motion picture exhibitions on Sunday, in other sections, where judges of the Supreme Court and Appellate Division have taken a different view, it is not legal. What is criminal in Albany is not criminal in New York City, and this strange disparity in the law exists after the people, not only of this country but practically of the civilized world, have reached the pretty definite conclusion that the motion picture is a legitimate and proper part of the Sunday rest and recreation.

"In my opinion, after a careful survey of the law throughout the country, there is not the slightest doubt but that the Court of Appeals will uphold the right of the people to attend motion pictures on Sunday, and the doctrine, as established by the Court in New York City, particularly in the Hemlab case, in which Judge Gaynor wrote the opinion, will be accepted as the law rather than the recent decision of the Third Departemnt.

"It should be thoroughly understood that in 1908, this entire question was threshed out in the Appellate Division of the Second Department, and Judge Gaynor handed down a decision in which he declared that the giving of a motion picture show on Sunday was not a violation of the statute; that the Legislature had not included in its provisions anything specifically against the motion picture or a motion picture exhibition, and therefore it was not prohibited.

Movies Not Mentioned

"There is no prohibition in our statute against the operation of a motion picture show on Sunday; there is nothing in the Constitution of the State which prevents it. There is nothing in the statute which affects theatres, that prohibits the giving of a motion picture show on Sunday, for the things which are prohibited are stated. This is Section 2152 of the Penal Law, Section 1481 of the Greater New York Charter, as amended by the Board of Aldermen and passed in 1908.

"There is only one other statute, therefore, which can be applied to the situation. It is the statute which generally prohibits public sports and public exhibitions on Sunday. This is Section 2145 of the Penal Law, formally Section 265 of the Penal Code. That section distinctly states what is prohibited, and the motion picture shows as such are not in any manner mentioned; in fact, when that statute was originally passed, in 1881, the motion picture show, or exhibition, was unknown.

Ninety Days' Trial of Censorship in Springfield, Ill.

Ninety days' trial is to be given a plan in Springfield, Ill., by which a committee of three, appointed by Mayor Baumann, are to review the moving pictures shown in the city. The appointment of the three, two women and one man, as a committee to review all films shown in Springfield was the outcome of an agitation started by the women's school council which sought to have a censorship board appointed to approve all films brought into the city. After two weeks of wrangling back and forth before the city council the plan of naming a board without any police powers was arrived at.

The reviewing board cannot have a film stopped. It can only carry its objections to the mayor and commissioners. The members of the board are to be supplied with a badge which will admit them to any theatre in the city. The board cannot revoke the license of any theatre under the present plan.

The proposition was suggested by City Attorney Stevens after both the women's council and the theatre proprietors had wrangled back and forth over the proposition.

Commissioner Reece, at one time a theatrical man, said it would be next to impossible to have parts cut out of the films coming into Springfield for they have been censored two or three times before reaching here.

The only commissioner who came out openly for the censor board was Commissioner Spaulding. Reece was for a modified form of censorship and the arrangement arrived at met with his approval.

Members of the local federation of labor threatened to force the issue to a vote if the council took any action to form a censor board.

By the present plan the reviewing board is not to make any report to the council on any film unless all three agree that it is objectionable.

Rights to "Allah" Not Yet Sold

Rights to William N. Selig's production, "The Garden of Allah," have not been disposed of to H. S. Sherman as rumored, and as announced recently, as a rumor, in several of the trade magazines. Mr. Selig makes an emphatic denial of the rumored sale, and his office in a letter under date of November 25, states distinctly that up to that time of writing no rights for territory or for the country had been sold to anyone.

Should any or all rights to this picture be sold, the information will be given authoritatively to the readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Interest is naturally aroused over the distribution of this production, in which time and expense have been liberally used.

In and Out of Town

C. L. Madden, director of publicity for the Stillman Theatre Company, Cleveland, Ohio, came to New York last week.

H. O. Davis, general manager of Universal City and one of the vice-presidents of the Universal Film Company, is in New York once again.

Joe Brandt proceeds to Chicago on special business after attending the Universal trophy race at Uniontown, Pa.

L. Ernest Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Montreal, Canada, is in town making plans for the distribution of the latest Pathe serial, "Pearl of the Army," in the Dominion of Canada. Mr. Ouimet controls the entire Pathe product in Canada, and is the pioneer film man of the Dominion, having been the only distributor of film there until the year 1908.

The Optimistic Point of View Well Stated

IN all this discussion about open booking it must not be overlooked that, as a correspondent recently averred, there "ain't no such animal," really as "open" booking. As soon as the pictures of any manufacturer get to be so good that, as a whole, they are in big demand, there ceases to be any of those pictures "open" to the free-lance booker. Where this is not so, it means the getting away from the "exclusive" idea of running certain stars or pictures the other fellow in your neighborhood cannot get.

The fundamental idea that a good thing shall have a wider and more profitable market than an inferior article, must apply to pictures. If individual genius must club together on a socialistic plan when it comes to the production of pictures, there is something wrong in picture production, or else the whole merchandising plan of free competition which we hold so sacred in our laws and constitution is out of date. The open booking has come to stay, and the only question is how the exhibitor shall receive the new order of things. Does the present exhibitor, who has a comfortable monopoly of some good program in his neighborhood, resent being disturbed by an "upstart" competitor? Of course he objects to the intrusion into his preserves, and he will support his "program" service and do all in his power to help the program service maintain its previous quality. So we are going to have two kinds of exhibitors, and perhaps the majority will take their service as now from the sources they find most reliable, while the others will do all they can to encourage individual effort.

When It Is Not Open Booking

Taking all the output of a single star is not "open booking." There is no reason why the regular schedule common to program releases, furthermore, should be an inseparable factor of buying complete output. The "good old days" of General Film monopoly referred to by one of the correspondents meant a steady grind of the same program whether the theatre catered to the elite "bon tons" or illiterate toughs. That system was certainly wrong for the theatre that did not fit into the "happy medium" of catering to the "common herd." The same thing is applicable to "features" now, for there are few real "features." The exhibitor nowadays is running programs, mostly made up of five reel units, with few exceptions. And to be successful, if he chooses not to cater to the "average" public, he must have a selection of both subjects and booking dates on pictures.

Or if he chooses to use above average material, and exact a higher price for it, he must be free to exert every ounce of energy and not be held back by inability to get productions up to the standard he is able to exploit. Let's have more straight from the shoulder opinions from exhibitors how this standard can be attained, whether through program or through "open" bookings.

Motion Picture News:

With all this discussion about the demnition bow-bows to which this business is headed because of the withdrawal of several stars from several programs to appear in more expensive productions of better stories than before, why is the dime so generally conceded to be the last word in admission prices? It has been only some two years since so shrewd a man as Mr. Pat Powers consumed columns of space explaining how the motion picture was now and forever a five-cent affair, and Mr. Laemmle hasn't quit writing about "feature dementis" yet. The admission price has already reached a dime, and good five-reelers are about as popular as ever. If any old five-reeler released on a program is supposed to be worth a dime, and a few unusual productions worth two dollars, such a film as "The Common Law" must fit some where in between.

And all this about excessive salaries. Perhaps Chaplin isn't worth thirty thousand a film, but I've paid rather high prices for his plays, and always made money on them. But does not Caruso receive a few thousand dollars himself from the Victor people for every few minutes he sings into a graphophone? No one else can produce Caruso's notes, nor can they equal Chaplin's laughs. It is said that such stars of the stage as David Warfield and Maude Adams earn well over a hundred thousand dollars a season appearing for eight performances a week for thirty weeks. But through a film a Marguerite Clark or a Clara Kimball Young appear in two hundred and forty performances in a single day. They are as admired as the other two. Why then, is their salary so out of reason? And are not these salaries really paid as a percentage of the star's earnings? They say that the exhibitors have made Mary and Charlie and Clara so popular. Then why do they not make others equally popular, if they do not like the "ingratitude" of these three?

But back to Caruso. The Victor people, having paid the singer an enormous amount for a record and reproduced it many times, does what? Sells it for several times the cost of a record—made of the same material at the same cost except for his salary—of some rag-time singing vaudevillian. And it is passed on to the ultimate purchaser at that increase. But we are told that the picture, regardless of who plays it, who writes it or who produces it, must be shown right along at the same price as a machine-made story played by some nobody and directed, to judge from effects, by a mechanic. But must it? Suppose Clara, Mary and the rest of them did appear once for that price; didn't Warfield, too, appear in burlesque? And Fanny Brice was discovered by Ziegfeld at Coney. Neither the burlesque managers nor the Islanders bewail the fact that the actors are no longer available for them, nor do the "peepul" expect to see them for the same admission as formerly.

Exhibitor A says that he can not pay the enormous prices that are being asked. But the more the producers put into a film, the more necessary it is for them to get the maximum return, both in the price and the thoroughness of distribution. Just as Cohan and Harris, Selwyn, and the rest of them find the one-nighters necessary, just so will Messrs. Zuker and Selznick find it necessary to get their film into the hamlets. Exhibitor A is impatient; his time to play the film will come. If he wishes to play it before his time, his paying more is no one's fault but his. His competitor can take it, certainly. And if his competitor is able to get more money into the box-office for it, surely he is entitled to it. But if his competitor wants to pay more and can't get more, then he'll simply lose money, and that is the last thing Exhibitor A should worry about. Of course if he and his competitor are going to engage in an endurance contest to see which can break the other first, that is their own affair.

And, even again, if Paramount was so weak in every other point that Mary Pickford's leaving ruined the service, then Miss Pickford is wise to leave, for she was evidently carrying the rest. And if that is true, evidently Exhibitor A was paying too much for the rest and too little for Mary. If she is able to attract more money into the box office then her co-stars on the program, it is absolute logic that her pictures are worth more.

Through open booking, a man, if he have the house, the organization and the personal ability, can command better admission prices than his competitor in a competitive city and can afford to pay much more for service. If he must hold to a program, his average attraction can't be very much better than his competitor's and he can't get better prices: If the town is non-competitive, the film will some day be offered to him at a price he can afford. Open bookings really offer an exhibitor an opportunity to put his house on a higher plane and to make more money, but it also makes it harder for some of the really-not-exhibitors to get by. And to the public the scheme will inevitably bring better pictures for which they will pay better prices.

The waste of maintaining a distributing organization for one picture every five weeks is a different matter, but that condition is not a necessary accompaniment of open bookings. From the very principle of the open system, it should make easier a consolidation of distributors, the forming of a parallel to jobbers in mercantile lines. That becomes a problem of detail, not of principle.

Evelyn Greely, Star in the Dixie Film Studio

There is not the slightest possibility of a fair argument which would say that the film stars have not a personal right to collect from the people, the picturegoing public, "all the traffic will bear" in the way of toll for their personal popularity. The parallel between pictures and phonograph records holds good just that far. But there is not a hundred thousand dollar investment back of each disc. The "Caruso" of the phonograph did not have his popularity created for him by lavish expense and cooperation from people he now throws down. The complaint is that the film star in effect says to the exhibitor, "You take the chance of building up a reputation for me, and if you win, I'll take all the profits, or turn them over to your nearest enemy." Let's hear from somebody else along this line, of how to control the Frankenstein one has himself created.

The whole salvation of this business is going to be in the distribution system, which our correspondent calls a "detail." Longer contracts with stars, equitable contracts with exhibitors, and first and foremost a realization by the exchange that the business must be exploited on a permanent basis or the best brains will leave it, will cure many of the present evils universally complained of. Get busy, you exhibitors, and let us have your views on these momentous questions.

The fear as to confusion from wide open booking expressed by the brother exhibitor who writes the following, is well founded, and clearly expressed.

Owensboro, Ky., November 27.

Motion Picture News, New York.

Gentlemen:

Permit me to "horn in" on the conversation stuff raging at present in your columns anent the exhibitors manifold and multitudinous woes.

Why so much harping on the question of open booking and program service? Both systems have their good points, both have existed seemingly forever in the past and both will no doubt be here for years to come.

Talking from the experience of an exhibitor who changes programs frequently in the week one of my biggest worries is to keep satisfactory bookings arranged ahead on open dates, whereas with program services I can look ahead for weeks and know exactly what is in store for me. On the other hand I am glad the open booking arrangement prevails, this permitting me to secure meritorious productions to strengthen up at times.

The fellows in the business who are making so much noise now evidently were not in the game in the palmy days of the General. Ah, those were the good old days! Talk about your tight program proposition. Then one was "sewed up tight." Nothing like that exists today.

I for one find little or no fault with the system as employed by the Paramount, Fox, Metro, Triangle and other services. Certainly the deposit idea is not loved, but it's a guarantee to me as much as to the corporation. This could be modified and changed to a more equitable basis perhaps, but there are larger evils that need correcting much quicker.

Now let's look at the Vitagraph, V-L-S-E, Ince, as an example of the open booking policy. I am a satisfied customer of theirs and am using their productions because their pictures are splendid and I want them. What difference exists between their policy and the programs mentioned above? None except no deposit is exacted, for which I am duly thankful. But let's presume that I skip around on their releases a lot, omit this one and that one and stay out quite often or even occasionally, how long will they want my patronage if there exists a competitor who will take it under a promise of regular use?

Gee, I'd hate to see every service opened wide and unrestricted. When such condition existed could I expect the various services to give me the pick and choice of their releases and disregard my competitors who might offer more? Why, it would be an awful condition!

Lots of perfectly good, high priced paper and space is being wasted in printing the wails of so many whose great complaint is "program service." What do I care if Paramount, for instance, takes their leading star out of the regular releases and put her or him in "specials" at extra money. If they weaken the program too much I would drop it and take another the first opportunity. If they asked me $100 the day for Marguerite Clark and I couldn't make any money at that figure why worry; let the other fellow have it. If he can make money with such a picture at such a price he is a better showman; if the reverse, his poor judgment will hasten the clearing of the field for me when I can then dictate what I will or will not pay.

Frank Rembusch, the Mirror screen man, comes nearer hitting the exact "nail on the head" than anyone else's arguments I have heard. There's too many theatres, there's too many "damphools" in the business, there's too many services, too much of lack of regard on the part of the exchanges for the feelings of the decent exhibitor in small matters. If this letter is at all interesting I'd like to write another of things that need adjusting as I see them from the viewpoint of the small city exhibitor.

Yours truly,
GEO. A. BLEICH.

The nub of this discussion is the quotation from Frank Rembusch. No doubt in the world that Frank hits the nail on the head, and no doubt Brother Bleich at Owensboro is right in saying prices will adjust themselves. They will. And that is really the optimistic and correct view. This whole matter of service will adjust itself, but in wishing to be back in the "good old days" of the "sewed up tight" program, Brother Bleich is thinking of personal comfort and safety of investment. What of the "other fellow" who wanted to break in? Because this business, like all business, is much overdone, must we bar all newcomers? That is practically what the old system did. And it is self-evident that the present growth of the business could not have been attained without breaking up this condition. Come again, Brother Bleich, you said a lot, and said it right to the point.

North Carolina Livening Up

The next Convention of the State Association is to be held in Charlotte, December 19-20-21. Local members of the organization have already held a meeting, and from tentative arrangements this convention will very easily be the biggest and most successful one so far.

North Carolina will be remembered as having been responsible in several instances for suppressing unwise and unjust legislation anent the film industry. She will doubtless remain at the head hereafter.

Nebraska Exhibitors Fully Realize the Growth of the Business

Omaha, Neb., exhibitors and exchange men were upset the other day when they heard of a new exhibitor who, in building a theatre, had persistently refused to put in any kind of a ventilation system whatever. The discovery of this man—the last of a type that marked the proprietors of the very earliest of exhibitors in this part of the country—led to a brief review of how motion picture theatres in the middle west have progressed within a few years.

The newer theatres are patterned after the most advanced kinds of houses in the country. When an Omaha company decided to build the Sun, now nearly completed, an architect visited cities all over the country, picked up an idea here and an idea there, and the Sun will be an example of motion picture theatre progress.

Broken Bow has a new theatre. On the second floor is a fraternal hall. This is a common plan in the smaller towns. The halls may just as well be on the second floor, in fact they would rather be on the second floor. The small town theatre only wants one floor. A two-floor building offers many more chances of architectural beauty.

The smaller towns throughout the Middle West, still growing and advertising, list the motion picture theatres with the schools, churches, banks, and other places that are assets.

Charles Gotthold

A new idea in motion picture theatres in the Middle West is a larger, better ventilated and better equipped operator's room. Any little old coop used to be enough for the operator. But now it is realized by the builder that the operator has a liking for comfort and convenience and safety.

E. B. Wait has taken over the Gem theatre at Ord, Neb., and the first thing he did was to enlarge the operator's room. Then he redecorated the theatre.

In the theatres throughout the Middle West no more than a year ago it would be "pitch dark" when the lights were turned off, except for the light on the screen. The Hipp, Omaha, started an innovation when Jake Schlank advertised that one could read a newspaper and watch the screen at the same time. Absolute darkness is no longer found necessary in a motion picture theatre.

Deeper lobbies, larger chairs, wider aisles, better ventilation, the indirect lighting system and more ticket offices are other features. It is still conceded, even in the progressive Middle West, that the tiny hidden ticket office is still about the most inconvenient place in the world. But no solution has offered itself as yet; even the Sun putting in a little office on the edge of the sidewalk, and in the lobby. The larger houses and many smaller places have what is known as a marquee, or portico over the walk in front.

Manager Calvert, of the Bluebird exchange in Omaha, had just returned from a trip into the Dakotas with some prophecies. "Take the new Motiograph, just opened by Mr. Wheeler in Canton, South Dakota," he said. "It is a modern, comfortable little place. Next door is a made-over storeroom, with camp chairs for seats. This made-over place has always been crowded. With the more comfortable theatre next door, the made-over place will die a hurried death; it makes no difference how good pictures it shows."

F. A. Van Husan, head of the Western Supply Co., says he doesn't sell veneered chairs to many customers. They all want upholstered chairs. They buy motor generator sets; higher grade motion picture machines than ever before, they have spotlights and other features, they have electric ticket punchers and choppers, automatic money changers and many of the modern devices in even the smallest houses.

Small Town Exhibitor Holds Pictures Two Days

P. H. Falkenberg, manager of the Majestic motion picture theatre at Lexington, Neb., has reported the results of a four weeks' experiment that will be of great interest of every small town exhibitor in the Middle West.

The Majestic seats 500. Lexington is a town of 7,300.

Mr. Falkenberg's experiment is nothing more than showing pictures for two days instead of one, and charging 10 cents straight admission. For four weeks he has been trying that. For two days he shows the same Triangle pictures. Then for two days he shows the same World pictures. There are other theatres in Lexington, and they are all progressive houses, not far from each other.

Mr. Falkenberg reasons that when he shows the pictures for only one day, those who choose to attend the other theatres—and the other theatres, he agrees, are of such high quality that they, too, should be patronized—he loses the patronage of those who, going elsewhere, cannot possibly attend his show. By showing for two days, he gets this patronage.

Another advantage is that instead of spending, say $10, for advertising for one day, he spends $20 for two days, and as a result reaches at least twice as many.

He gets his pictures for less rental. There is no daily express—his express charge is cut in half. There are other arguments.

Those who have tried to peer into the future of the motion picture industry of the Middle West, declare the theatres, especially in the larger towns where there is competition, will come to this—showing pictures at least two days. The large downtown theatres in the cities often show for a week at a time and even longer with big features.

But, anyway, there is a lot of interest in Falkenberg's experiment and his answer is—it is a success. His net income is larger last month than the month before. He confidently expects it to be larger this month than it was last.

Michigan Film Circuit Realized

With the addition of the Franklin Theatre in Saginaw, and the revision of the vaudeville policy in the Bijou Theatre in Battle Creek and Bay City, W. S. Butterfield comes to the front as one of the factors in Michigan motion picture affairs. Controlling the Bijou Theatre in Saginaw and the Garden Theatre in Flint, as well as eight other theatres in the state, Colonel Butterfield is enabled to offer bookings in the principal theatres in every city. The announcement that Colonel Butterfield will purchase outright or play on percentage big features for a term of from twenty-eight to forty days, is of interest to Michigan State Right buyers. It means that the State Right buyers can sell or contract for the exhibition of their pictures in the larger cities of Michigan, exclusive of Grand Rapids and Detroit, with the advantage of being able to book the time consecutively, through one office.

The Franklin Theatre in Saginaw will inaugurate its motion picture policy on Sunday, December 17.

It is understood that the bookings of the big feature pictures for the Michigan Circuit will be made from the main office of the Butterfield interests, at Battle Creek, Michigan.

Sunday Pictures Should Draw on Merit

New York, December 1.

Motion Picture News, New York City.

The recent court decision on Sunday movies in New York State is raising an agitation which is bound to be more far-reaching than anyone in the motion picture industry dreams of.

Already the leading religious and educational forces in the State are lining up to defeat any legislation which will allow Sunday movies, and these same forces are determined that the motion picture producer must respect the morals, ideals and common decencies, for which the body politic must necessarily stand, and, if needs be, fight.

The trade papers and the most representative men in the industry have fought bitterly and rightly so, against state and federal censorship, making as their strongest plea that there was enough decency and self-respect within the industry to insure a correction, if not the entire elimination, of pictures of an objectionable character.

And yet, in the face of all of this, we have seen produced with the last few months the worst lot of pictures which the trade has seen in its entire history—abortion pictures, so raw as to cause police interference; birth control pictures, which were positively shocking to even men who were not squeamish; love dramas, so transparently lustful as to shock and embarrass young ladies in the audience; crime pictures, where crime proved profitable, etc.

Perhaps a metropolitan audience might not be much affected by such portrayals, but what of the small town, far away from the blighting, pernicious influence of the city's contact, the innocent victim of the purveyor of filth, whose ideals of morals and decency is not one degree elevated above that of a sewer rat? Let the motion picture people profit by the experiences of the past. There was a day when horse-racing was a well founded state institution. The abuse of its privileges led to legal enactments which have meant its almost utter annihilation; and Sunday theatres were once wide open in New York, but the abuse of that privilege led to its being declared illegal.

I would, in the interest of the whole industry, make this suggestion: If you want to run Sunday exhibitions, confine your program to films of an educational character: travel, science, industry, art, news happenings, short stories with a high moral tone. Let your Sunday show occupy the place that the sacred concert does as compared with the dramatic production. In this way you will have the support of the churches and schools and the best people in every community; and what New York decides to do in the matter of the solution of the Sunday movie problem will probably be emulated by the majority of the states in the Union.

But I would urge, above everything, if the trade desires permanency and the respect of the entire country, they should frown down upon pictures which bring the whole industry into such bad repute; if something is not done to effect a change it will mean the undoing of the motion picture business.

There are more decent, self-respecting people in the country than there are blaackguards.

Yours very truly,

A MEMBER OF THE TRADE.

EXHIBITOR PERSONALS

CALIFORNIA—San Francisco: The Verdi theatre, located in the heart of the Italian district in what is popularly known as North Beach, or "Little Italy," has become known as a community meeting place on account of its size, comfortable furnishings, central location and the co-operative attitude of the management. Whenever there is some event in which the residents of the North Beach district are particularly interested it is very apt to be held in the Verdi theatre on Broadway.

ILLINOIS—Galesburg: The Gaiety theatre, South Cherry street, which is operated by the Theilan and Olson circuit, opened recently and will operate during the winter season, showing road shows and motion pictures.

Matseka: Paul Kraft has sold the Gilman Opera House, to John Shepard. Mr. Shepard, who formerly was employed by the American Express Company, resigned his position and is devoting his entire time to the motion picture business.

Metcalf: L. M. Toland has moved from Georgetown to his former home here, where he will conduct a picture show.

INDIANA—Tinton: Manager Scherer of the Nicklo theatre has rented the new Gastinean building, which is being built across from the old location of the Nicklo theatre and expects to move into the new building as soon as it is completed. Manager Scherer expects to run vaudeville and pictures in the new theatre.

Lafayette: The interior of the Luna theatre, a popular picture house of which Mr. Johnson is the owner, recently has been redecorated. The decoration was done under the direction of Miss Grace T. White, an artist of West Lafayette. The color scheme is green, blue and red. The work was done at night after the show.

Evansville: Manager Holtzman of the Novelty theatre is running three acts of vaudeville in addition to his picture program with no advance in admission price.

Plymouth: Charles Walker has sold his interest in the Gem to his son, Alonzo, who will operate the theatre.

Milford: Lewis Rowdibaugh has sold the Milford motion picture theatre to J. W. Estep.

Mishawaka: The old Methodist church is to be remodelled and reopened as a picture and vaudeville theatre. It will have a seating capacity of 900. The floor will be lowered to grade and a balcony will be added. Frank P. Konzen, who negotiated the deal for other parties, says $15,000 will be spent in improvements. The church is located at Lincoln Way and Mill street. It is said the purchase price was between $21,000 and $25,000. O. J. Lambiotte and H. T. Reynolds, of the Temple Company, owners of the Temple theatre, are contemplating making an addition in the future. The building adjoining the Temple, now occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Company, is under lease by the theatre company and when this room is remodeled and both buildings are thrown together, the theatre will have a seating capacity of from 750 to 800 persons. A stage and dressing rooms are included in the new plans and the management plans to run pictures and vaudeville.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Medford: The Fellsway theatre, recently completed, has been taken over by the Fellsway Theatre Company of Boston, of which W. L. Terhune is president. The board of directors aims to show the best in pictures at the theatre, with an ocasional concert. The same company owns the New Warwick theatre, now being built at Marblehead, which is expected to be completed in December.

Ochs Trial

Mr. Steiner observed: "Remove the press and let the committee ask Mr. Ochs questions. Let us be the lawyers, and let the lawyers be the listeners."

Keppler asked if the reporters could have a report of the meeting.

Sam Trigger replied: "They can have the result of the meeting."

Mr. Keppler reserved the right to inform the reporters what transpired at the closed session. A vote was taken, and the press gentlemen were unanimously ruled out.

Up to the moment of going to press, the results of the closed meeting were not given out to the trade papers. Mr. Keppler stated that no revelations of importance were made. The hearing was adjourned until Monday, December 11.

Fleischman and Goldreyer have addressed a report to the members of the Executive Committee, National Association, Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. Of vital interest to exhibitors is the following:

"As part of the justification for our complaint we did prove upon the hearing, from the mouth of Mr. Ochs himself, that he had taken away from our houses various programs that we had for a long time found best for our use, and that with the Paramount films he admitted he got the service for $50.00 a week, where our price was $150.00, and where we had put up our check for $600.00 cash deposit he had only to put up $200.00 in cash. He claims that that was simply business competition. We did not have a chance in the matter. The companies never asked us what price we would give, our programs were simply taken away. We appeal to you, and ask what chance did we have to continue to compete with him under such circumstances. What was to become of our investments? Mr. Ochs admitted on the stand that he offered to sell his theatres to us, but we could not possibly pay the price he demanded. Suppose the national president built a theatre on each side of your theatre, and you lost your four choicest programs, what would you do? Would you expect the members of your organization to help you against a person no less than the president of the City Association, the State Association and the National Association. Isn't he supposed to set the finest example of live and let live in our business. Isn't it only natural that the pain of our position made us cry out for justice?"

"Bringing Up Father" Is Now Being Animated

"Bringing Up Father," the pictorial comic created by George McManus, may now be seen in animated form in films released by the International. The first of this series has just been released and others will follow at regular intervals as part of the International's animated cartoon service. This is the first appearance of Mr. McManus' work on the screen, though his former creations have all been dramatized and produced on the stage.

Spanuth Plans Independent Distribution

H. A. SPANUTH, a Chicago film man, is organizing a two-million-dollar film company along unusual lines. The enterprise is to be co-operative, adapting the principles used by many Mutual enterprises in European countries. The capital needed to finance this proposition will be largely supplied by those who will produce, distribute and exhibit the productions of the company.

The Commonwealth Pictures Corporation believes that this form of ownership will benefit all branches of the industry. The producers who contribute to the company's film output will be interested in making their productions as good as possible, since their income depends on the success of the pictures. The exhibitors who are stockholders will furnish the market for the pictures. The exhibitor-stockholder will receive the benefits of territorial protection, profit sharing, and the fact that no advance deposits will be demanded.

The Commonwealth pictures will be distributed by independent exchanges. These exchanges will be operated on a percentage basis, and each will be a stockholder of the company.

Commonwealth pictures will be supplied through three sources. First, the company itself will produce pictures, the plan being to employ only the best directors and most popular stars. Second, outside companies may furnish pictures, provided the productions come up to the Commonwealth standard. Thirdly, rights to State right pictures will be purchased from time to time. The plan is to release two big features a month for the present. This schedule may be increased when conditions warrant.

In its selection of Chicago as the location of its main offices, the Commonwealth Corporation points out that Chicago is the commercial, geographical and transportation center of the Continent. It is also brought out by the company that fifty million people live within one night's ride of Chicago, thus making it easy for the company to get into quick communication with a large number of its share-holding exhibitors. Over forty per cent. of the railroad mileage of the United States terminates in Chicago.

Mr. Spanuth, the organizer and president of the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has had a broad experience in the film industry. His affiliation with the business dates back prior to the formation of the Motion Picture Patents' Company. At that period he was general manager of the Miles Film Exchange of New York City. He later opened and managed Carl Laemmle's New York Film Exchange.

After the formation of the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, an organization then distributing the Universal and Mutual releases, Mr. Spanuth became advertising manager of this concern. He was also assistant to Mr. Miles, the manager of the company.

Mr. Spanuth then organized his own company, and in the spring of 1912 produced the first five-reel picture to feature a legitimate star. This production was "Oliver Twist," starring Nat C. Goodwin as Fagin.

He later called a meeting of the leading independent producers with a view to starting a feature program. This attempt was the first of its kind ever made, and was the forerunner of the modern feature program system.

For the past three years Mr. Spanuth has been manager of Jones, Linick and Schaefer's Central Film Company, a position he resigned in order to organize the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation.

International Cast Goes to Arizona for Locations

A. H. Jacobs, who is producing Gouverneur Morris' story, "When My Ship Comes In" for the International, left this week for the Mexican border in Arizona with a complete staff of assistants and members of the cast to make the pictures called for in the plot of the story in their proper atmosphere.

Hereditary Actress Joins Filmy Profession

Ethel Barrymore's forthcoming Metro-Rolfe production, as yet unnamed, brings to the screen Viola Fortescue, the daughter of the famous comedian, the late George K. Fortescue.

Miss Fortescue was born in Georgia, but her first professional appearance was in Hobart, Tasmania, her first theatrical season being spent in Australasia. She toured the West Indies and South America with Mr. and Mrs. Russ Whytal's company, of which her present director, George D. Baker, was a member, appearing in "Caste," "School for Scandal," and "Lady Windermere's Fan." Later, in this country, she was Princess Yetivo in "Graustark," under the management of Baker and Castle.

Miss Fortescue's most recent New York appearance was as Mlle. Chanteuil in Brieux's "La Femme Seule," which was given a private production in the ballroom of the Plaza Hotel last spring under the translated title, "Woman on Her Own." In the new Ethel Barrymore feature screen play she has the part of the wife of a poor clerk living in a theatrical boarding-house, poverty-stricken but happy.

Ali Singh Escapes Again

Under the title of the "The Spy and the Submarine," Unity will release the thirteen episode of "The Yellow Menace" this week. Those who view this episode will be able to see a great deal about the internal operations of a submarine.

Ali Singh, in the garb of a citizen of Europe, succeeds in boarding the submarine, accompanied by two of his associates. Together they overpower Smithson, and leave him for dead. Smithson, however, revives, smashes the air-lock, escaping himself while the submarine sinks.

Ali Singh is saved through the devotion of his men, who shoot him through a torpedo tube.

May Manning is mixed up in this incident, and the result is intensely thrilling.

Seven Reels from Gaumont Week of December 17

THE interest in "The Vampires" is holding up in a manner to delight American reviewers. The general opinion seems to be echoed in the words of one screen expert: "The professional manner in which 'The Vampires' is being produced, the unusual types presented, and the vein of comedy intermingled with the thrilling kind of melodrama which the serial represents, by Normandin, former vampire and by later vocation an undertaker, places it as one of the best serials on the market." Hence unusual interest attaches to the release of the fifth episode, "The Eyes That Hold," December 21. All the favorites are seen in this chapter.

The first single reel of the week is "Reel Life" No. 33, December 17. Its subjects are "French Sweetmeats," "An Argosy from the North"; "The Fleecy Staple," cotton, and "Design Your Own Gown."

"Tours Around the Wohld" No. 7 is released December 19. It takes spectators to the interior of "Morocco," shows "The Castle of Chantilly" and "The Blue Mediterranean" at the Bay of St. Tropez.

"See America First" No. 67, December 20, shows "Picturesque Virginia." The number is a particularly happy one, since it shows the homes of two presidents, the abode of Thomas Jefferson at Monticello, Charlotte, Va., and the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson at Staunton. There are also pictures of Afton, Va., and the Blue Ridge Mountains. On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic, "Curfew Shall Not Ring," animated by Harry Palmer.

The fourth single-reel of the week is The Mutual Weekly. As it is not made up until the day before it is issued, no statement of its program is possible.

Terwilliger Directs McCoy

"The Lash of Destiny" is the first Art Dramas picture, which stars Gertrude McCoy, and will be released on December 14. George Terwilliger is the director and the story was written by E. A. Bingham.

The situations that the author has employed to maintain interest in his story are said to be strikingly original. A scene that called for the use of a high grade cabaret was obtained by the use of the tea room of the Hotel Ansonia. Scenes that called for the use of moving railroad trains were photographed on the "Twentieth Century Limited" on its trip to Chicago.

The cast that supports Miss McCoy in "The Lash of Destiny" is one of strength and ability, Duncan McRae, who was for a time with the Edison Company, plays the principal male part in the production. Mabel Juline Scott and Helen Greene are also given important parts.

Heavy Thanksgiving Orders

Just as an evidence of the flying start that Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay has obtained, the New York Exchange, under management of W. E. Raynor, calls attention to the fact that on Wednesday, November 29, his office records show that he had supplied 250 theatres in his territory with special holiday programs for Thanksgiving Day.

Ivan Believes in His Biggest Effort

"Enlighten Thy Daughter" is the name of the screen production that the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., has been preparing for the past few months.

Ivan Abramson, the director general, whose effort has been to create something out of the ordinary for this company, says: "I have concentrated all my thought and energy on 'Enlighten Thy Daugher,' and while I will leave the criticism of this photoplay to those who are to judge, I want to go on record as being thoroughly satisfied that it will be my best work since I have become a factor in film business.

"I believe that the names of such players as Frank Sheridan, James Morrison, Kathryn Kaelred, Marie Shotwell, Arthur Donaldson, Violet Horner and others, are sufficient guarantee of an artistic performance."

The story of "Enlighten Thy Daughter" will open a discussion of vital importance to parents and their children entering on a tender age when enlightenment becomes a necessity to their future happiness, and will be released on or about January 1.

Re-booked Paramount Pictures Make Double Profits for Paramount Exhibitors

Reports from all Paramount exchanges recently show that the rebookings of Paramount pictures during the past few months have increased one hundred per cent, and that theatres throughout the country are doing an exceptionally large business with repeated rebookings on some of the best Paramount pictures.

As an example: The Pastime theatre, one of the better class of suburban theatres of New Orleans, had "The Cheat" a few weeks ago, and notwithstanding the fact that this picture was played seven days first run in New Orleans and three days second run and afterwards was the feature in fifteen of the suburban houses, the enterprising manageress, Miss Belle Levy, of the Pastime theatre, notified the home office that they had overflowing houses.

Every Paramount exchange during the past half year has greatly increased their rebookings on early Paramount releases, some of which have been played for longer runs in the same houses in which they originally appeared, and in the larger majority of cases the business was far superior to that originally done.

E. Newman, a Paramount exhibitor at the Rex theatre, Helena, Ark., recently stated in a communication that "we have rebooked Paramount pictures every Saturday for eight consecutive weeks, and our experience has been an increase of business from twenty-five to fifty per cent over the first booking. This is evidence enough that rebooking pays."

Star's Dresses Distinctive

Alice Brady's dresses in the modiste's atelier scene of "A Woman Alone," were supplied by Lucile, the trade name of a distinguished member of the English aristocracy, and will be disclosed to the public view by the World Film Corporation New Year's Day.

Letters from Exhibitors Praise Pathe Plays

THE excellent quality of the newer and bigger Pathe program has met with fitting appreciation from the exhibitor. Many unsolicited letters have found their way into the various Pathe offices.

S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, writes a recent Pathe-Gold Rooster as follows: "Permit me to congratulate you upon your excellent production of Kipling's 'Light That Failed,' which we had the pleasure of playing last week. In staging and acting it is artistic to a degree, and from a box office standpoint has proven to be one of our most successful productions."

The management of the Arris theatre, at Mansfield, Ohio, writes as follows: "I ran 'Prudence the Pirate' yesterday, and I say it is the cleverest picture I have screened in a long time. The comedy is deliciously put over."

Mr. Wardwell, manager of the Kincaide theatre, of Quincy, Mass., says of "Shadows and Sunshine": "It is the only picture I ever ran at the Kincaide theatre that people came three times to see. It created the most favorable comment of any we have ever run. One of our most critical patrons came to see it twice, and said if he had paid five dollars admission he would have been satisfied."

E. B. Johnson, of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, San Francisco, recently contracted with Pathe for Gold Rooster pictures for a year, to be shown weekly at their New Oakland theatre, the largest exclusive motion picture house in the country, with a seating capacity of 3,450.

With the Arrow, Astra, Balboa and Thanhouser companies sparing no expense to make their pictures even better, it is confidently expected by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, that Gold Rooster plays in 1917 will be of even higher quality than those of 1916, which have pleased their many patrons.

Scientists May Expose Mystery of Serial Character

THE nation wide interest in Pathe's wonder serial, "The Shielding Shadow," is further heightened by the announcement that the mystery of Ravengar's strange power is based upon a scientific secret known only to a few of the world's greatest men. This gives the picture added strength.

It will be remembered that "The Shielding Shadow" was written by George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw." Louis J. Gasnier has seen to it that Mr. Seitz's story be interpreted by an all-star cast, composed of Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard, Leon Bary, Madaline Traverse.

Now comes the announcement that the mystery element is not only absorbing but is of scientific interest as well. The managers of Pathe's thirty branches report that progressive exhibitors are playing this fact in contests for the letter which most nearly hits the nail on the head.

The eleventh episode, released December 10, is a strong chapter which still further heightens the mystery of "The Shielding Shadow's identity.

In it Bianca gives her life to save the man she loves.

This episode also contains the spectacular destruction of three of Bianca's henchmen, who, unaware that a blast is about to be set off, have hidden themselves in a quarry.

Another One from Edison

The final scenes of Edison's new five-part feature, "The Master Passion," have been completed, and the subject will be released soon through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. It is the story of a beautiful woman's rise and fall, her struggle between the lure of ambition and mother-love, ending with her regeneration through the latter. Mabel Trunnelle and Robert Conness are featured.

White Eagle's First Polish Play Under Way

The White Eagle Cinematograph company, Chicago, formed to produce famous Polish, Russian and Jewish writings as five reel features, is actively engaged in the making of its first subject, "The Circle of Mystery," taken from the Polish play, "Zaczarowane Kolo." The cast will contain Adamo Didur, basso of the Metropolitan Opera Company, Vladek Zybszko, the famous wrestler and Wanda Zarska, formerly leading lady of the National Theatre, Warsaw.

The company was formed in the belief that pictures based on the literature of these nations would find ready approval from the American public, particularly from those of Russian, Polish and Jewish decent. The company has this field entirely to itself as no other organization with a like purpose has ever been formed.

W. Zadora Szuwalski, who has had a hand in the directing of several Russian pictures produced by the Vitagraph company, is Director General of the company. His wide acquaintance among native players and writers qualifies him for this position as well as his business ability. William Buckley, formerly with D. W. Griffith and the Famous Players company, is production manager.

K. M. Scoville and C. E. Martin, Chicago business men, are the prime factors in the company.

June Caprice Learned to Cook by Force

June Caprice learned to cook by the easiest way. She was spanked into it. She admits it.

"It was just a case of stop, look and cook with me. Father's hand hung over me like a sword."

Miss Caprice expects to take part soon in a Fox play, in which much of the action concerns kitchen technique.

LeVino Is "V" Publicity Manager; Laurence in Home Office

ALBERT SHELBY LE VINO, former secretary and treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation, and associated with the Mutual publicity department, has been appointed manager of the news service department of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E, in association with E. Lanning Masters, advertising manager.

To this position, Mr. LeVino brings well rounded newspaper training on some of the biggest dailies of the country, and a lengthy experience on the New York Times and New York American.

Beginning his film experience as assistant branch manager of the Boston General Film Exchange in 1913, he rapidly won promotion as special assistant to Frank L. Dyer, president of the General Film, and then branched out into publicity for Majestic, Reliance and Mutual.

He is well acquainted with every phase of motion picture work, having written stories, scenarios, publicity and having sold film by the modern methods of distribution.

He is also a well-known contributor to Collier's, Leslie, Harper's and Everybody's.

Gordon Laurence, who for the last eight months was publicity manager of the Chicago Branch of the Greater Vitagraph Company and previously held the same position in the Cleveland office, in accordance with the policy of promotion from the ranks, has just been transferred to the home office advertising department of that company, to begin his duties immediately.

Mr. Laurence's experience at the branches has been along the lines of giving practical co-operation to the exhibitors, by preparing for them the kind of publicity which newspapers want, writing their advertising copy, and making suggestions for their selling helps and theatre programs.

At the Home Office he will work along the same channels, applying the principles of merchandising to motion pictures, which he found so successful on the "firing line."

Chaplin's Next Mutual Comedy Is "The Rink"

CHARLIE CHAPLIN will be seen December 11 in "The Rink." It will mark his eighth production for Mutual release under his $670,000 contract.

In this play Charlie is a waiter in a high class restaurant, and what he doesn't succeed in finding in the way of trouble isn't worth finding. He doesn't like the way the head waiter wears his whiskers, has no idea of the deference due from a newly graduated bus boy to "the head," makes eyes at the girls, and generally speaking, plays the deuce with precedent.

The real action of the piece centers in the "Oskaspeil Rink," where Charlie takes the lady upon whom he has for the moment centered his affections. This damsel, Purviance, of course, is left by her father in the restaurant while he goes to the skating rink for a touch of the "whirly girly" on his own.

Repeats in Ten Days

Among many compliments paid Essanay's "The Prince of Graustark," none stands out more prominently than the fact that the Regent theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., subscribed for a return date on this feature, beginning within ten days after the first showing. This, the manager declares, was done wholly at the request of patrons of the Regent theatre, anxious to see the picture a second time or who wanted their friends to view it.

Repeat orders are common, according to the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service, but repeat orders, specifying so early a date as the above, are considered unusual.

Empire to Build Plant at San Diego

The Empire Feature Film Trust, a new company, will erect a producing plant near Grossmont, only a short distance from San Diego, California, on a location at present known as Murray Hill. The contemplated expenditure approximates $100,000.

Interested in the new enterprise are S. H. Woodruff, architect and builder of Los Angeles and New York; Tracy E. Shoults of Los Angeles, Hugh McKean of Los Angeles and Philadelphia, and William B. Gross of this city. Henry Kabierske, who produced the pageant incident to the ground-breaking for the San Diego exposition, and who has been connected with such features as "The Daughter of the Don," "The Argonauts" and "The Boer War," is to be director-general. Among the plays which will be produced by the company will be "The Conquest," an Indian story; "The Silver Arrow" and "The Ten Commandments." Mr. Kabierske states that about 250 people will be employed in the general force, with large numbers of extras as occasion requires.

Mr. Woodruff, in discussing the coming of the company to the San Diego section, declared that no place that compared with it had been found in the course of four months' investigation throughout Southern California. "Within three hours' ride," he declared, "we can be in a dozen kinds of scenery. In the winter we can have snow in the Cuyamaca mountains, and right at hand we have the desert section to the east. There are fifteen lakes, including the Salton sea, within our reach. A short run by auto brings us to the ocean, San Diego bay, the shipping, or over the line into Mexico, with its race course, bull ring, casino and other features. Imperial valley, with cotton picking scenes, is easily reached."

Work upon the construction of the plant is to commence as soon as possible. The architect's drawings have already been completed, and show novel features in the way of construction, some of the buildings being types of Roman, Grecian, Gothic, Byzantine, Flemish and Moorish architecture. A stone wall is to surround the property, with an old English lodge and portal as entrance-way. A large club-house is to be built, besides the administration building, studio, shops, hospital, fire department and other necessary structures.

Wescott Enters Open Market in Northwest

The Wescott Film Corporation with headquarters in Minneapolis, Minn., has been chartered for $250,000. It is backed by men well known in the financial world of the Northwest, who have placed E. A. Wescott in charge as Secretary and General Manager.

Mr. Wescott was for two years local manager of the Fox Film Corporation and is thoroughly acquainted with the film situation in that part of the country. The new organization was formed to handle any pictures placed on the open market and also arranged to run its own theatres if necessary.

Tangible Results in Efforts to Entertain Children

THE first sweeping attempt to establish children's matinees as a regular thing in every town in the State, large or small, has been started in Nebraska by F. A. Van Husan, of Omaha, who has secured the rights on "Snow White," and has started correspondence with a woman's organization of some kind in every city and town in the State.

The picture will be shown under the auspices of the organization, the members of which will select the theatre and make arrangements with the exhibitor. Announcements will be made through the schools and through the newspapers.

Following "Snow White" will be other pictures, one a week if possible. These will be accompanied by one-half reel of scenic and travel. Mr. Van Husan says he has heard of many exhibitors demanding children's pictures. He expects his plan to be welcomed throughout the State. Several answers to his first letters show the plan will be accepted with delight by the women's, mothers' and teachers' clubs who will have the boosting of it.

A new idea in children's matinees has been developed by the motion picture exhibitors of Des Moines, Iowa. The Des Moines Mothers' Club protested that the pictures shown in the regular shows were not desirable for their children. A plan was then agreed upon whereby at least one exhibitor each Saturday morning shows special children's pictures. These are first viewed by a Censorship Board from the teachers and club members.

Often when the subject is of timely interest, a teacher lectures upon it during the show. Frequently the teachers request the children to write brief reviews of the pictures for next Monday's classes.

The location of the special matinee theatres, with the subjects, are announced in the school rooms every Friday. The regular admission is charged. GUY LEAVITT.

Children's Matinee Popular in Utah

THE Children's Matinee proposition is gathering force in Utah and contiguous states and the various exhibitors are experiencing considerable grief in getting the right stuff at the right prices and at the right time. Among the theatres running Children's Matinees are the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake, the Alhambra, Ogden and the Columbia, Provo.

The Salt Lake exchanges are receiving many queries from outside points and the Home and School League behind the movement is working on the scheme of providing a circuit of houses. But one performance is given, usually on Saturday morning and the public schools are working to make Better Pictures a success.

While there is no money in these matinees at five cents, teachers free, the various managements consider them good policy both from an advertising standpoint and the viewpoint that not all subjects are devoted to the eternal sex question.

It is stated that business on a Saturday afternoon and night following the Children's Matinees have taken a spurt, the theory being that the children talk about them at the dinner table and Father and Mother conclude they will go to the show.

Subconsciously they select the theatre they have been hearing so much about in the family circle.

Violet Reed with Petrova

One of the latest additions to the Metro-Popular Plays and Players forces is Violet Reed.

She went on the stage at the age of 18. appearing in "Coming Through the Rye." Next she was seen with Eddie Foy in Mr. Hamlet of Broadway."

First in pictures she was seen with Edmund Breese in "The Spell of the Yukon," in the part of Lou. Since then she has been in productions in which Mme. Petrova is the star. In "The Orchid Lady," she is Mrs. Harding, a society woman, in "The Black Butterfly," Lady Constance, an Englishwoman, and in two other Petrova plays she has prominent parts.

Mothers Select Pictures for Iowa Children

Defense of the juvenile motion picture programs planned by various Mother's Unions throughout Iowa was made before the Iowa mother's congress and Parent Teacher's association's annual meeting in Iowa City, recently, by Mrs. Clark E. Daniels of Des Moines. Mrs. Daniels is an important factor in this organization and her talk was widely discussed.

"The movie is here to stay and our children are attending," said Mrs. Daniels. "The pictures prepared to please a mixed audience contain little for children. Our plans contemplate an entire program suited to young people. They must have wholesome entertainment. If carefully selected, motion pictures can exert a tremendously important influence over their lives.

"It is not our purpose to use pictures entirely educational, but to afford good, clean fun, comedy, cartoons and some feature films."

Texas Salesman Promoted by V-L-S-E to New Orleans Managership

J. A. Steinson, who for the past eight months, has covered parts of Texas and Oklahoma for the Dallas Vitagraph-V-L-S-E office, has lately been made resident manager of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E Exchange in New Orleans. Mr. Steinson owes his promotion to the recommendation of J. B. Dugger, manager of the V-L-S-E Exchange in Dallas. Mr. Steinson will have ample opportunities to prove his capabilities as a salesman and as a manager.

Famous Star's Future Now Assured to Screenland

NANCE O'NEIL will be featured in a series of plays to be produced by the Frank Powell producing Corporation of New York.

Miss O'Neil has appeared in "The Private Secretary," with McKee Rankin, and with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "A Bachelor's Baby."

The career of Nance O'Neil has been extraordinarily varied and successful and it is doubtful whether any woman of the speaking stage has a wider range of admirers.

Nance was graduated from Snell Seminary in California, making her professional debut as a nun in "Sarah," under McKee Rankin's management. Her first New York appearance was in "The Long Strike" at Weber and Fields, after which she became leading woman at the Murray Hill theatre.

Following her New York successes Miss O'Neil went to England where she appeared in "Camille," "Elizabeth," and other plays. After her return to this country Miss O'Neil appeared in Belasco's "The Lily," as well as in "Leah the Forsaken."

The engagement of Miss O'Neil is a development of the contract recently concluded by Mr. Freuler with the Frank Powell Producing Corporation, which is directed to securing for the Mutual Film Corporation adequate representation in the East.

Discussing her future activity with the Mutual, Miss O'Neil said:

"I am ambitious to have a share in the making of motion picture plays that shall be distinctively picture plays. In associating myself wtih the Mutual and Mr. Powell's studios I feel convinced that this wish will be gratified. My faith in the future of the motion picture play is profound. I am intensely interested in the work."

Still Popular in Her Home District

"Sunshine Mary" Anderson the little Vitagraph star, has won a popularity contest in the Bedford section of Brooklyn where she lived with her people until the Vitagraph officials sent her to the Hollywood studio as leading lady.

The contest was conducted by the Eureka theatre, at Avenue D and Bedford avenue, and her reward was a cover photograph on their program for four weeks.

"Sunshine Mary," who stars with William Duncan in the recent Blue Ribbon Release, "The Last Man," when she learned of the tribute paid her, exclaimed that it was wonderful to know she was remembered and loved by the folks back home.

June to Winter in South

June Caprice's fifth photoplay for William Fox is now well under way. Next week the company will leave for a well-known winter resort in Florida to snap some beautiful exterior scenes.

Chief in Miss Caprice's supporting cast are Frank Morgan, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Betty Prendergast, Grace Stevens and Tom Brooke.

Stanton Tosses Away Thousands

No greater care in screening a production has ever been exercised than was taken by Director Richard Stanton, who recently completed a subject for William Fox featuring Gretchen Hartman and Alan Hale.

Although the drama will be 5,000 feet in length, Director Stanton took almost 50,000 feet of film which is now in the cutting room.

Gladys Brockwell's next feature will be in charge of Mr. Stanton.

Selig Players Go to a Mississippi Plantation

Director Al Green has escorted a special company of Selig Players to Mississippi, where real plantation scenes called for in the forthcoming Selig-Red Seal play, "The Princess of Patches," will be filmed. Vivian Reed will enact the leading role. Others in the Selig company that went to Mississippi include Frank Weed, Roy Southerland, Clara Lambert, Charles Le Moyne, Maude Baker and others. Following the filming of the scenes in the Southland, the company will return to Chicago where interiors will be filmed. "The Princess of Patches" is a filmitazation of the play of the same name.

"Beatrice Fairfax" Sold for Canada

The International has sold the Canadian rights to the popular serial "Beatrice Fairfax," starring Harry Fox and Grace Darling, to the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., of Toronto. The Famous Players selected "Beatrice Fairfax" from a long list of serials that were offered, after having seen the various episodes. It is generally agreed that "Beatrice Fairfax" is the best serial on the market.

Arrangements have been made by the International to send Grace Darling, who assumes the role of Beatrice Fairfax, on a tour of the principal cities of Canada to appear in person at the first offering of "Beatrice Fairfax." She will leave about December 5, remaining a week in Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal. Because of the fact that Miss Darling began her career as a newspaper writer, she will be a guest of the newspapers of the Canadian cities during her stay in them.

Julius Schwall Goes to Buffalo for George Kleine

George Kleine has opened a new branch office in Buffalo, for the purpose of handling the feature films of the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service in this territory. Upper New York was formerly covered by the Kleine exchange in New York City, but increasing business in this section made the new branch a necessity.

The Buffalo branch located in the Palace Theatre Building, will be under the general supervision of W. E. Raynor, manager of the New York Exchange, and in the immediate charge of Julius Schwall, who has been in the New York office for the past three years.

Snaps of Important Scenes in "Grant the Police Reporter," Kalem Series

Selig Productions Up to First of Year

WILLIAM N. SELIG has announced the Selig productions to be released in General Film Service up to the first of the new year.

On Monday, December 18, "The Five-Franc Piece" will be released in regular service. This production features charming Edith Johnson in a winsome role. There is plenty of excitement, for the plot has to do with the attempted theft of an important military secret. Miss Johnson is supported by an exceptional cast of players.

On Saturday, December 23, the Selig Company will release "The Man He Might Have Been" in General Film Service. Robyn Adair is in the cast.

"The Golden Thought," by J. A. Lacy, is the Selig feature, released in regular service of General Film Company on Monday, December 25. Included in the cast is Tom Mix, Eugenie Besserer and the child actress, Baby Lillian Wade.

"The Right-Hand Path" is the title of the Selig drama, released on Saturday, December 30. It teems with sensational climaxes and with strong heart interest.

The Selig-Tribune is released every Monday and Thursday.

December Thrills Relieved by Laughs on General

WORKING well ahead on its release schedule, Kalem is ready to announce the issues through General Film well into the latter part of December.

"The Midnight Express," issued on December 16 and "The Vanishing Box-car," released the following Saturday, are two of the coming "Hazards." Some unusual night photography is a feature of the first-mentioned release, in which the thrill finds Helen Gibson, in pursuit of a train, running her motor-cycle on to a flat car and leaping through the air to the rail of the speeding car. "The Vanishing Box-car" is an unusual mystery story, hinging on the disappearance in broad daylight of a box-car shipment of machinery while the train bearing it was passing between two stations.

New York's Annual Police Parade forms the center of the action of "The Menace," the 'Grant, Police Reporter" episode, scheduled for release December 15. One of the feats shows George Larkin leaping from the top floor window of an office building to a rope hanging over the cornice and climbing to the roof. A thirty-foot leap through the air from a deck house on one roof across an areaway is calculated to meet the demands of picture followers.

The final week of December will bring "The Girl from 'Frisco" series to its twenty-first episode.

"The Iceman and the Artist" is a single-reel laugh-maker, scheduled for December 12. Ham and Bud, in this comedy, revive the old question of, "How would you like to be the iceman?"

Up State Bookings Bigger

The Unity Service Corporation, under the direction of Messrs. Merrill and Harwell, has opened a branch in Syracuse, N. Y., to take care of the bookings on "The Yellow Menace" and other features handled by the company.

During the past few weeks the bookings on "The Yellow Menace" have increased so rapidly that the exchange found itself unable to handle the business without branch offices throughout the State. At the present time the films are being distributed out of Rochester for the western part of the State, and the establishment of the new office in Syracuse will give added facilities for distribution throughout the central and eastern part of New York.

Footballer Can't Forget

Fred R. Stanton, who plays in the Metro serial, "The Great Secret," was one of the officials at the Army-Navy game at the Polo Grounds. He was a star on the famous Cornell football team of '98 and '99 and often serves as an official in the big Eastern games.

Macklin Moves to Legit

Albert Macklin, long identified with Gaumont, after finishing work in a Fox feature, has returned to the stage to play a cabaret dancer in "Give and Take," produced in Syracuse, November 23.

"Libertine" Makes Record

F. E. Backer, general manager of the Mammoth Film Corporation, has received a letter from David B. Picker of the Burland Theatre, New York. Mr. Picker stated that "The Libertine," which he is playing for a week at the Burland, has broken all house records from the day it was opened, and that every day has been better than the previous. He is so well pleased with results on "The Libertine" that he contemplates playing a return three days with it.

Mr. Backer states that "The Libertine" is booking very strong and he is very much pleased with the way the exhibitors are doing with this production. He has done everything possible to give "The Libertine" the proper publicity and over six hundred twenty-four sheet stands have been posted throughout greater New York and Brooklyn. Not only this, but the daily newspapers have been carrying advertisements on this production and the theatrical columns in the daily papers have given "The Libertine" much publicity as well.

Tropics Transplanted

Under the direction of Otis Turner, Balboa Beach, California, has been transformed into a jungle wilderness for some scenes in "The Island of Desire," starring George Walsh, which William Fox will release on December 18.

With the aid of hundreds of palm trees, two or three carloads of monkeys, scores of parrots and parrakeets, and tons of foliage and underbrush, Balboa Beach has been "made up" to represent a South Sea Island.

Reversion to Type!

Theda Bara's portrayal of Elsie Drummond in "The Vixen," which William Fox announces for December 4, is her first "vampire" role in many months. The last of this type came in "The Eternal Sapho," released in May.

During the intervening time the peerless screen artiste has starred in "East Lynne," "Under Two Flags," "Her Double Life," and "Romeo and Juliet."

Shift in Broadway Bill Brings Lecture and Song

"THE People vs. John Doe" will begin an engagement at the Broadway theatre next Sunday night, Dec. 10. It was first intended to present a photoplay version of Jules Verne's "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," but the approval given the film against capital punishment at a private showing last Sunday morning changed the mind of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Company. He will, of course, show the great submarine picture later.

The engagement is under the auspices of the Humanitarian Cult and the founder, Misha Applebaum, will lecture at each performance. He will receive $2,000 a week, but this money will not go to Mr. Applebaum personally. It will be turned over to the advisory committee of the Humanitarian Cult at its founder's expressed insistence. He made it as the only condition of his appearance.

A percentage of the receipts will also be given to the Anti-Capital Punishment branch of the Humanitarian Cult for its propaganda.

The film itself is by Lois Weber, and is the story of a man convicted of murder and sentenced to the electric chair. He is saved at last by a woman lawyer.

The Universal has prepared a special musical program for the performance. This will include a concert by a splendid symphonic orchestra and Beatrice Bowman, prima donna of the Montreal Grand Opera Company.

Middle Westerners Crying for Laughs, Says Leavitt

MIDDLE West motion picture fans have a new favorite kind of picture. Maybe it isn't just exactly new, but as they grow more and more tired of the sensational "illegitimate child" stuff, and the vampire productions, the fans greet with more and more enthusiasm this new kind of picture.

It is such as "The Man Who Stood Still," featuring Lew Fields. As a class, it may be called "light drama." It can happen out of doors or in the parlor of a social queen in the heart of New York. It can be on the battle front or in a quiet countryside church. It can be 100 years ago, or yesterday. The only feature needed besides the constantly necessary interesting story, is that this story be varied with tears and smiles. "Make me cry, then make me laugh," pleads the motion picture fan of the Middle West.

This quality of a play has been absolutely necessary upon the "legitimate" stage for so many years that it is strange it has not been injected into the screen drama before. By the time a man, woman or child sits through five reels of nerve racking, tense, eye-straining drama, tears and tragedy, he or she leaves the theatre worn almost to a point of exhaustion. Just a little laugh now and then—and lo! see the difference. The laugh is a change, a rest. Do you remember Uncle Tom's Cabin? Of course it made you cry, but think harder. Don't you remember laughing? When little Eva tried to teach ignorant old Uncle Tom.

The intense, tense, tragic stuff is all right, says the motion picture fan of the Middle West, and the pictures need it. But put in a laugh, now and then, Mr. Producer, put in a laugh.

Such a "light drama" in five reels—six reels is tiring, and they don't think they get their money's worth in four reels when they pay the higher price of admission to see a feature—is just exactly what every exhibitor in the Middle West would be glad to sign for if they get a chance. Write and ask 'em.

GUY LEAVITT.

Baseball Posters in Demand

That Selig's film record of the 1916 World's Championship Baseball Games is "delivering the goods" in the territories served by George Kleine's twenty-three distributing offices in the United States and Canada, is made evident by the fact that before the feature had been in service three weeks it was necessary to print a second edition of posters.

Five-Reel Features Go Strong in Canada

A great change is coming over the film market in Canada. Over a year ago, the Western Provinces began to show a decided preference for five-reel features. This has now become the accepted program for the West, but until lately the regular program has been strongly entrenched in the Eastern Provinces.

However, the last six months have been a steady swinging of the current in the opposite direction and today Ontario Exhibitors are showing a decided tendency to purchase big features.

In Montreal this has been carried to an almost abnormal degree as the theatre men are competing one with the other to secure the biggest productions possible, with the result that many of them are sacrificing their profit to the exchanges who are booking these features. Program companies in existence in Canada are now completing their arrangements to book their product in a somewhat different manner to the past and the old time theatre exchanges are now purchasing comedies, serials and weeklies, so that they may meet every requirement of the exhibitor.

Davidson Left Wall Street for the Screen

William B. Davidson has been engaged as Ethel Barrymore's leading support, in her forthcoming Metro-Rolfe play, now in production. He will play opposite Miss Barrymore, and will be shown both as a New York clubman and as a mining prospector in the Alaska gold fields, his part being that of the Stranger. The fates of the Stranger and Nightingale Nan, the part played by Miss Barrymore, are mysteriously intermingled in this dramatic play of surprising contrasts.

Rothacker Entertains

Watterson R. Rothacker, President of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, entertained the "Forty Club," of which he is a member, at a harvest dinner held in the studio of the company, Tuesday evening, November 28th. The membership of this famous organiation is composed of such literary men as George Ade, Wilbur Nesbit and S. E. Kiser, and also includes many of the theatrical profession such as Otis Skinner and Wilton Lackaye. During the course of the banquet motion pictures were taken, which will be held by the club as a matter of historical record.

New Fashioned Leaders for Play Appealing to Young

SUBTITLES that continue instead of interrupting the story have been the aim of Henry W. Savage in his film version of "Robinson Crusoe." The subtitles appear simultaneously with the scene giving the story a continuity it cannot obtain if at intervals the pictures are absent from the screen and a blank space with a line of printed matter takes their place.

"Whether we should have more subtitles or no subtitles is a matter to which every photodramatist of the day has given serious thought," said Mr. Savage, "for now that the photoplay is nearing perfection, those who take the art seriously are beginning to pay attention to every detail in its construction. Without subtitles the story is not always clear and with them it is often interrupted. The striking of the happy medium is the big factor.

"In 'Robinson Crusoe' I think the subtitle arrangement will be particularly pleasing. We have given the matter serious attention before deciding upon the method we now use. I am anxious to know how it will be received by the public for, after all, it is not our own idea of art, but the public taste that we must aim to please the most."

The fact that Robinson Crusoe has been brought to life on the screen is receiving favorable comment upon all sides. Not only from every state in the union, but from many of the cities of Canada, inquiries are coming into the New York office. The assurance that it is a film that will appeal equally to old and young have given many exhibitors the idea of making a special Christmas week feature.

Mr. Savage is justly proud of the cast. In selecting it he gave as much care and attention to each character as he would have in selecting a company for a Broadway production.

"The work of the members of a photoplay company lasts during the life of the picture," he said, "while in a stage production improvement may be made in each performance. It is necessary, therefore, that a film director be sure that he has entrusted the roles to competent people."

Robert Paton Gibbs, who has many successes to his credit, was chosen by Mr. Savage and Director George Marion to bring the best known hero in fiction before the public. Mr. Marion, himself, is seen as Friday; Karl Stall as the Moorish chief; Andrew Higginson as Captain of "The Lark"; Anton Ascher, as the cook and Ami Dennis as Zuleika. Charles D. Murray, Paul Pollock, Melville Anderson, O. Stadt Stadt, Joseph Carbon, E. J. Colvin, Warren Hughes and D. H. Turnes are only a few of the other important members.

Carl Gregory was assisted in photographing the scenes by Harold L. Miller.

Wilson Is with Notable, Salt Lake

Following the announcement of the Cash Prize and Cup contest instituted by Paramount Pictures Corporation and to be given to the exchange with the best records, Mell S. Wilson, formerly with the General and the Mutual, in Salt Lake, joined the staff of the Notable Feature Film Company. Mr. Wilson is now traveling in the interests of this firm in Utah, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming.

David Levett, who was connected with the Notable Feature Film Company, Salt Lake, since its inception, in the capacity of road man, has resigned to accept the position of sales manager for the Deseret Film Company, which is handling state's right subjects.

Election night was a record breaker all over the Salt Lake section, owing to the fact that the majority of the exhibitors made arrangements to announce the returns during the show. One house operated by Kofford and Ryan in Brigham City, Utah, kept open until 3 o'clock in the morning.

THE EASTERN STUDIOS

MARY PICKFORD and her company have just returned from Marblehead, Mass., to the Fort Lee studios, where work is rapidly progressing on the forthcoming Artcraft release, "The Pride of the Clan." A few exteriors will be taken, probably in Florida after which the work of the company will be confined to the balance of the interiors which will complete the work of the players.

Warren Cook, who portrays the role of the Earl of Dunstable in Mary Pickford's new Artcraft subject, "The Pride of the Clan," has established himself as an amateur photographer par excellence. Mr. Cook has just secured several of the most artistic photographs yet displayed of Miss Pickford, many of which are being used by the Artcraft publicity department. One of the most remarkable photographs secured by Mr. Cook, was taken directly against the light and presents attractive silhouettes of Miss Pickford and Director Tourneur.

Everyone at the Pickford studios in Fort Lee has turned Scotch, since the production of "The Pride of the Clan" was begun over a month ago. Even the studio parrot ejaculates "It's a brach moon licht nicht t'nicht," for which he is rewarded with a cracker by the Scotch doorman.

The new pet of the Mary Pickford studios is "Wag," a duck, which appears in Miss Pickford's new Artcraft production, "The Pride of the Clan." The duck made such a hit with "Little Mary" and the folks at the studio that it was immediately adopted as a mascot. Just when he was wanted for a scene in "The Pride of the Clan" the other day he was nowhere to be found. Work on the scene had to be discontinued and after searching the roads one of the prop boys returned with "Wag" and reported that he was found at the gate of another studio in Fort Lee. Perhaps "Wag" had an idea of breaking his contract without the usual two week's notice.

When W. Christy Cabanné came to New York from Los Angeles as a Metro director and began on the big Metro serial in which Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are starring, he insisted that his own cameraman accompany him. So William Fildew, intrepid and super-photographer to his Majesty the Screen, came out of the Golden West with his heart filled with the love of the game and loyalty to his old master.

For three years "Bill" Fildew has been responding to Cabanne's command of "Camera!" Nothing has ever "stumped" him; no condition, circumstance or surprise has ever found him unequal to the solution. He has calmly turned the crank of his black machine in the face of danger and almost certain disaster. And he has come out of it all unscathed and with a reputation of "standing his ground under fire."

"Bill" was an old time photographer long before he heard the call of the motion picture camera. Six years ago he found a place as an assistant cameraman with Biograph. Then he did a turn in color photography with the "Kinemacolor" company. Next he served with the Majestic filming one reelers. His next jump was to the Mutual, where Griffith and Cabanné soon recognized his ability and took him in.

During his stay with Mutual, Fildew did practically all of the camera work for Director Cabanné. Among the big features that are to his credit are "The Lost House," "Enoch Arden," "The Lamb," "The Martyrs of the Alamo," "Reggie Mixes In," and "Diana of the Follies."

Metro Studio Notes

In the first scene of the new Metro-Rolfe play, in which Ethel Barrymore is starring, Director George D. Baker has reproduced a famous old Alaskan dance hall. Both Director Baker and his assistant, Charles Hunt, have been in the far north and are making good use of their knowledge in arranging the sets for the scenes that are laid in Nome. Years ago Baker made a "barnstorming" tour through northern Canada with "In Old Kentucky" and before returning to the States visited the gold field districts.

Viola Dana, Metro star, has begun work in the Rolfe studios on a new feature which will probably be called "The Mortal Sin." The play was written by John H. Collins, who will direct Miss Dana in the production. The story deals with the sacrifice the young wife of a struggling writer makes to save his life and to have his novel published. The play is filled with tense dramatic scenes and will furnish an unusual vehicle for this talented and popular young actress. Robert Walker will play the part of the writer, George Anderson, and Augustus Phillips will be cast as Emmet Standish, the publisher.

Ned Finley is one of the newest additions to the long list of Metro players. He has been cast as an Alaskan miner in the big Ethel Barrymore feature that is being produced under the direction of George D. Baker.

Mr. Finley has a long record with Vitagraph, having written, produced and starred in a number of plays with that company. He will be especially remembered for the series of "O'Garry of the Royal Mounted Police" pictures which he produced for the Vitagraph.

Mr. Finley left Vitagraph several months ago and toured the country in "Blackmail" the Richard Harding Davis act, playing the star part of Dick Fallon.

Having finished two of their Metro-Drew comedies in one week and thereby hanging up a new record, the Sidney Drews are taking a vacation for a few days. They will start work on a new farce Monday.

Property men at the Rolfe studios are busy nowadays arranging for the old fashioned minstrel show and reception which they will have at the Palm Garden, December 18th. "Jack" Sweeney, who has charge of the arrangements, promises many new features, among them being a "Colonial minstrel," with only the four end men in black face.

The first part of the evening will be given over to the reception grand march and dance. Following that will come the minstrel. Invitations have been sent to the employees in all the studios in New York and everyone connected with the profession is invited to attend.

Robinson Crusoe and Friday Holding Off the Pirates. Henry W. Savage Production Released Through Warner Brothers

Here is a "scenarioized" Sir Walter Raleigh incident: Scene: The Popular Plays and Players studio. It is a cold morning and the heating apparatus is temporarily out of commission. Mme. Petrova, Metro star, appears. General Manager Robert North urges her to postpone work on her play till the heat is turned on. She says she is there to work and will start in. She wears a ball-room gown and shivers. Instantly the property men take off their coats and they, too, shiver. Petrova observes they are cold, and asks why they have their coats off.

"They have taken them off in deference to the star," explains Mr. North. "It will have to be a mighty cold day when you won't find gallantry in a motion picture studio."

"Tell them to put their coats on," demands the pleased Petrova. "And here—give them this (a $10 bill) and tell them to buy coffee."

They spent the money, but the "scenarioized" version doesn't say whether it was for coffee or what.

Ethel Corcoran Changes Screen Name to Ethel Dayton

Pretty Ethel Corcoran, who is playing opposite Lionel Barrymore in the forthcoming Metro-Columbia feature, "The End of the Tour," has changed her name. No, she hasn't married, nor is she ashamed of the fine old name of Corcoran, but as she is a motion picture actress, she finds that it takes too long for people to read the name on the screen. So now she is Ethel Dayton.

George Le Guere paid a visit to Coney Island recently. He had an encounter with a tough individual, was knocked unconscious, and tossed into a passing taxi.

He sprawled across the limp form of a sporty-looking gentleman, and his head fell on the shoulder of a flashily-dressed woman who was herself in a deep slumber.

When the taxi driver reached Madison Square, Manhattan, he woke his three passengers. The three befuddled persons looked at each other in astonishment. The sporty chap, it turned out, had hired the taxi, but no woman had been with him at the time. Later, in some mysterious manner, the woman had materialized in the other corner.

"How did she get there; and how did you come between us?" gasped the first occupant, turning upon Le Guere. George felt his head. "I don't know," he said wearily. "I guess the fare for all of us is on me. How much is it?"

"$69.00," said the driver. George paid, but his head ached worse than ever.

Yes, it's too good a story to be true. It's simply one of the bits of comedy flashing through the McClure series, "Seven Deadly Sins," of which George Le Guere is one of the clever stars.

Sally Crute (Metro)

While motoring through Central Park on her way to her studios in Fort Lee, where her forthcoming Artcraft production, "The Pride of the Clan" is being staged, Mary Pickford heard a sound as of many bombs detonating in New York's explosive subway. Turning a curve her car came upon a blazing taxi and immediately the popular girl of the screen became a being of activity. Leaping from her car she called for her chauffeur and the "Pyrene" (free adv.) extinguisher and directed the rescue work. It was not long before the flame was extinguished and now Miss Pickford has another ardent admirer in the person of the driver of what again bids fair to serve as a public conveyance.

Warren Cook, who portrays the role of the Earl of Dunstable in Mary Pickford's forthcoming Artcraft production. "The Pride of the Clan." started his career as an actor some twenty years ago in "1492." For the benefit of the statistician who will higgle over the above statement we might and that "1492" was the name of the play in which Mr. Cook made his debut as an actor—not the year.

Mary Pickford has just received another valuable acquisition to her library, namely, "Edison, His Life and Inventions" in two volumes, presented to her by the great inventor and containing his personal autograph.

IN AND OUT OF THE WEST COAST STUDIOS

By J. C. Jessen

Special to Motion Picture News.

Los Angeles, Nov. 30.

A FAREWELL dinner was tendered P. G. Lynch, who for the past two or more years has served as general manager of the American studios at Santa Barbara, one evening during the past week at the Arlington Hotel in that city.

Mr. Lynch completed his work there Saturday. Practically all the heads of the departments, directors, stars and men of the studio attended this event. James Kirkwood acted as toastmaster, and later in the evening presented Mr. Lynch with a handsome thin model gold watch as a token of their appreciation. There were short talks by the heads of all departments of the studio who were present, and each bespoke the very kindly relations which had existed between the general manager and his lieutenants.

Those present were: Edward M. Langley, James Kirkwood, Clifford Howard, Al Heimrl, George Wight, Edward Sloman, W. G. Dowlan, Kenneth B. Clarke, William Russell, C. William Kolb, Jack Halloway, Max Dill, Al Santell, Franklin Ritchie, George Periolat, Ashton Dearholt, Harvey Clark, Harry Von Meter, William Carroll, Charles Newton, Clarence Burton, Reaves Eason, Sid Algiers, Paul Drinkwitz, Art Howard, W. A. Hall, Leslie Alderson, William Vaughn, Ira Morgan, Wm. Gilmore Beymer, John Seitz, Carl Widen, Thomas Middleton, John Brown, Joseph Carr.

Al E. Christie is shortly to release the first of a new style of pictures from his plant, which are referred to as a parlor comedy with slapstick. The title of the first release is "The Sea Nymphs," which has a cast of Neal Burns, Betty Compson as leads, and Eddie Barry and George French in unusual characterizations, supported by the entire Christie stock company. Neal Burns and Miss Compson both play what might be termed double roles, first appearing as husband and wife past middle age, and then coming forth from the fountain of youth as juvenile and ingenue. Neal as the husbands falls asleep after noticing a very realistic picture of girls in uncensored one-piece bathing suits in his evening paper. The photoplay takes him to the beach, where he finds the fountain of youth and enjoys life with the sea nymphs. Wifey follows him and is likewise changed after bathing in the mysterious waters. There are flirtations, chases and thrills which end the single-reeler with fast comedy.

Director Al Christie is this week filming "Her Friend the Chauffeur" with Neal Burns, Betty Compson, Harry Hamm and George French.

Advice from Charles Christie of the Christie Film Company now in the east, is to the effect that the Celebrated Players Film Company of Chicago, is to handle Christie comedies in Illinois and Indianapolis, and that rights have been sold for the Philippines, Hawaiian Islands, Russia and Australia.

Fox Comedies

The first Lehrmann Fox release which is now nearing completion, will in all probability be titled "The Society Buzzard." Billie Ritchie, Henry Lehrmann and Dot Farley are the principals. One of the thrills for this is the work of Lehrmann as a day laborer on a ladder hanging to the top of the twenty-two story building. Los Angeles does not have any skyscrapers this high, so it was necessary for the Lehrmann Company to build several additional stories to one of the highest Los Angeles buildings.

California politicians have come to the conclusion that the Los Angeles motion picture colony was a very important faction in the re-election of Wilson. Inquiries among many of the people of the screen since the election brought out the fact that the players supported Wilson because of the action of the United States Supreme Court, of which Hughes was a member, in upholding the Kansas and Ohio censorship boards. Hughes was one of the judges who rendered the verdict against the Mutual Film Corporation, when appeal was made from the censors of these two states by that corporation. It is believed that more than seventy-five per cent of the players, male and female, voted for Wilson.

Enid Bennett, who was brought to the Coast by Thomas H. Ince to appear in one picture, has been re-engaged for one or more additional subjects. This is made possible by the extension of her leave of absence from the legitimate stage. Her first picture has been completed, and Mr. Ince was so pleased with her work, that he made arrangements for her to play in another subject. Miss Bennett's debut on the screen gives her the role of a blind girl, and the final scenes for it required the work of more than fifty children, who took part in fairy cave scenes made under the direction of Charles Miller. Jack Gilbert works opposite Miss Bennett, supported by Charles K. French, Fannie Midgely, Alfred Vosburg and other well-known Ince players.

Thirty interior settings will be required for the light comedy drama now being produced by Director Reginald Barker, which has Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray as co-stars. This is the greatest number of interior settings ever used in a single Ince production. Margaret Thompson is the principal member of the supporting cast, and Monte M. Katterjohn is the author of the story and scenario.

Margie Wilson and Bill Desmond, together with about 289 other players and supernumeraries are wearing the quaint garb of New Englanders of a half century back, at the Thomas H. Ince studios for a subject being filmed by Walter Edwards. It is a dramatic tale of the Cape Cod country, and among the supporting players are Bob McKim and Agnes Herring.

Eagleshirt Returns

Thomas H. Ince had a distinguished visitor this week in the person of William Eagleshirt, an Indian actor, who was Ince's first leading man, when he came to California six years ago to assume the directorship of the New York Motion Picture Corporation's studio. The aged Indian has been at the reservation near Los Angeles for the past two years, and became homesick to see his former friends at the studio. He arrived there unannounced, but old-timers of the place soon learned he was there and gave him a hearty reception. Thomas H. Ince was the first person at the studio the old Indian recognized.

For three weeks practically the entire force of the technical staff of the Ince studio has been working on a mammoth hacienda set which is now being used by Wm. S. Hart. The entire exterior is made of rough hewn timber, and the interiors are finished with pieces prepared by the woodcarvers of the Ince studio. It was designed by Art Director Robert Brunton.

One of the canyons of the eighteen thousand acre ranch which constitutes Inceville was the scene of a frightful forest fire this week, and many of the players and one or two directors, including Thomas H. Ince, fought the flames. The fire traveled so rapidly that no attempt was made to secure pictures until the men had whipped it into control.

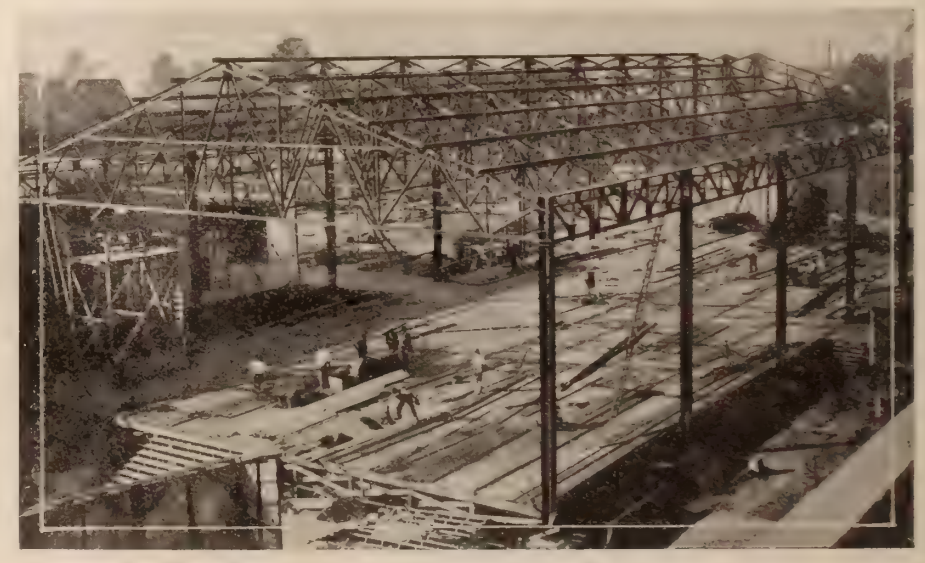
Raymond B. West, besides directing a Kay-Bee Triangle production, starring Bessie Barriscale, he is supervising the photography. The drama, according to the scenario, requires some difficult effects, and West is finding that his apprenticeship and careful study of the camera and its use, is greatly aiding him. Howard Hickman, Charles Gunn and others are working in the support of Miss Barriscale.

"Intolerance" Makes Good

Figures given out by W. E. Keefe, special representative of D. W. Griffith, this week, tell of the new records "Intolerance" has set at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angles. The greatest day for "The Birth of a Nation" at this house was 2.200, 932 of this being for the matinee, and 1,281 for the evening. Saturday, November 4th, "Intolerance" figures were 2574, 1077 being for the matinee and 1497 for the evening performance.

Harry Williams with Chester Conklin and a big company of Keystoners have gone to Balboa Beach for scenes in "Doublecrossed." Director Williams made the water scenes for "A Tug Boat Romeo" at this point, and found the morning light there exceptionally good for sea scenes. Principals in the cast supporting Conklin are Guy Woodward and Dora Rogers, the big cast including a battalion of Keystone cops.

Dot Hagar, Keystone comedienne, who was formerly a professional dancer on the legitimate stage, is now daily giving Keystone girls lessons in the art of Terpsichore. A portion of the enclosed stage has been partitioned off, and here twenty young women, who are to appear in scenes for Director William Campbell's present subject, take training twice daily. One of the big scenes is that of a lawn fete, and before this setting interpretive dances are given.



Charles Kessell, affiliated with his brother, Adam, and Charles Baumann in the Keystone and New York companies, arrived in Los Angeles early this week for a short stay.

An early Triangle-Kay-Bee release will be "Three of Many," the second photoplay in which Thomas H. Ince presents Clara Williams as star. There is but one similarity concerning this and Miss Williams' first starring vehicle, "The Criminal," and that is that the beautiful acress appears in an Italian role. This subject, like her first, was directed by Reginald Barker. The play opens in New York, where Miss Williams, a nurse, lives at a middle class boarding house where an Italian and an Austrian reside.

When the European conflict breaks out, the two young men return to their respective native lands, answering the call to arms. The Italian Government officials induce the nurse to return to Italy to serve the Red Cross Society. The three meet on the Austro-Italian front, and there amid scenes of warfare, the romance is concluded. Charles Gunn and George Fisher appear as the other principals. The war scenes were filmed on the foothills of the Santa Monica mountains at Inceville under the direction of Mr. Barker, who has proven himself a genius in the staging of battle scenes. He directed the making of "The Coward," and "The Despoiler," or "War's Women," as it is now known.

Two well-known screen leading men were added to the Ince organization this week. William Garwood was engaged to appear opposite Enid Bennett in her second Ince production now being made under the direction of Charles Miller. Garwood will appear in the role of a young inventor who becomes involved in a romance with Miss Bennett, who takes the role of a girl of the slums. Garwood has been a screen leading man for the past six years, playing at eastern and western studios.

Jack Livingston is the second to be engaged, and will play in support of Charles Ray and Dorothy Dalton under the direction of Reginald Barker. This play is by Monte M. Katterjohn. Livingston has just finished an engagement with the Clune Company, where he played the most important role in "The Eyes of the World" to be released in January. Other members of Director Barker's subject are Margaret Thompson and Gertrude Claire.

Kenneth O'Hara, Ince studio publicity department manager, has discovered a hoodoo hovering over the Kay-Bee subject now being made by Director Raymond B. West. O'Hara has found this is West's thirteenth Triangle release, filming was begun on the 13th of November, and there are thirteen important characters in the cast, the players being Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, Chas. Gunn, Barney Sherry. Thos. S. Guise, Henry Belmar, J. Frank Burke, Jerome Storm, Agnes Herring, Jack Gilbert, Walter Perry, Thornton Edwards and Alice Taaffe, Even after learning all these facts, Miss Barriscale, it is said, did not hesitate to don the thirteenth of the twenty-six different gowns she is to wear in this production.

Hart in the Pulpit

William S. Hart appeared in a regular pulpit at a church at Santa Ana, California, one evening this week, not as a star attraction, but merely to introduce the chief speaker, Al. Jennings, the former train-robber, who later ran for the office of governor of Oklahoma. Hart and Jennings are intimate friends, and the actor was invited to present the former outlaw at his initial appearance in the pulpit. When it became known at Santa Ana that Jennings and his screen prototype were both to be at the first evangelistic meeting, the crowd that assembled was of such size that several overflow meetings could have been held. The day following this interesting meeting, a prayer given by a little tot in a scene for a Hart photoplay, caused a big loss of time and a quantity of film. The little one was to say her prayer and then be lifted into bed. She insisted upon reciting it as it had been taught to her by her mother. It was impossible to dissaude her from giving the entire prayer, for she could not understand that too much film was being exposed.

Mr. Hart and company will leave within a few days for the Mexican border, where they will work on a big cattle ranch where more than 63,000 head of cattle are daily to be seen. Scenes for this are needed for the production written by J. G. Hawks.

The famous doorway for Charles II throne room in Trinity Church, London, carved by Grindling Gibbins after a design by Sir Christopher Wren, has been reproduced by the wood-carvers of the Ince Triangle studio, and within a week will serve to adorn a cafe setting to be filmed. This is the handsomest piece of work created at this plant, and has required more than eight weeks for the making. The piece is nine feet in height, and Art Director Robert Brunton supervised its making.

The expense of building a cottage of the type to be seen in New England for the Ince Triangle subject now being made by Director Walter Edwards, was saved this week by Cameraman Otis Gove, who formerly resided in New Hampshire, and there served as a member of the granite State Legislature. Gove learned of Director Edwards' needs, and, being thoroughly familiar with the New England type of buildings, found just the location desired after a short search.

Getting Real Atmosphere at 6 A.M. Director J. Charles Hayden With Real Duck Hunters—Not Actors—in the Background

Douglas Fairbanks has the unique experience of kidnapping a minister from a bathroom that he may carry out an elopement in "The Matrimaniac." This Fine Art photoplay is in the assembling state in charge of Director Paul Powell. The photoplay has many thrills, and was adapted from a short story by Roy Cohan and J. N. Giesy. Fairbanks appears as a happy-go-lucky youth in love with a charming girl, Constance Talmadge, who is best known for her work as the Mountain Girl in "Intolerance."

The couple evade her father, secure the minister, and rush him on board a train. It is while the minister is regaining his composure, while still garbed in a thin bathrobe, that the father of the girl appears, and throws both the youth and the minister from the train. After hazardous trials while traveling on foot, by mule, and a hand-car, Fairbanks outgenerals the father, and the minister pronounces the wedding.

Wilbur Higby appears as the father, Clyde Hopkins takes the role of the youth who is the father's choice, and one intent upon getting his mit on the family cash. Fred Warren was the minister.

John Emerson now has a Fine Arts Company at San Diego for scenes supposed to be laid in South America. This comedy drama has been titled "The Pet of Paragonia," and is adapted from the novel, "Blaze Derringer," by Anita Loos. Fairbanks appears as an American engineer superintending mines in South America, when a semi-occasional revolution breaks out. The president and his daughter are kidnapped by a usurper. Melodramatic scenes follow, Fairbanks in a number of hair-breadth escapes releasing the president and aiding in bringing about his reinstatement in the presidential chair. Alma Ruebens plays the role opposite Fairbanks.

Douglas Fairbanks has been selected as one of the starters for the Ascot Park championship award sweepstakes to be held Thanksgiving Day. The actor with the inimitable smile is an ardent devotee of automobile racing, and has taken part in a number of amateur events. This is the first time he has been identified with sport in an official capacity. He has many friends among the automobile drivers.

Lillian Gish is said to be most favorably cast in the Triangle Fine Arts production, "A House Built Upon Sand," written by Mary O. O'Connor. Miss Gish appears first as a social butterfly. She weds an intellectual man, more or less of caveman type. He kills her plans for a big wedding, and then takes her to a small town where he owns and manages a big industrial plant. There her character is gradually transformed from one of a shallow-brained, dance-crazed girl, to one of a young woman with a deep love for humanity. Jealousy finally creeps into the heart of the wife, and she fails to realize the true worth of her husband until in a striking climax in which a spectacular fire scene forms an important part. Roy Stewart takes the part of the strong-willed husband. The direction is in charge of Edward Morrissey.

Scenes for "Jim Bludso"

Director Tod Browning with a company of Fine Art players, including Wilfred Lucas as star, are spending several days in the vicinity of Sacramento, California, for river scenes for the photoplay "Jim Bludso," which is an adaptation from the drama of the same name based upon Pike County ballads by the Honorable John Hay. Lucas appears as an engineer of a Mississippi River boat. His wife is infatuated with a gambler. While the husband is absent serving in the Union army, the woman elopes with the gambler and deserts her baby. After learning of his wife's desertion, the husband meets a woman whom he learns to love, but because of their child he forgives his erring wife. The gambler in the meantime has been a party in charge of constructing a levee, the work of which is poorly executed. When it breaks, the gambler fixes the blame unjustly on the husband.

To prove his innocence, there is a thrilling steamboat race, and one of the craft is destroyed by fire, while a hand to hand battle rages between Bludso and the gambler. One Sacramento River boat was purchased outright, and another large craft was leased for the making of these scenes. Olga Grey takes the part of the wife, little George Stone their baby, and Sam deGrasse the gambler. Tod Browning and Wilfred Lucas are co-directors of the production.

All members of the Signal Company are now working in and out of the Pasadena Avenue studio in the making of the tenth episode of "A Lass of the Lumberlands," those who were at Yosemite Valley having returned this week. All were in a more or less crippled condition, suffering with innumerable bruises received when they were thrown from a push car when it left the track at a sharp curve. All the players including Helen Holmes, co-director Paul C. Hurst, and William Brunton were thrown to the rocky ground. Mr. Hurst received the most painful injury, the ligaments of his shoulder being torn loose.

Two thrillers were staged for the tenth episode. Helen Holmes was the principal of one, and her act was to jump from the open door of a box car as it crossed the jack-knife bridge of the Salt Lake Railway at the edge of San Pedro Bay. The train was traveling at about twenty miles an hour when the actress made the forty-five foot dive into the water below. Leo Maloney was the hero of the other thrill, when he drove an automobile alongside a moving train and jumped from the driver's seat to the platform of a caboose, while both were moving at the rate of twenty-five miles per hour.

Priscilla Dean, Formerly With Nestor Universal, Now Playing Leads with Harry Carey's Company

"The Promise," an adaptation from the novel of the same name by James B. Henderix, is to be the next Yorke-Metro photoplay. As in previous releases from this studio, May Allison and Harold Lockwood will be co-starred. "The Promise" is laid in the big timber country of the northwest, where are to be found many discards of society. Lockwood appears as a man who has fallen from his rightful place in society, and the love of a woman brings about his reformation.

The company has completed all scenes for the film version of Harold McGrath's subject, "Pidgin Island," the final exterior shots being made at Monterey, California. The company arrived home early this week. While in the north they experienced a number of hardships in order that exceptional scenes be filmed. Both Lockwood and Miss Allison were bruised painfully when dashed against rocks by the breakers.

Tom Mix and Horse "Almost" Again!

In "Twisted Trails," a Selig production released in General Film service on Monday, December 11, Tom Mix rides a horse across a foot-log which spans a chasm. Should the horse have made a mis-step the rider would have fallen to his death on the rocks hundreds of feet below. Tom Mix, Bessie Eyton, Eugenie Besserer and Al W. Filson. The story was written by Edwin Ray Coffin.

"Humanizing Mr. Winsby" Is Next

The second of the special features produced by the Dudley Motion Picture Company of Redlands, California, will be released to exhibitors through the Unity exchanges on December 18th.

The story from which the five reels have been made was written by Peter B. Kyne and appeared some months ago in the Saturday Evening Post.

George N. Chesebro plays the role of Mr. Winsby and is supported by Julius Frankenberg as the Pronto Kid, Arthur Millett as Cattermole, the faithful old clerk and bookkeeper for Mr. Winsby, and Alice Neice, plays the role of Patsy, the only person in the old town over whom Mr. Winsby is unable to rule.

AMONG THE EXCHANGES

Managers Convene—Pearl Presides at Pathe Party

IMPORTANT developments along the line of increased efficiency and co-operation with exhibitors were seen recently, when Pathe branch managers of the Eastern Division met in convention with J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager ,and C. R. Seelye, business manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., at the executive offices in New York.

The managers gathered from all parts of the country east of the Mississippi to work out further plans in accordance with the go-ahead policy of Pathe.

In order to render the national advertising campaign on "Pearl of the Army" of the greatest value to exhibitors, the opinion of each manager was obtained.

Fourteen Gold Rooster plays, which will be released within the next three months, and three episodes each of the next two serials that will be released following "Pearl of the Army" were shown to the managers, so that they may be in every way prepared to give their customers full information.

Pathe is justly proud of being able to show these serials and features so far in advance, because it demonstrates that the company is practising what it preaches in "Pearl of the Army" with regard to preparedness.

The first two days of the meeting were devoted to a discussion of sales plans, not only in each exchange territory, but even the territory of every salesman was gone over carefully for the purpose of giving better service to each theatre.

It was the unanimous vote of the meeting that in order that exhibitors should be familiar with the pictures they are to present and should thus be able to work out special advertising campaigns it would be best to show in advance all features and as many episodes of each serial as possible.

The time has gone by when an exhibitor can simply put a picture on his screen and be sure of a crowded house. Today he must be a showman. He must advertize heavily in the newspapers, in his house program, on billboards and in his own lobby. To do so he must know all there is to know about the picture he is to show. Under probably the highest salaried teacher in the world, Pathe's salesmen are trained to be of service to their customers.

Comptroller Paul Brunet discussed with the managers the new booking system, and Frank Duffy was, as usual, on the job seeing that all arrangements were carried out.

E. J. O'Connor displayed some of the fine new posters for which his department is responsible.

A. E. Rousseau, secretary, took up the new service contract of which he is the author.

G. A. Smith outlined the big new advertising campaign on "Pearl of the Army," which was greeted with great enthusiasm. Joseph Dunn spoke on serial publicity.

The increased efficiency of the purchasing department and the export and trading department was outlined by Charles Fischer and Adolph Werkmeister.

The general outlook was summarized by Tarleton Winchester, and a report made to the entire organization through the columns of the Pathe Sun, the weekly house organ.

The afternoon of the third day was devoted to a social gathering, at which Mr. Berst presided. A luncheon was served at Murray's, at which the managers and department heads were present, and it was further enlivened by the arrival of Miss Pearl White. The managers drank a hearty toast to Pathe's girl, and the rafters rang with many a rousing cheer for the greatest serial star in the world.

Miss White also received an ovation from the patrons of Murray's, who crowded around her and begged for her autograph.

The managers present were: A. S. Abeles of New York, A. Epstein of Albany, J. K. Morgan of Buffalo, D. F. O'Donnell of Washington, H. M. Osborn of Philadelphia, A. Reinlieb of Newark, C. E. Shurtleff of Cleveland and W. S. Wessling of Cincinnati.

Mr. Berst told the managers how pleased he was with their work and that a similar convention would be held in Chicago for the managers of the Middle West, and later another in San Francisco for the West Coast managers, at both of which Mr. Seelye would preside.

Philadelphia Exchange Remodeled

The Supreme Feature Film Service is now at home in its new quarters at 256 N. 13th street, Philadelphia. As about $2,000 was spent in renovation and equipment the result is naturally an up to date as well as beautiful exchange.

The color scheme is well carried out in tans and browns running the scale from light to dark, while the fixtures and woodwork are handsome and blend well with the walls and floor. A good feature is the little reception room in front.

President's Namesake Starts Tour in the West

Mell S. Wilson, who is known to practically every exhibitor West of the Mississippi River, has joined the Paramount forces, and will be traveling representative of the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City, distributors in that vicinity for Paramount Pictures.

Mr. Wilson was formerly connected with the General Film Company, and the Mutual. He is a young man full of enthusiasm, and knows the film business from start to finish.

Unlike his illustrious namesake, Mr. Wilson says that he is not too proud to fight, and doesn't write accountability notes, but that he sells service, and has already packed his grip, primarily to taking to the road to spread the policies and fundamentals of—better pictures for better theatres and a better public.

Byars Interested in New Exchange

D. J. Byars, formerly interested in the Central Feature Company of Waco, and W. H. McCullough, president of the Central Exchange Texas National Bank, have organized a new film exchange, which will be known as the Central Film Service Corporation. This company will operate in the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas with headquarters at the Preatorian Building in Waco.

Mr. Byars made a special trip to New York and concluded negotiations with the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation whereby the Central Feature Service will become the exclusive distributors of all Moss productions in the states of Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas.

The first Moss production to be released by this new concern in this territory will be the sensational box office success, "One Day," sequel to "Three Weeks," which has never been exploited in this territory. Immediately following the release of "One Day," "The Power of Evil," and "Boots and Saddles" will be released.

Loew Books Wilcox Pictures

The six pictures composing the Ella Wheeler Wilcox series, which are ready for distribution in New York by the Dispatch Film Exchange, 145 West Forty-fifth street, have been seen and signed for by Marcus Loew, and will be shown on the entire Loew circuit. The pictures are in two reels each and bear the same titles as Mrs. Wilcox's most successful poems.

There is a full line of advertising matter on each picture, including six-sheet lithos and novel booklets containing the poems on which the pictures are based. The titles of the series are "Meg's Curse," "Lais When Young," "A Married Coquette," "Angel or Demon," "Lord, Speak Again," and "Divorced."

"Simon Legree" Visits Atlanta

J. K. Burger, Manager of Exchanges for the International Film Service, visited the Atlanta Branch on his swing around the circle. At this Exchange he is affectionately known as "Simon Legree," because of his abilities to prod his workers without raising any welt from the imaginary lash.

Mr. Burger imparted to Southern exhibitors the glad news as to the preparedness serial, "Patria."

Driscoll Has Canadian Rights on "Robinson Crusoe"

George Driscoll has purchased the sole Canadian rights for Henry W. Savage's production of "Robinson Crusoe." The deal was arranged through the Warner Brothers, who are handling all business on this feature. Mr. Driscoll has heretofore only been interested in vaudeville and stock in Canada, but he believes "Robinson Crusoe" will mark his successful advent into the motion picture field.

Heavy, tragic plays, he says, are not welcomed by the Canadian public. They have enough tragedy reading the bulletin boards. "Robinson Crusoe" is such a novelty and has such world-wide appeal that its character immediately appealed to Mr. Driscoll as being suited to the Canadian temperament at the present time. He has established offices in the Godfrey Building, New York, although he still maintains his headquarters in Montreal, Can., at His Majesty's theatre.

Eight-Reel Drama Begun by Selig in West

Director Colin Campbell has begun the production of an eight-reel feature drama at the Los Angeles studios of the Selig Company. Gilson Willets is the author of the play, and the theme centers about the inner workings of a perfectly organized syndicate of criminals, whose members live in luxury and move in the highest social circles while preying upon their wealthy victims. The cast includes Fritzi Brunette, Edward Coxen, Vivian Rich, Bessie Eyton, Tom Santschi, Eugenie Besserer, Jack Richardson, Harry Lonsdale, Frank Clark and Al W. Filson.

Phax Pictures Handling "Race Suicide"

The Phax Pictures Company, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, which is handling the production "Race Suicide" for Greater New York and New York state, has received so many bookings that Samuel Cummins, general manager of the company, has decided to use ten prints.

"Race Suicide" was released in other parts of the country over a year ago, and has done very good business. The license bureau proved a stumbling block for the New York territory, but matters have been smoothed over now.

Scenes from Big V. Comedies, Released from Vitagraph, V-L-S-E

What to Expect from Universal In December

TOPPING the program of releases of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the week of December 11, is the Red Feather five-act drama, "The Morals of Hilda," in which Lois Wilson is the star. This was written by H. C. Warnack, scenarioized by A. W. Coleway and produced by Lloyd B. Carleton.

In the cast of players supporting Miss Wilson are L. C. Shumway, Gretchen Lederer, Richard Morris, Adele Farrington and others.

On December 11 will appear the one-act Nestor comedy, "Two Small Town Romeos," with Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean in the leading roles. This is from the pen of Virginia Kirtley, and produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Scheduled for release on December 12 is the Gold Seal three-act melodrama, "The Two Roads," with Douglas Monroe and Edna Flugrath as the featured players. The story is by Ben Landeck, and was directed by Harold Shaw. Under the Victor brand the one-act comedy "Billy the Bandit," with Billy Mason will appear on the same date.

On Wednesday will appear the Universal Animated Weekly; the Laemmle one-act drama "Green Eyes," with George Chesboro, and the L-Ko two-act comedy, "Murdered by Mistake."

The Victor Comedy in one act "It Didn't Work Out Right," written and produced by Robert F. Hill, and played by Stanley Walpole, Helen Slosson, Joseph Granby and Helen Marten will be released on Thursday, December 14. The same day finds the two-reel drama "The Lawyer's Secret," under the Rex brand, with Jack Nelson and Molly Malone and the Powers educational reel "In the Land of King Cotton," scheduled for release.

"Scratched," a two reel melodrama will be released December 15. "I Am Your Husband," a one-act Nestor comedy written and produced by Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke, with Al McKinnon and Peggy Coudray and the Big U drama "The Wrong Heart," featuring Wallace Reid and Dorothy Davenport are other releases for this date.

"The Taint of Fear," a two-act modern military drama under the Bison brand will appear on Saturday, December 16. It was written and produced by Allen Holubar, who plays the leading role supported by Lydia Titus, Joseph Girard, Charles Oelze and George Pearce. Other releases of this date are the Joker comedy, "Their Dark Secret," with Gale Henry and William Franey and the Laemmle one-act drama, "Mother's Guiding Hand," featuring Jane Fearnley.

On Sunday, December 17 the Powers split-reel, "Sammie Johnsin and the Wonderful Lamp," a comedy cartoon, and Majestic Ceylon as seen by Dr. Dorsey, will be released. "Love or an Empire," a two-act Rex drama with William Shay and Leah Baird is another Sunday release. Sharing honors with the Red Feather feature will appear the eighteenth episode of the Universal Special serial "Liberty."

First Child to Do Wild Animal Thrillers Back

Baby Lillian Wade, one of the first screen children to become famous, and probably the first child to appear in animal pictures, has again joined the Selig Polyscope Company. Her absence from the screen and application to her studies seems only to have broadened her art, and she is today a finished little artist.

LOOKING AHEAD WITH THE PRODUCERS

Pictures Aid Police

Police Commissioner Arthur Woods has asked the aid of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in the campaign of the Police Department to teach the people to take care of themselves. Editor Jack Cohn of the Universal Weekly has been taking motion pictures, showing how many of the commonest injuries suffered by pedestrians can be averted by a little care. Films teaching the care of the health, the preservation of property and the methods to pursue in outwitting thieves will also be made.

These pictures will be shown as part of the police campaign, and will serve as a valuable adjunct to the excellent work being conducted by Commissioner Woods and his men. On December 1 the department distributed 50,000 window cards, 300,000 safety booklets and motion picture slides as well as completed motion pictures of preventatives every citizen should employ in the Safety First cause.

Realism in Coming Adaptations of Novel

"The Garden of Allah," to be released by the Selig Polyscope Company, carries a number of emotional scenes enacted by Helen Ware and Thomas Santschi. Those who recall this novel written by Robert Hichens will remember the passionate protestations of love made by Domini Enfilden and Boris Androvsky whose fates were written in the sands. Those who have seen advance presentations of Selig's "The Garden of Allah" assert that Helen Ware has a part particularly well suited to her ability.

There is the awakening of love in the heart of Domini Enfilden and the response on the part of Boris who had not seen a woman for twenty-three years.

Some of the sensational scenes in "The Garden of Allah" include the sand storm, the battle of the desert nomads, scenes in the garden of Allah and on the Sahara desert, and the streets and bazaars of the Oriental city of Beni-Mora.

"Remember the Maine?"

Was the Spanish government responsible for the sinking of the battleship Maine in Havana harbor, February 22, 1898? Everyone in America thought so at the time, and the destruction of the United States man-of-war was the immediate cause of the struggle between this country and Spain. Now, however, many leading historians believe that the Spaniards were innocent of the deed.

In Edison's "A Mesage to Garcia," based on the immortal essay by the late Elbert Hubbard, a dramatic version of the warship's fate is presented, and the explosion which sent the Maine and her sleeping crew to the bottom is an actual scene in the film.

Robinson and Crew So Happy They Hated to Quit

"ROBINSON CRUSOE has converted me to a fullfledged movie fan," said Robert Paton Gibbs who portrays the title role in Henry W. Savage's production of the best known story in the realm of fiction. "I must confess I had leanings in that direction before I went South with Mr. Savage's company, but when I returned my feelings could no longer be characterized as leanings.

"Our stay in Florida was one delightful vacation. Of course I would have had a different story to tell if I had been really alone in that deserted spot, but when the camera can see only you and you can see a number of friendly faces looking on and waiting to join you as soon as the cameraman stops grinding it is—if I may steal the name of the vessel in which I sailed away—a lark.

"Then, too, when the costumes were once made there was no fear of having the creases come out of the trousers or having the shoulders of the coat whitened with powder from the leading lady's embrace. All told I think the man who coined the saying 'This is the life' must have referred to Crusoe's existence under the guidance of Mr. Savage and Director George Marion."

The exhibitors who have seen the picture say that from the goat up to Mr. Gibbs every member of the company has the air of fully enjoying his work.

Associated with Mr. Gibbs, as Crusoe and Mr. Marion as his man Friday are Karl Stall as the Moorish chief; Andrew Higginson as the captain of the Lark, Anton Ascher as the cook and Ami Dennis as Zuleika. Other members of the cast are Charles D. Murray, Paul Pollock, Melville Anderson, O. Stadt Stadt, Joseph Carbon, E. J. Colvin, Warren Hughes and D. H. Turnes.

Carl Gregory assisted by Harold L. Miller was in charge of the photography.

Inquiries have been pouring in from all parts of this country and Canada since the announcement of the films' release, and many exhibitors are waiting to book it as a Christmas attraction. It is considered one of the most unusual features produced.

Retrospective of 1916 Serial Successes—Ready for '17

MORE than half a milion dollars was spent in newspapers and billboards to tell the motion picture millions about the merits of Pathe serials in 1916. This is in line with Vice-President J. A. Berst's policy of direct co-operation with exhibitors.

Pathe's serial program is now looked forward to by exhibitors the same as automobile dealers count on the new models of standard cars. Two serials have already been completed for 1917. Three others are in the course of production. Six serials and series were released during 1916, as follows: "The Red Circle," "The Iron Claw," "Who's Guilty?" "The Grip of Evil," "The Shielding Shadow," and "Pearl of the Army."

The list of stars on Pathe's 1916 serial program included Pearl White, Ruth Roland, Anna Nilsson, Jackie Saunders, Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard, Leon Bary, Creighton Hale, Sheldon Lewis, Tom Moore, Roland Bottomley and Frank Mayo. Some of the authors who contributed to the program were Albert Payson Terhune, Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Arthur Stringer, Louis Tracy, Randall Parrish, George B. Seitz and Guy W. McConnell, Seitz preparing the working scripts.

There were many innovations during the 1916 campaigns, one of the most important being Mr. Berst's plan of advertising in the two leading newspapers instead of one, as heretofore. Another was the publication of lessons in scenario writing, based on the serials. For some of the early 1917 serials there are two new ideas which are expected to bring revolutionary results.

Vital Scenes from "A Failure at Fifty," and "The Egg" (Essanay)

A Thousand Marblehead, Mass., Villagers Watch Mary Pickford "At Work" on Her New Artcraft Production, "Pride of the Clan."

Called "Princess," She Christens Self "Empress"

Marie Empress who has the stellar role in B. S. Moss' new photoplay sermon for parents, "The Girl Who Doesn't Know," is the great grand niece of Edmund Keene, the celebrated English actor. That she has inherited dramatic talent, from her illustrious forbear is proved by the notable engagements she has filled on both sides of the Atlantic.

Miss Empress's real name is Marie Keene. She changed it when she first went on the stage, believing it would be well to strike out for herself since a big name is often a handicap to the beginner. At the suggestion of a friend who called her "Little Princess," she adopted that as an unusual cognomen. Now, that she has arrived, Miss Empress wishes she had never switched.

Since going into pictures, a short while ago, Miss Empress has appeared with Lew Fields in "Old Dutch." Under the banner of the Famous Players, she played in "When We Were Twenty-One" and "The Firefly." Recently she was starred in an Equitable production entitled "Love's Crossroads."

"Manger to Cross" Booked Direct from Kalem

The Kalem Company announces that exhibitors may book the five-reel Biblical masterpiece, "From the Manger to the Cross" direct from the New York offices of the company. The announcement comes in response to the numerous requests for information from exhibitors with the coming of the holiday season.

The constant stream of bookings during the past months has proven that the Biblical production is "an all year round" attraction. "From the Manger to the Cross" takes on added value from the fact that it was staged in the exact locations in the Holy Land by the Kalem Company which made a trip half way around the world for this purpose.

Test of Merit or Success?

If the "return date" is a criterion of a feature picture's success, and there seems to be no doubt that it is, Viola Dana in Edison's "The Cossack Whip," is scoring heavily throughout the country. The Kleine exchanges report to the home office that fully forty per cent of the exhibitors who play the picture are asking for return dates as soon as other engagements give the film an open day.

Records of Pickford Supporting Players Most Interesting

PARTICULAR care has been evidenced in the selection of the players in the supporting cast of Mary Pickford's new production, "The Pride of the Clan," which is now being produced. Each character is portrayed by an artist especially fitted to the part.

In the chief supporting part to Miss Pickford is Matt Moore. It was only four months after the time Mr. Moore first saw the light of day that he made his debut behind the footlights in "East Lynne." During his seven years' connection with the stage in this country he achieved considerable prominence on the road. On the screen he attracted the favor of the motion picture patrons and became popular as a result of his work in "Traffic in Souls," and other screen plays.

Kathryn Browne Decker, who will be seen in the role of "The Countess of Dunstable," first became known to the theatre-going public as Kathryn Browne in "He Comes Up Smiling," "The Lady of Oklahoma," "Country Mouse," "Mere Man," "The Optimist" and "The Great Divide," in which she toured the country. Mrs. Decker has appeared on the stage under the managements of William A. Brady, Charles Frohman, Henry Miller and other producers.

Warren Cook, who appears in the Pickford-Artcraft subject as "The Earl of Dunstable," is also widely known. Mr. Cook achieved his first success in William A. Brady's "Way Down East," with which company he was associated six years. Another one of his notable characterizations was in Charles Frohman's "The Conspiracy." Among Mr. Cook's works in the silent drama are his portrayals in "The Moment Before," with Pauline Frederick, "My Lady Incog" and "The Saleslady" with Hazel Dawn.

A particularly difficult character has been given Edward Roseman, in "Pitcairn," the village atheist. Mr. Roseman is another member of the "old school." Among his screen characterizations are those displayed in "The Barrier," "The Pit," "The Wishing Ring," "The Secret of Eve," etc.

Joel Day portrays the part of the Dominie. In theatricals Mr. Day appeared in stock and with various road companies for three years, after which he joined the Edison Company, appearing on the screen under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. Mr. Day has played in motion pictures for some seven years, during which time he achieved prominence in his portrayals of President Lincoln in "When Lincoln Was President" and "Lincoln for the Defense."

The balance of the cast in "The Pride of the Clan" has been selected with equal care and it is readily felt that never before has "Little Mary" been afforded such exceptional support, as is evident, and doubtless will be appreciated.

Southern Censors State Their Case on Sex Films

HAMILTON LOVE, chairman of the Nashville Board of Censors, has given out the following interview to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS relative to the vice picture which was shown at the Fifth Avenue theatre: "In answer to such criticism that has been, or will be, hurled at the Nashville Board of Censorship for passing the film, 'The Little Girl Next Door,' I would say: It is difficult to estimate in advance what the physiological effect of such pictures on an audience will be, but this board believes there is a place on the screen for presentations which unquestionably indicate the cause, the dangers and the effects of sexual misconduct. We believe the good of the community demands that we support these subjects which deal seriously and calmly with the social evil.

"Those that arouse fear in the minds of both sexes, which develop a hatred on the part of the audience of this ancient evil, which stimulate efforts to rescue the prostitute, and which indicate sensible and workable methods of repression or suppression. The Nashville Board of Censorship follows, in a large measure, the recommendations of the National Board of Review, and is in close touch with the censors in other cities. 'The Little Girl Next Door' has passed the local board and has been shown in Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Memphis, and many other cities."

Into Society from the Shop

In "The Rise of Susan," about to be released upon the regular World Film program, Clara Kimball Young plays a girl taken out of a modiste's shop to impersonate a countess who has failed to put in an appearance at a social function "on the avenue."

Screen Magazine Aims for Instructive Honors

Having met with instantaneous success wherever it was shown, the first issue of the "Universal Screen Magazine" proved to be the most sought after short release offered on the Universal program. This animated magazine reel is entertaining and instructive. Activities in the world's work that cannot find proper expression in a news weekly are presented and thousands of themes are sifted to find material for the subjects.

Varied are the features of the second issue, scheduled for release early in December. For the first time since the discovery of antitoxin as a preventive and a cure for diphtheria its development is explained by means of the motion picture camera.

In contrast on the same reel is the section devoted to the Boy Scouts, under the direction of Ernest Thompson-Seton, especially instructive to children.

In the "Universal Screen Magazine" there is always something of particular interest to the housewife. This week all the tasks of the kitchen which can be performed by electricity are shown.

A short animated lesson in sculpture is given, too, with Willie Hopkins as the instructor.

Louise Glaum's Motor Champ

Louise Glaum is the first woman who ever has posed for a picture at the side of Dario Resta, the noted automobile-race champion. Miss Glaum was in attendance at the Vanderbilt Cup Race on the Santa Monica course, and as Resta flashed across the finish line, a winner, she ran to his pits, a cluster of crysanthemums in her arms. An official intercepted the actress, but Mrs. Resta stepped up and assured Miss Glaum that Resta would accept the flowers and pose for a photograph.

Menagerie Goes West

The entire complement of Bostock animals, which were exhibited last summer at Luna Park, Coney Island, N. Y., have been returned to the David Horsley studios in Los Angeles, and under the direction of Captain Jack Bonavita are being made ready to appear in a series of animal motion pictures.

Newspaper Advertising Campaign for "Secret Kingdom"

A THOROUGH-GOING newspaper and magazine advertising campaign has been prepared for "The Secret Kingdom." Very handsome advance one-sheets are now in the hands of all the Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchanges. They show Mr. Richman and Arline Pretty, who plays the part of Princess Julia in the romantic land of "The Secret Kingdom."

Other paper prepared for "The Secret Kingdom" includes one-sheets, three-sheets and six-sheets on each episode; complete sets of eleven 8 x 10 black-and-white photographs and two 22 x 28 colored photographs for each episode; beautiful and artistic heralds covering each installment of the serial; one and two-column cuts of the stars and scenes in the various episodes; banners, etc.

Full page, half page and page advertisements, together with the fiction version of each chapter of "The Secret Kingdom" will be used in the following papers in connection with publicizing the serial: New York American, New York Journal, Chicago American, Chicago Examiner, the Boston American, Washington Times, Philadelphia North American, Pittsburgh Sun, Cleveland Leader, Buffalo Courier, Milwaukee Leader, Minneapolis Daily News, St. Paul Daily News, Indianapolis Star, Richmond Times Dispatch, St. Louis Republic, Omaha News, San Francisco Examiner, San Francisco Call, Louisville News, New Orleans Item, Portland Oregonian, Los Angeles Examiner, Los Angeles Herald, Atlanta Georgian, Syracuse Herald, Denver Rocky Mountain News, Kansas City Post, Salt Lake City Herald, Baltimore American and Rochester Photoplay News.

The titles of the episodes of "The Secret Kingdom" are as follows: No. 1, "Land of Intrigue"; No. 2, "Royalty at Red Wing"; No. 3, "The Sealed Packets"; No. 4, "The Honorable Mr. Oxenham"; No. 5, "Carriage Call No. 101"; No. 6, "Human Flotsam"; No. 7, "The Ghost Ship"; No. 8, "Rum Cay"; No. 9, "The Swamp Adder"; No. 10, "A Goat Without Horns"; No. 11, "The White Witch"; No. 12, "Shark's Nest"; No. 13, "The Tragic Masque"; No. 14, "The Portrait of a King"; and No. 15, "The Tocsin."

Included in the cast in support of Mr. Richman and Miss Kelly are such stage and screen stars as Joseph Kilgour, Arline Pretty, Wiliam Dunn and De Jalma West.

Wernick Joins Rogson

The Rogson Film Corporation has secured Richard Wernick, who will represent the corporation through New York State.

Wernick is a pioneer in the film business, though only twenty-eight years of age, and has had many important affiliations.

He recently resigned his position with the Fox Film Corporation, as manager of its New Haven Branch in Connecticut.

The Rogson corporation has secured the rights to many big productions and is handling "Common Law," "War Brides" and all future releases from Selznick.

Not Moving Picture World But Moving Picture Weekly

In last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS an advertisement inserted by the Moving Picture Weekly Publishing Company, 1600 Broadway, was in error to the extent to reading that it was published by the Moving Picture World. This is obviously wrong and the correction is made in justice to both publishers.

"Absinthe"

This great picture, made by HERBERT money getter of its day and smashed

I Have Pur

Understanding as I did, the tremendous success Exhibitors in every part of the world had with "ABSINTHE" and realizing the even greater possibilities of this big winner now during the War, showing the city of Paris, surrounding territory, fighting trenches, artillery action, etc., I made the UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO. an offer for negative and complete territorial rights. It was accepted and now "ABSINTHE" belongs to Yours Truly, KING BAGGOT.

Exhibitors who have played it certainly need no information as to the Box Office value of "ABSINTHE." It proved a whale of a winner and one of the biggest money getters that ever came down the line.

Those who have still to book it can rest their faith in the facts that HERBERT BRENON directed "ABSINTHE" while Leah Baird and Myself played the leads. Herbert Brenon produced "Neptune's Daughter," "War Brides," "A Daughter of the Gods," and other huge successes.

In "ABSINTHE" we show the famous spots of Paris, including such places as Montmarte, Tuileries, Arch de Triomphe, Grande Boulevarde, and many other famous spots.

I have spent a young fortune working it up, inserting new titles, new scenes, etc., so that it now outclasses the original picture completely.

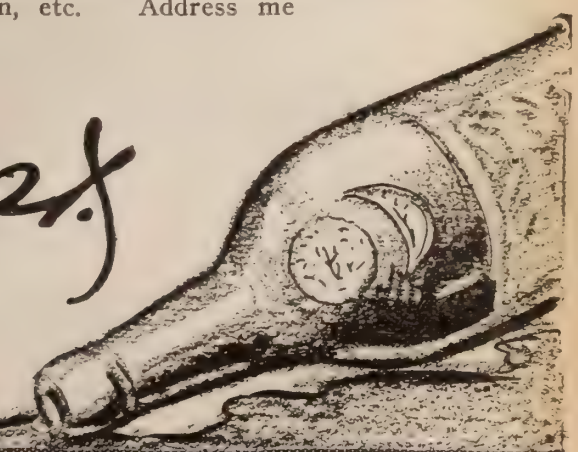
"ABSINTHE" as I have it prepared is a tremendous production.

"Absinthe" in it's new dress will be without question

"Absinthe"

BRENON, LEAH BAIRD and MYSELF in Paris was the biggest all Box Office Records. It's even better today, that's why

chased It Outright



Compared to many of the State Rights propositions now on the market "ABSINTHE" looms up like a house afire. You don't have to gamble on "ABSINTHE." It has drawn hundreds of thousands of dollars into the box offices of thousands of theatres all over the world and is now ready to draw more money than it ever did. I own the picture, complete State Rights and will make interesting terms to State Right Buyers for quick action.

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

—And you can bet your sweet life that it won't be forty-eight hours after this ad appears when I will be swamped with inquiries because "ABSINTHE" is too well known for its tremendous power to draw capacity houses to go begging.

EXTRA SPECIAL—I paid a tidy sum to one of the brainiest advertising Experts in the business to get out my advertising folders for State Rights Buyers. THESE WILL BE GIVEN FREE TO ALL STATE RIGHTS BUYERS, and I want to tell you, you've never seen adv. matter with the "kick" in it like mine. Write, wire, phone or call for terms, territory, information, etc. Address me personally—4th floor—1600 Broadway, New York City.

"THE EAGLE'S WINGS"

A THUNDERING DRAMA WITH A THUNDERING MESSAGE

From the virile pen of RUFUS STEELE

If you are looking for a big box-office attraction book this tremendous production—it has the Nation-wide theme and the patriotic appeal that will thrill every American man, woman and child.

Staged with a realistic fidelity that puts to shame the ordinary "spectacular" feature. A drama of National Defense that will make history. A picture that your patrons will go wild about. One of the greatest offerings of the season.

Notice to BLUEBIRD Exhibitors

This magnificent picture is not on the regular BLUEBIRD Program. It was originally intended for a State Rights Production, but it made so strong an impression on the Executives of BLUEBIRD that they paid an enormous sum for it, so that it might be shown under the famous BLUEBIRD brand. You must expect to pay a good price for it because it is a BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION EXTRAORDINARY. It will prove a drawing card at every performance at any admission price. Now ready for immediate booking. Communicate immediately with your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or

"Grandmothers" See Themselves in a Metro-Drew Comedy

Fifty old ladies, whose ages aggregated 3,550 years, were the Thanksgiving Eve guests of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Metro stars, at the Strand theatre when the latest Metro-Drew comedy, "Henry's Thanksgiving," was shown there.

To get the right sort of venerable women for the Metro-Drew comedy the Drews appealed to Charlotte Wharton Ayers, whose mother, Mrs. Carolyn Henning Rugg, is the founder of the Sunset Club, an organization composed of women 60 years of age or older. Members of the Sunset Club were so gracious in volunteering to appear in the picture that the Drews arranged a feast for them afterward, and then invited them to see the first showing of the production. This was at the Strand theatre.

Creative Film Producing

The recently organized Creative Film Company has elected Leon Wagner as president, Donald Campbell as secretary, and Jack Weinberg as treasurer. Work is already under way on the production of a feature under the direction of "Silent Bill" Haddock.

The officers of the company are well known from connections they have had with various film enterprises. Mr. Wagner was associated with the Sterling Camera and Film Company and is a camera and technical expert. Weinberg and Campbell have been active principally in the sales end of the industry for a number of years.

The cast for the first feature is announced, with Jane Gail as the lead. Henry Walpole, Mary Simon, and Violet Stuart have the other principal roles.

California Athlete Joins Triangle

Roy Stuart has been specially engaged to play opposite Lillian Gish, in place of Keith Armour, who has been obliged to leave the coast and return to his home in Chicago because of the serious illness of his mother.

Before coming under the Triangle management, Stuart played leading parts with Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley.

Physically, he is one of the largest screen heroes to gain attention, standing some 6 feet 3 inches in height and weighing over 210 pounds.

Stuart is a graduate of the University of California, and for several years held the championship of the Pacific Coast for rowing the single sculls.

Stuart will be seen in the Fine Arts production of "A House Built Upon Sand," scheduled for release December 31.

Naval Production Postponed

"Miss Jackie of the Navy," the Mutual Star production featuring Miss Margarita Fischer, announced for release Nov. 30 has been postponed to the week of Dec. 11.

The release dates of the entire series have been set back two weeks from the dates already announced.

"Miss Jackie of the Navy" will be followed by "The Butterfly Girl," "The Devil's Assistant," "A Knight at Tarquizzi" and "Birds of Passage."

"Secret Kingdom" for Release December 25

"THE Secret Kingdom," the new 15-episode Vitagraph serial in which Charles Richman and Miss Dorothy Kelly are starred, will be released through Vitagraph-V-L-S-E exchanges on December 25th.

Louis Joseph Vance wrote "The Secret Kingdom" and the scenarios are by Basil Dicky. Theodore Marston and Charles E. Brabin directed the serial.

An unusual feature in connection with the production and release of "The Secret Kingdom" is that all fifteen episodes are now completed and have already been shipped to the various Vitagraph-V-L-S-E branches throughout the United States and Canada.

Messrs. J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, under whose personal supervision "The Secret Kingdom" was produced, and Walter W. Irwin, General Manager of Vitagraph-V-L-S-E, determined upon this completion of the production long prior to release date, so that an exhibitor anywhere in the country could see the whole serial or any part of it before booking it.

The first two episodes of "The Secret Kingdom" are each three reels long. The remaining thirteen chapters are in two-reel lengths. Thus an exhibitor is enabled to show the first two installments of "The Secret Kingdom" as a six-reel feature, thus creating a greater interest in the serial because it has been made the backbone of the day's program.

This innovation also has made possible the booking of "The Secret Kingdom" for more than the usual one or two days' showing for each episode at a theatre. Where it has already been booked as a feature, several of the Vitagraph-V-L-S-E- exchanges report that the theatres so booking it have arranged to run succeeding episodes for four, five, and even seven days each.

Mutual to Release Series of Star Comedies

CO-INCIDENT with the announcement of the broadening of the scope of the producing activities of the Mutual Film Corporation, and the signing of a number of prominent stars, comes the statement that the Mutual will release a series of seven Star Comedies, featuring some of Broadway's most popular players, beginning Saturday, December 2.

Among the new players who will appear are Tom Wise, the creator of the leading roles in such plays as "Are You a Mason?" Alice Dovey, who appeared most recently in "Very Good Eddie"; Ruth Shepley in "It Pays to Advertise"; Lois Meredith of "Help Wanted" and "Peg o' My Heart" fame; Alexander Clark, in "The Princess Pat"; and G. Derr.

"Grouchy," a character comedy written by Mark Swan, and featuring Tom Wise will mark the first of the Mutual Star Comedy series, coming December 2.

Ruth Shepley's contribution to the series, "Admirers Three," will constitute the second Mutual Star Comedy. It will appear December 11.

"One Dollar Please," featuring George Derr will follow "Admirers Three" and "Every Lassie Has a Laddie," starring Alice Dovey, "Grimsey, the Bell Hop," featuring Alexander Clark, "The Girl Who Can Cook," featuring Lois Meredith and "The Honeymooners," starring George Derr, will follow.

Much War in Current Topical

War pictures are to the fore in No. 101 of the Mutual Weekly. The reel opens with pictures of the Battle of the Somme, General Joffre is seen leaving his headquarters to take personal charge. The sight of the refugees fleeing from Combles loses nothing of its pitifulness, because they are observed only on the screen.

There is a panoramic view of the beleaguered city of Bucharest. War as it comes home to this continent is seen in the "tanks" touring the streets in Montreal to inspire recruiting, and also presentation of the colors to the 207th Battalion at Ottawa.

War under the stars and stripes has two divisions in this issue. First come the pictures of the return of the Seventh New York regiment. Then there are pictures from the contest at the Polo Grounds, New York City, where 50,000 spectators see the cadets defeat the middies.

There are also exclusive pictures of Jack London, taken three days before he died; the Chicago Chrysanthemum show; the "Safety First" campaign inaugurated by the New York police, and the wreck of the automobile which killed six as an aftermath to the Vanderbilt Cup race.

Sorrow Follows Rejoicing

Word was received in New York, Wednesday, November 29, that death had taken Mrs. Harry Bugie, wife of the manager for Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service at Cincinnati. Mrs. Bugie had presented her husband with a daughter a week preceding her death. Mrs. Bugie was a Newark, N. J. girl, and her body will be laid at rest there.

Comic Series Surprises All

George Kleine's comedy series, "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," consisting of twenty one-reel subjects, featuring Harry Watson, Jr., have become so popular that a number of the Kleine branch offices have had to order additional prints to supply the demand in their territories. Some of the offices are now using three times the number of copies originally allotted them.

Scenario Writer Takes Lead in Problem Play

A company of players have left New York for Jacksonville, Florida, to produce a problem play, "What Becomes of the Children?" in which will be featured Cora Beach and Walter Shumway. The Garrick studios in Jacksonville have been rented and production was started on Monday, December 4.

Cora Beach, who plays one of the leading roles, is a scenario author of considerable success. She has written plays for Famous Players and other companies, among her scenarios being "Oriental Feathers" and "Maidie, the Dancer." Her pen is responsible for "Where are the Children?"

The play will be seven reels in length and will be completed in about one month.

Gladys Dore, formerly of the Thanhouser Company, is playing the ingenue role, while William Sullivan, also of the Thanhouser studios, enacts the juvenile lead.

Walter Stahl, who will direct "Where are the Children?" left New York on Friday, December 1, for Jacksonville.

A B C Booklet on "Daughter of the Gods"

The Fox press department has issued an attractive six-page booklet on the big production, "The Garden of the Gods." It contains a four-line poem for every letter of the alphabet, each one descriptive of certain points in the picture. At present this is being distributed at the Lyric theatre, New York, where the picture is running. It makes an ideal advertising booklet and should be of special interest to the exhibitor as a gift for the children.

Dramatist Thinks He Has Had a Vacation

C. Gardner Sullivan is in New York on what is supposed to be a vacation—the first in two years.

Mr. Sullivan is chief of the Thomas H. Ince scenario staff, and in the past year has written about one-third of the Triangle output. He is, perhaps, best known for his William S. Hart virile Western dramas. Just as an indulgence in versatility, however, he wrote the light comedy, "Peggy," which introduced Billie Burke to the screen.

A former Chicago newspaper man, he is so modest about himself that he has baffled the interviewers for days. He has, however, when not consulting with his play scouts who comb the New York market for material, been haunting the theatres in an orgy of playgoing. He is hurrying back next week.

"I haven't written a play for nearly two months," he said, "and I must get back to work again or blow up. Two months with nothing to do but superintend production, read other people's manuscripts and ride around in Pullmans is enough idleness for any man."

Problems Solved on Screen

The "Is Marriage Sacred?" series will be inaugurated by Essanay December 16. The first release will bear the individual title, "The Burning Band." In it a woman marries but does not tell her husband of a previous marriage to a crook. Then the crook turns up to blackmail her. Each of the "Is Marriage Sacred?" photodramas will deal with one of the home-destroying complications in married life, but will have a separate and complete story to tell. One will be released through the General Film Service every Saturday. Screen time approximately 33 minutes.

A Star Unto Herself

Ethel Clayton is to be the sole star of "A Law Unto Herself," an approaching World-Brady picture. Miss Clayton will be supported by Rockliffe Fellowes, Arthur Ashley and Henry Hull.

"The Perils of Our Girl Reporters"

"THE Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is the title of a new fifteen chapter series to be released on December 28 by the Mutual Film Corporation, each chapter constituting a complete story involving the adventures and experiences of the girl reporter on the metropolitan daily.

The author of the stories is Edith Tupper Sessions. Miss Tupper's stories are based on her own experiences and those of her friends, some of them representing actual happenings in the lives of newspaper women whose names are familiar to the public.

The plays will feature Earle Metcalfe, Zena Keefe and Helen Greene. The director is George Terwilliger and the producers are the Niagara Falls Film studios.

The girl reporter is assigned to involved political intrigues, apparently insoluble mysteries, obscure murder cases, and difficult interviews. The chapters will be released one a week for fifteen weeks, beginning December 28. The Mutual Film Corporation has arranged a novel advertising campaign.

One novel feature of the coming series "The Perils of Our Girl Reporters" is that the entire number of chapters has been completed in advance of the first release and that synopses of all chapters will be available for use in advance of the release of Chapter 1.

Kiddies Like Fairy Story

"Snow-White," picturized for the Educational Film Corporation, was shown Thanksgiving day in Rochester, N. Y., where it was received with enthusiasm by 2.000 children at a special performance. This picture, which is made up of and enacted by young folks, carried the children off in a rapture of applause that lasted for many minutes. Mothers who accompanied the little ones to see this picture seemed to be just as happy over the showing as the youngsters. In connection with the showing of "Snow-White" an elaborate prologue by 200 children was featured.

Richard Wernick Enters Independent Field

Richard Wernick, who for the past eighteen months has been branch manager of the Fox Film Corporation at New Haven, Connecticut, has resigned from that company to enter the state right field.

Mr. Wernick is of English birth, and although only twenty-seven years of age, has had many years experience in the motion picture field, both in the United States and England. He has several times crossed the Atlantic on buying and selling propositions, and for five years was president of the Manhattan Feature Film Company, with offices in New York and Syracuse. Mr. Wernick has thus a thorough knowledge of the commercial end of the motion picture business.

Mr. Wernick is about to make some important affiliation. Details will be announced later.

Jack London Photographed

The biggest scoop of the week in motion picture news circles is the work of Bertin E. Moisant who filmed Jack London for The Mutual Weekly three days before he died. Mr. Moisant happened to be in the vicinity of Glen Ellen, where the London ranch is located, and being a friend of the family, called upon the author.

Jack London was pictured just as he lived. He is shown driving a farm wagon, currying his favorite horse, feeding his blue-ribbon pigs, and lounging about the ranch house where his recent stories were written. The pictures are shown in Mutual Weekly No. 101.

Birthplaces of Democratic Statesmen in Current Newsfilm

By reason of their geographical propinquity the homes of Thomas Jefferson and Woodrow Wilson are shown in the same issue of Gaumont's "See America First," called "Picturesque Virginia."

There are a number of views which give an excellent idea of the home of Thomas Jefferson. The monument to him is shown, commemorating his purchase of Louisiana.

In the picture of Augusta County the camera man paid particular attention to the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson. There are also some views of colleges and panoramas of the mountains and the valley.

On the same reel is a Kartoon Komic called "Curfew Shall Not Ring." His Satanic Majesty, the Spirit of Prohibition, and Demon Rum figure prominently in it.

Katterjohn Writes Indoor Photoplay for Record

Director Reginald Barker commenced work this week on a new Kay-Bee play with Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray as co-stars. It is a light comedy-drama from the pen of Monte M. Katterjohn and will be staged at the Culver City plant. In all there are thirty interior settings—a record which, it is believed, rarely has been approached in the history of play-production at the studio. Margaret Thompson is the other principal member of the cast.

"Social Pirates" Is Fox Comedy

"SOCIAL PIRATES" is the title of the first Foxfilm Comedy, and the release date is January 1. Charles Arling is the featured comedian, and he is supported by a large cast, including Amy Jerome, Annette De Foe, Olive Bruce, Martin Kinney, Bill Hauber and Frank Alexander.

The first Foxfilm release combines so-called polite comedy with just the right proportion of slap-stick.

The second release of Foxfilm Comedies probably will be "Chased Into Love," featuring Hank Mann, supported by Carmen Phillips. Mr. Mann is known to practically all followers of motion pictures as a comedian of undisputed laugh-producing qualities. Miss Phillips, in addition to her screen fame, is a singer of some note. The supporting cast is large and highly efficient.

Although the comedies have been completed for many weeks ahead, future releases will not be announced at present. It is the aim of William Fox to send to the screen only those comedies which meet with his approval from every viewpoint. His policy is to give to the public only those releases which he really believes are better than any others on the market, and he lives up to these ideas.

In connection with Foxfilm Comedies, Mr. Fox has announced a complete publicity service conducted independently of the general publicity bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. A weekly newspaper, the Foxfilm Comedy Service Newspaper Notes, dealing entirely with comedies and comedy players, will be issued and in addition a photographic service will be maintained.

Foxfilm Comedies are destined to supply a world-wide market, according to the plans of Mr. Fox. They will be released through the twenty-five branch offices of the Fox Film Corporation in the United States, and the Fox offices in the following foreign cities: Montreal, Que.; Toronto, Ont.; St. John, N. B.; Vancouver, B. C.; Winnipeg, Man.; London, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Leeds and Birmingham, England; Cardiff, Wales; Glasgow, Scotland; Dublin, Ireland; Sydney and Melbourne, Australia; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Sao Paulo, Brazil; Buenos Ayres; Rosario, Argentine, and Montevideo Uruguay.

Walthall Depicts Degeneracy of Drug Addict

HENRY B. WALTHALL'S superfeature, "The Truant Soul," will be released by Essanay on Christmas day. It is a special, the screen time being approximately two hours. The film will be handled by the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Arrangements have been made for exhibitors' displays of the picture at all of the branch offices of this service throughout the United States and Canada.

The story is from the pen of Victor Rousseau, the noted novelist. Mr. Walthall is depicted as a famous surgeon who is stricken with a craving for drugs. In fleet moments of his sanity the thread of love takes form. It grows and with it comes a strengthening of his mental power against his hidden menace. Finally the thread becomes the cable which anchors him again to normal physical and mental power, and the woman who brought life back to him.

This is exactly the type of drama in which Henry B. Walthal appears at his best.

Mary Charleson appears in support of Mr. Walthall.

Mutual Attacks Birth Control

The struggle of the man and woman against their natural instinct to become parents and their pursuit of Ambition, in preference to the reality of fatherhood and motherhood, is illustrated in the play, "The Valley of Decision," which marks Richard Bennett's third appearance in Mutual Star Productions. It was written by Clifford Howard and directed by Rex Berger.

Romantic Novel of Latin America Just Filmed

Exhibitors whose patrons like a brisk, romantic type of play, will be interested in the announcement that "The Phantom Buccanneer" is nearly completed, and will be offered through Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service. Gold mines, revenge and love affairs form an irresistible combination in this feature, which was adapted from the novel, "Another Man's Shoes," by Victor Bridges.

The action for a large part centers in South America in a mythical republic.

Richard C. Travers is an excellent hero for this type of play, and Essanay offers it as one of the best in which this star has ever appeared. Gertrude Glover appears in the feminine lead. J. Charles Haydon directed the piece, which will be released December 18.

Ella's Poem Filmed in Two Weeks

John W. Noble has completed in two weeks, "A Reverie in a Station House," a Metro-Rolfe feature play which is based on Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem. Frances Nelson is the star and after the camera had been turned on the last scene she went to Boston to visit her family.

June Mathis adapted "A Reverie in a Station House" for the screen. In it Miss Nelson plays the part of Louise Joyce, a girl from the country who meets with a tragic experience, and who is saved from taking the downward path, through the agency of one of the city's unfortunates. This last character is played by Sally Crute.

Raymond McKee has the part of Paul Vivian, a young artist, and Robert Whittier, will be seen as Mortimer Grierson, who deceives Louise into a mock marriage.

Many scenes of New York's Bohemian and artist life are given in this production.

First Film Favorite's Future

Miss Florence Turner has returned to the United States after an absence of two years. She arrived on Sunday, November 12, with her director, Larry Trimble. Miss Turner was one of the first stars in the picture field.

She has recently been seen in "Far From the Madding Crowd," "Doorsteps," "The Welsh Singer," "Redeemed," "Grim Justice" and "East is East," Mutual pictures.

"Great Secret" Advertised in Newspapers and Billboards

WHEN "The Great Secret"—Metro's new 15-episode adventure and mystery serial, in which Francis X. Bushman and Miss Beverly Bayne are starred—is released on Christmas day it will have been launched with one of the largest and most thorough advertising campaigns that have thus far been used in exploiting motion pictures.

More than $70,000 will be spent by Metro to attract the attention of the American theatre-going public to the early coming of "The Great Secret." Already upward of $65,000 worth of newspaper and billboard space has been contraced for; of this sum, $30,000 is for billboards alone, with boards that start "somewhere in Maine" and continue to the Pacific.

Full pages, half pages and quarter pages in the great newspapers of the big cities, following one another in rapid succession, will call the public's notice to the debut of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in a serial photoplay. In other communities the serial fiction story of "The Great Secret" will be used. No proper form of advertising—from 48-sheet stands down to the finest heralds for all fifteen episodes—has been overlooked.

Almost all of this advertising will be used to acquaint the public with the fact that "The Great Secret" shows Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne at their best and to naming the theatres where the serial can be seen.

W. Christy Cabanne, who adapted Mme. Fred De Gresac's story of "The Great Secret" for the screen, and is directing it at the new Quality studios on West 43rd street, New York, has himself written the titles for all the episodes thus far completed. More than half the story was filmed on December 1, and it is expected that the remaining seven episodes will be nearing completion after January 14.

Miss Bayne wears an average of six new gowns an episode, and every gown is what often is called—and so seldom is seen—a "creation." The gowns are from the world-famous houses of Lucille, Pacquin, Hickson and Henri Bendel.

Richard A. Rowland, president of the Metro Company, has sent word to all the Metro exchanges that a special staff, located in the home office, is ready at all times to lend any desired aid in helping the exhibitor advertise the coming of Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne in "The Great Secret." Special advertisements, in all shapes and sizes, are being prepared as exhibitor hints and helps. A news-sheet will be devoted to each separate episode in the serial, with special publicity material for exhibitors' use. It is planned, also, to arrange a special musical score for "The Great Secret," something that never has been done for any photoplay shorter than the five-reel feature type of picture.

"Pidgin Island" Is Metro Offering for Christmas

"Pidgin Island," the picturization of Harold MacGrath's well known novel with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles, has been completed at the Hollywood, Cal., studios of the Yorke Film Corporation and will be released on the Metro program on Christmas Day.

International Will Release "Patria" on January 1

The International has definitely fixed upon Monday, January 1, as the release date for the patriotic photoplay, "Patria," in which Mrs. Vernon Castle is the star.

The story of "Patria" opens in Newport amid scenes of its most exclusive society and wealth, centers in and around New York, and reaches a conclusion on the Mexican border. The location for the thousand or more scenes required by the plot were selected by Louis Vance, the author, who was assisted in this work by Mrs. Castle, whose intense interest in the production has never flagged for a moment. To select these locations and create the proper atmosphere for the picture was not always easy, and sometimes the locations were changed in order that a better effect might be obtained, necessitating a retaking of the scenes. All of this consumed time and accounts for the postponement of the release date, as already mentioned.

Mrs. Castle and her company are now in Los Angeles, where some of the concluding scenes of "Patria" will be enacted.

"A Message to Garcia" Uses Sigsbee's Double

Bradley Sutton was selected for the role of Captain Sigsbee in Edison's production of "A Message to Garcia." Mr. Sutton possesses a remarkable facial resemblance to the naval officer whose ship furnished the United States armies with their battle-cry of, "Remember the Maine!" during the Spanish-American War. "A Message to Garcia" is scheduled for release through the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Service December 11. The story deals with the events leading up to the war with Spain rather than the war itself.

Tom Santschi Again a Villain

In the character of Jack Mentor, the brains and guiding force of a huge crime syndicate, Tom Santschi is given one of the best acting roles in his career in the new Selig picture now in the course of production by Colin Campbell at the Los Angeles studios of the Selig Company.

Proof of Mary Pickford's Perilous Popularity

THE matter of handling the crowds that gather to watch Mary Pickford at work on "location" has become an item of no small concern to the producers of "The Pride of the Clan."

When it was learned at Marblehead, Mass., recently that the screen idol would produce exterior scenes there for her new Scotch picture, the entire surrounding country laid plans to see her at work. The roads leading to the "location" became congested with automobiles daily and the local police proved incapable of handling the crowds. Director Tourneur soon found it impossible to go ahead with the production and a force of special police had to be engaged by his assistant to handle the eager spectators, who unintentionally spoiled many feet of good raw stock by getting within the camera lines. When finally the site had been roped in and the staging of the play was again resumed many among the large "audience," at the peril of life and limb, perched themselves upon housetops and other points.

During her stay at Marblehead Miss Pickford received hundreds of letters in each mail from her many friends requesting all sorts of information, ranging from how to become a film star overnight to how one can develop a dimple. With the assistance of two secretaries, the "Darling of America" is trying to catch up with her mail.

Humorous Historical Series

Gaumont Kartoon Komics are animated drawings made by Harry Palmer, the newspaper cartoonist. They are on the same reel with the "See America First" subject. Mr. Palmer, who is the originator of many cartoon characters, has now hit upon a series which he will portray under the general title of "Our Fathers."

The initial offering is "The Landing of the Pilgrims." The stern and creed-bound citizens who made Plymouth Rock famous when they landed on New England's rock-bound coast are dealt with. The following picture in the "Our Fathers" series will illustrate "Paul Revere's Ride." The cartoonist's license, which permits humorous liberties with the facts of history, makes it possible for Mr. Palmer to give a screen version of this celebrated event which makes it rank in humor.

Star Talks to Business Men

"The Motion Picture Industry" was the subject of an address by Richard C. Travers, Essanay star, before the Association of Commerce in Chicago. The association has launched a big campaign for greater commercial activity, and deems the production of motion pictures one of its salient features. Mr. Travers gave his experience in motion picture producing, and outlined the rapid development of the industry, and told just how its co-operation with film manufacturers could not only boost the latter, but also greatly increase the general commercial activity of the city.

Triumph for Film and Steamship Company

That the New York Herald has not entirely deserted the policy which made its personal column famous a decade ago, was proven recently when Arthur MacHugh batted four hundred with a publicity squib in the interests of B. S. Moss.

Arthur's tale carried a two-column head and appeared in the Sunday Herald of November 5th. It ran thusly:

"Great consternation was caused aboard the S. S. Baltic, of the White Star Line, before it docked November 4th at New York, when one of the passengers reported the loss of a jewelled garter. Marie Empress was the loser and she stated that her stocking supporter was the gift of an English Duke. Eventually it was restored by a London attorney and when he passed it to Miss Empress she deftly replaced it about her stocking without removing the latter, to the accompaniment of applause from all the longshoremen possessed of clear eyesight."

The Herald cut proved conclusively that Miss Empress did not cheat. She really has a stocking supported by a garter.

Fine Arts Western Studio Awakes Suddenly

The stages at the Triangle-Fine Arts studio are being enlarged, the light studio reconstructed and preparations generally made for a busy winter season.

Ideal working weather has inspired the directors to such a pitch of enthusiasm that these enlargements in the light studio at the plant have been made necessary. The pictures now being filmed include: "The Little Yank," by Director Siegman; "Jim Bludsoe," by Director Browning; "A House Built Upon Sand," by Director Morrissey.

Next week will see the beginning of several new pictures, and all of the companies will be working overtime.

Horsley to Desert East

With the idea of concentrating his attention upon one point, David Horsley has decided to center his picture-making activities upon his Los Angeles plant and to that end has about completed arrangements to dispose of his Bayonne, N. J., studio and factory, according to an announcement coming from his Los Angeles office. Bayonne has always been his headquarters.

Famous American Drama Will Be Ready in February

GEORGE M. COHAN begins this week the production of "Broadway Jones," which will be released in February through Artcraft Pictures Corporation. It will be the third release through the Artcraft channels, the others being Mary Pickford productions, "Less Than the Dust," which was publicly shown last month, and "The Pride of the Clan," which Miss Pickford has just completed for release in January.

When produced at the George M. Cohan Theatre, Broadway and Forty-second street, three years ago, "Broadway Jones" proved to be the biggest popular success in which Mr. Cohan ever appeared. He wrote it himself, staged it himself and played the stellar role. In the new studio where he will make his productions for the Artcraft service, he will be supreme, working hand in hand with his director. He will write the screen version, supervise the acting and in all particulars make the adaptations necessary to transform one of the best modern dramatic stories ever written to the motion picture.

"Broadway Jones," a drama, opens with scenes in New York, whither a young man from the country has come to spend his money and time trying to put the restaurants out of business by depleting their supplies for food and drink. Known as a big spender and a good fellow he cannot face the prospect of disgrace by bankruptcy, and deliberately engages himself to marry an aged widow of means.

When his friends turn their back upon him on learning that he plans to use this avenue of escape from his difficulties Jones is deeper in trouble than ever. The widow is persistent, but his self respect demands first attention. Subsequently, he falls heir to a gun manufacturing business which he intends to close up and travel again on high speed with a new fortune. On visiting the small town where the factory is situated he discovers that the gun business is the sole support of the community and that to discontinue the enterprise would work hardships on hundreds of persons. Furthermore, he is threatened by the workers. In such a situation Jones shows his true American self. He completely changes his life, falls in love with the pretty stenographer, straightens out matters with the wealthy widow, whom he did not marry, and rehabilitates himself and his fortune.

"I have some very definite ideas about pictures which I am eager to put to practice," said Mr. Cohan. "I have been doing a lot of experimenting."

When "Broadway Jones" was first presented on Broadway, one of the critics wrote: "There is no place to hear sterling and spontaneous American enthusiasm outside of a baseball part except in George M. Cohan's theatre, where 'Broadway Jones' was produced last night. There once were galleries in play-houses from which you could hear it come roaring. Now there are no galleries left and the seats of the 'gods' are empty, except in Mr. Cohan's theatre where whistles, catcalls and cheers come down from the top rafters heartwhole and true.

"It is a glad sound—and it is a great event, a Cohan first night. It is something that every real son of Broadway is proud of. George M. Cohan is an understanding man. Some people can live on Broadway all their lives and never know what the place really is until they go in to see Mr. Cohan."

Vampire Appears in Person and Creates Riot

Heralded as one of the most famous vampires of the screen, Olonova's appearance at Marcus Loew's Delancey Street and Avenue B theatre in New York was distinguished by one of the greatest demonstrations ever accorded a film favorite. Crowds packed the theatre and overflowed into the streets to such an extent that after the first night Police Commissioner Woods found it necessary to assign eight policemen to act as a bodyguard to the star.

In all her appearances Olonova was accompanied by her favorite Russian wolfhound, Baksheesh, a gift from Grand Duke Vladimir Boris of Russia.

Mutual Issues Pamphlet in Praise of Film by Linda Griffith

In exploiting "Charity?" the expose of graft in charitable institutions written by Linda A. Griffith, the Mutual Film Corporation has issued a pamphlet which cannot fail to appeal to the intelligent thinkers.

On the inside of the front cover is a foreword by John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual, in which he says "It is my conviction that the motion picture as to-day's foremost medium of publication has significant important public duties—obligations, if you please—to the causes of humanity. It was in such recognition of such obligation that "Damaged Goods," a photodrama which was destined to tear the mask from false modesty in behalf of a cleaner race was submitted to the public. If "Charity" lightens the burden of one mother, if it brightens the life of one child it will not have been produced in vain." Following this foreword is a story by Linda A. Griffith on "Why 'Charity' was Filmed," a synopsis of the photodrama and copies of letters from Theodore Roosevelt and C. H. Parkhurst praising the picture.

A portion of a newspaper page with the headline "Mother Finds Husband Dead, Kills Babies, Fears Orphanage for Children" marked to show the fact that "The Story of 'Charity' is told in your papers every day" makes an effective back cover.

With the pamphlet is issued a slip requesting opinions on this film. The many responses have demonstrated the real interest felt in Linda R. Griffith's picture.

With the Fox Film Companies

Carl Harbaugh, who is directing Stuart Holmes in his next Fox picture, has given his young daughter a small part. Miss Harbaugh refuses to be interviewed on the subject of her first screen appearance. She will have her first birthday shortly.

June Caprice's fifth picture for Fox is now well under way. The company has left for one of Florida's winter resorts for exteriors. Frank Morgan, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Grace Stevens and Tom Brooks have the supporting roles.

Director Otis Turner is putting the finishing touches on "The Island of Desire," a thriller, featuring George Walsh.

Director Richard Staunton also on the west coast is to have charge of Gladys Brockwell's next feature for Fox. At present he is engaged in cutting the picture just finished.

Changes in Titles and Release Dates on Bluebird Program

WHILE the same attractions as previously announced will constitute the Bluebird program for the remaining weeks of its first year of usefulness to exhibitors, there have been some changes in titles and, in some cases the date of release has been shifted in the interest of expediency. The present announcement, however, covers the definite status of Bluebirds for several weeks to come.

"The Honor of Mary Blake" is the new title applied to the Violet Mersereau feature first announced as "The Greatest of These." Edwin Stevens made the production and the release date has been set for December 18. This change was made for the reason that "The Right to Be Happy," originally set for December 18, could not be prepared in time and "The Honor of Mary Blake" was, accordingly, substituted.

"The Right to Be Happy" will be the release for Christmas week, and will be particularly timely and appropriate to the occasion. E. J. Clawson has made a screen version of Charles Dickens' immortal classic, "A Christmas Carol" and Rupert Julian directed the production now released as "The Right to Be Happy." Francellia Billington, Agnes Vernon and Harry Carter will be chief in Mr. Julian's support.

The attraction for New Year's will be Cleo Madison, in "Black Orchid," a feature previously referred to as "Flowers of Doom." This will be a Rex Ingram production with Wedgewood Nowell and Francis Carlisle chief in Miss Madison's support. Exhibitors who recall "The Chalice of Sorrow," in which Miss Madison lately appeared on the Bluebird program, will know what to expect from the forthcoming Ingram-Madison presentation—a feature of promised excellence, great beauty in photography and certainly likely to be conspicuous in dramatic art with Miss Madison leading.

George Hernandez has always appeared in the Lynn Reynolds productions of Bluebird's program, and the excellence of his character work has brought reward in that he will be the star of "God's Crucible" to be the January 8 release in this series. This attraction has previously been entitled "The Shriveled Soul," but the new and permanent caption will be "God's Crucible," with Myrtle Gonzalez and Val Paul featured in the company.

Dorothy Phillips, who is a current Bluebird attraction in "The Price of Silence," will appear in Bluebird No. 52—a screen version of Mrs. Wilson Woodrow's story, "The Piper's Price." Maud George, William Stowell, Lon Chaney and Clara Du Brey will be important members of the supporting cast.

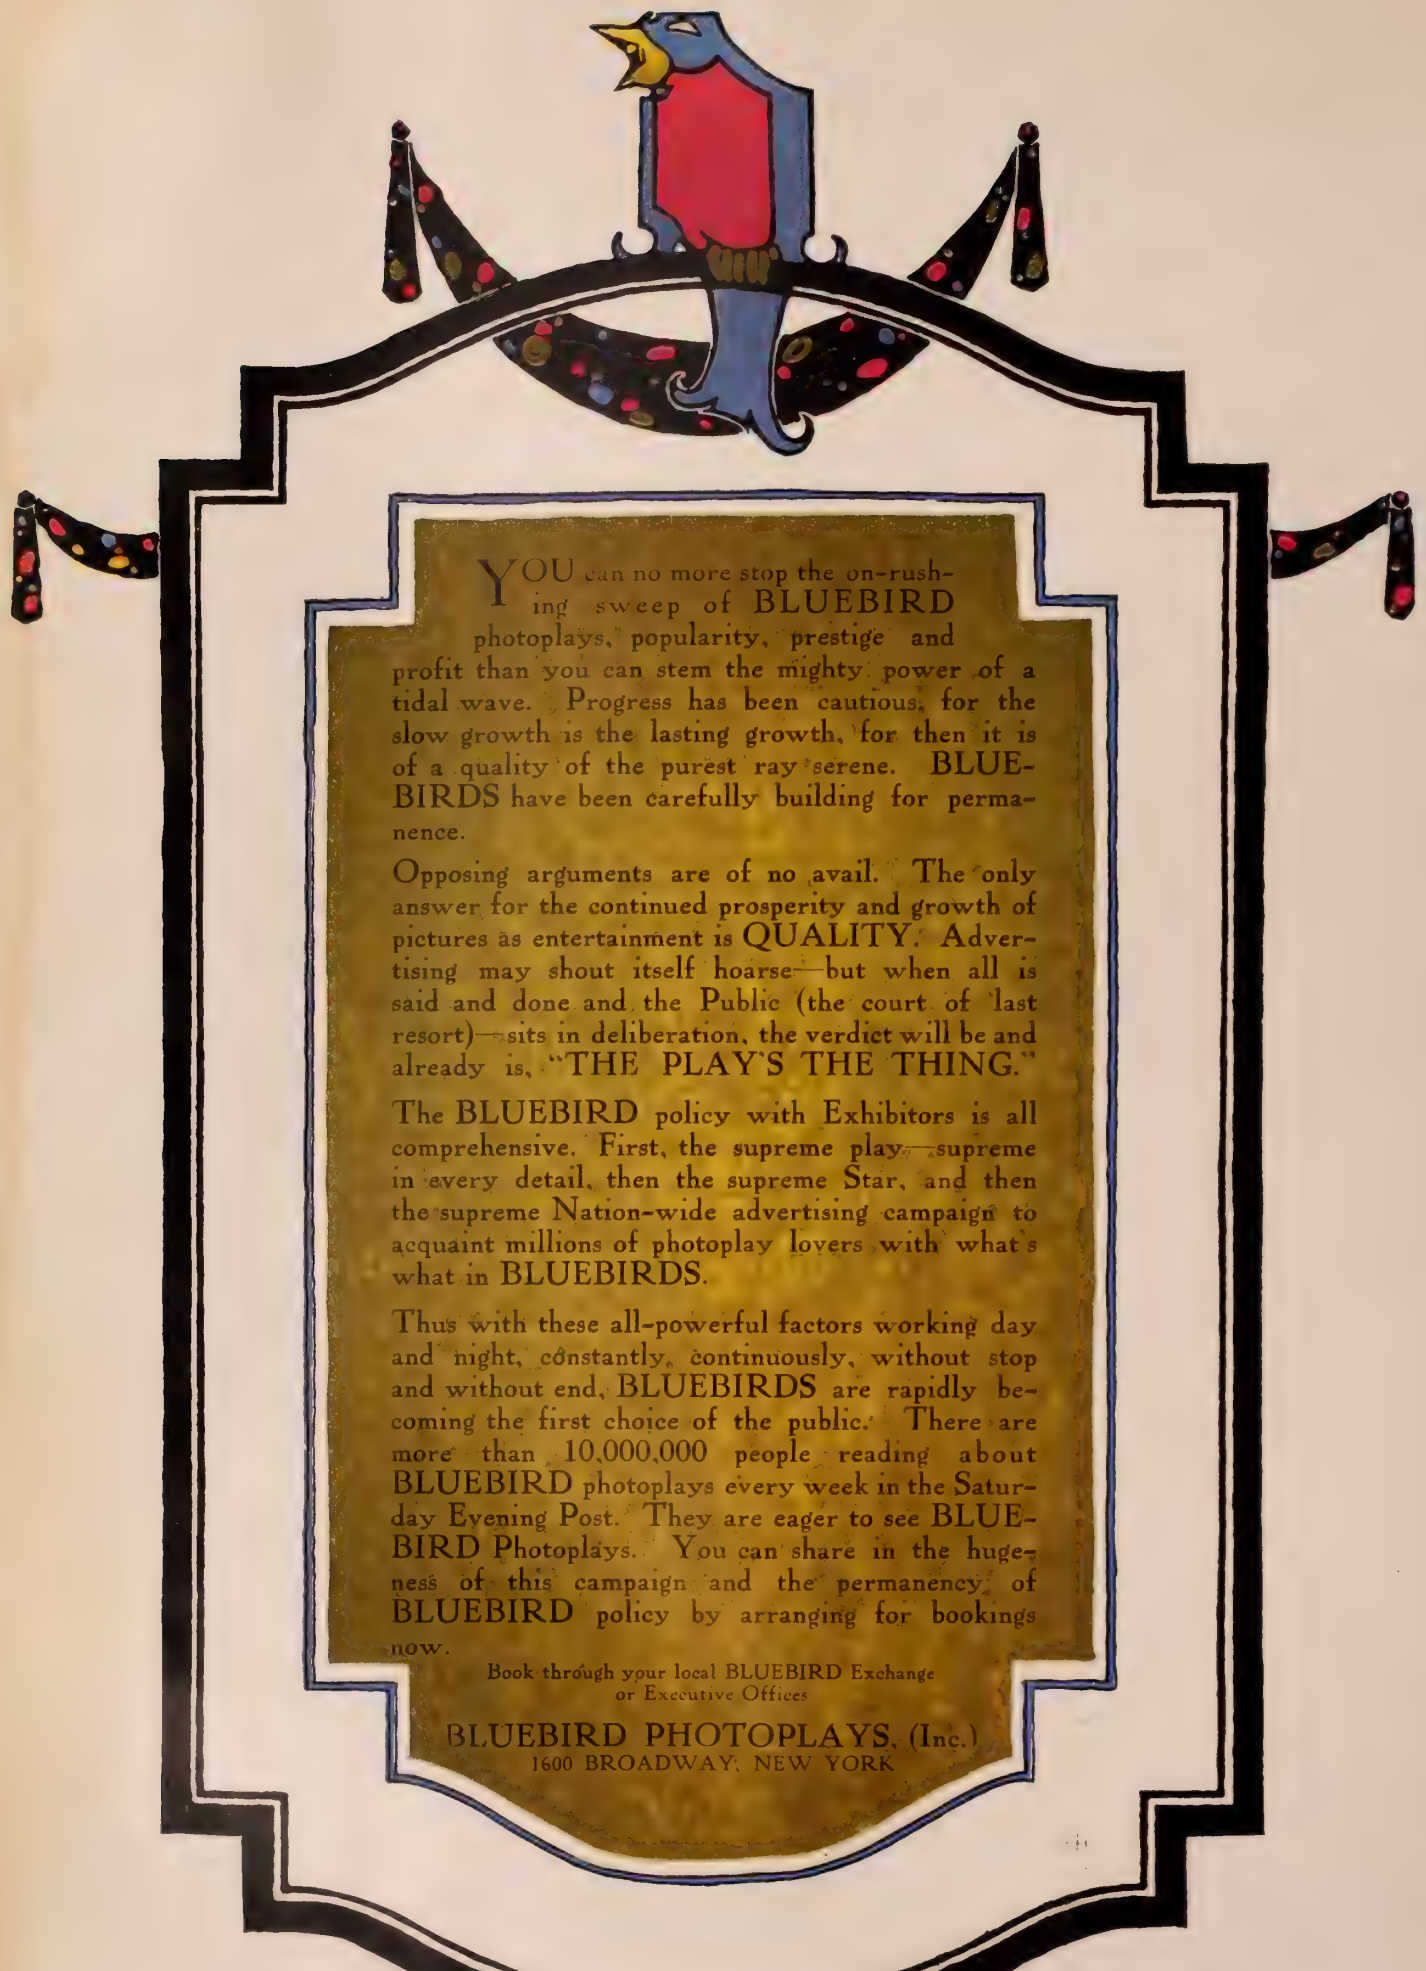
And while the program is going on, Bluebird's special release, "The Eagle's Wings," will take up its regular release date December 4, and be distributed by Bluebird branch managers throughout the country. Rufus Steele's industrial preparedness feature has attracted a great deal of advance interest, and its public showings are sure to benefit the Nationwide movement for industrial preparedness in co-operation with Government needs in the Army and Navy without the usual maudlin accompaniment.

"Pearl of the Army" Booked Solid on Fox Circuit

WILLIAM FOX, one of the largest exhibitors in the country, has booked "Pearl of the Army," Pathe's new serial, featuring Pearl White, in his circuit of twenty-one houses. This means that the serial has been stamped with the approval of one of the keenest and best known exhibitors in the country—a man who is himself a famous producer.

The past policy of the Fox houses has been not to book serials. Manager Abeles of Pathe's New York exchange, however, invited Mr. Fox to send his twenty-one managers to see the first three episodes of "Pearl of the Army" screened. Of the twenty-one, eighteen heartily commended the serial and requested bookings. Of the other three, two of them had houses close to other theaters which had already booked the serial. In consequence of this almost unanimous vote on the part of his managers, Mr. Fox has booked "Pearl of the Army" over his circuit for twenty-nine days.

Among these theatres are the Carlton, Newark, N. J.; The Terminal, Newark, N. J.; Fox's New Britain, New Britain, Conn.; The Riviera, Ninety-first street and Broadway, New York; the Nemo, 110th street and Broadway, New York; the Audubon, 162nd street and Broadway, New York; the Bedford, Bedford avenue, Brooklyn; The Folly, Grand avenue, Brooklyn; The Bay Ridge, Seventy-second street and Third avenue, Brooklyn; The Crotona, Tremont avenue, the Bronx, and the Jamaica, Jamaica, L. I.



Manager Abeles has also booked "Pearl of the Army" in many other well-known theatres, among them being the Majestic, at 185th street and St. Nicholas avenue, New York; The Bon Ton of Jersey City; the New Strand, Bridgeport, Conn.; the Dyckman, 207th street, New York, and the Sunset, Fifth avenue, Brooklyn.

As stated last week, twenty-one of Pathe's thirty branches have wired orders for additional prints to meet the unsual demand. Advertising material had been ordered in extra large quantities to meet the expected demand, but the supply has proved to be insufficient, despite the fact that the serial was only released this week.

This very large advance business, it is needless to say, is very gratifying to J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Pathe Exchange, Inc. It definitely proves that the Pathe policy of helping the exhibitor fill his house by arousing public interest through heavy advertising is appreciated by him and that the public has learned to expect Pathe serials to be of a uniformly high standard of quality. It is a fact that many exhibitors are never without a Pathe serial in their house and contract for them far in advance.

As long as the making of serials continues—so will their popularity.

YOU can no more stop the on-rushing sweep of BLUEBIRD photoplays, popularity, prestige and profit than you can stem the mighty power of a tidal wave. Progress has been cautious, for the slow growth is the lasting growth, for then it is of a quality of the purest ray serene. BLUEBIRDS have been carefully building for permanence.

Opposing arguments are of no avail. The only answer for the continued prosperity and growth of pictures as entertainment is QUALITY. Advertising may shout itself hoarse—but when all is said and done and the Public (the court of last resort)—sits in deliberation, the verdict will be and already is, "THE PLAY'S THE THING."

The BLUEBIRD policy with Exhibitors is all comprehensive. First, the supreme play—supreme in every detail, then the supreme Star, and then the supreme Nation-wide advertising campaign to acquaint millions of photoplay lovers with what's what in BLUEBIRDS.

Thus with these all-powerful factors working day and night, constantly, continuously, without stop and without end, BLUEBIRDS are rapidly becoming the first choice of the public. There are more than 10,000,000 people reading about BLUEBIRD photoplays every week in the Saturday Evening Post. They are eager to see BLUEBIRD Photoplays. JUST FOR FUN

JUST For Fun is our new title. We trust that our readers will not be deceived by the change. Probably at first glance it will be taken that this is a humorous page, but that isn't the idea at all. The funny part about it is that the page is printed.

H. H. Van Loan collided with a racing car out at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and has been laid up for a while. We admit that this is not just the right department in which to put this item, but this "fun" stuff is a serious proposition.

If it were not for the fact that we cover all the news in this great and glorious field each and every week, we would refrain from printing this brilliant report, because we never even received an invitation to attend the affair. However, comma, to get right down to it, it was a party tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Schenck, the latter erstwhile Norma Talmadge, by Harold Stern of Tarrytown, New York. Mr. Stern, not being a scenario writer and hence being original, held his party in the garage. It was a regular beefsteak affair and didn't conclude until the late hours of the morning. Naomi Childers, Alice Brady, Pearl White, Florence La Badie, Marguerite Snow, Muriel Ostriche, Grace Darmond, Jane Gail,, Viola Dana and Grace Darling were among those present. Anita Stewart was ill and couldn't go and Doris Kenyon had to hie away for snow stuff and cried bitterly therefor. N. T. Granlund, John Collins, Alexander and Nat Carr were the only male members eloquent enough to speak of their presence. Four A. M. was the hour when Muriel started dropping fish in everyone's coffee and ice down their backs, and so the story ends.

T. T. also says that Jack Mower was born in Honolulu but left his birthplace at the tender age of thirty-six. And on page 40 of the Motion Picture Studio Directory we find that Jack first saw the light of day in 1890. Which speaks well for the accuracy of Terry or, well——

Nothing daunted by Henry Ford's failure to stop the war, Thomas Ince is trying it with "Civilization."

Pete Schmid, the Teuton Bard, has been sporting a black eye recently, and claims as an alibi that a crab gave it to him. No one can accuse Pete of being conventional but he doesn't state who the crab was.

Speaking of misprints, which bears no reflection on Pete, William H. Tooker walks around with a full grown grouch on linotypers and proof rooms. In running his biography once a newspaper dropped a 't' and a line read "Mr. Tooker came to the silent drama after long engagements with sock companies." The trouble with this was that for a long time afterwards Mr. Tooker's fellow players asked him to procure rebates on their hosiery.

According to the players who are under the fire of Henry McRae's direction in the serial, "Liberty," Patrick Henry didn't know what he was talking about when he exclaimed: "Give me liberty, or give me death."

According to Terrible Terry Ramsaye, Lillian Hamilton will marry any man who will give her a house with a fireplace in it. We will gladly forward all offers to Lillian.

WHY REVIEWERS CHEW THEIR DESK CORNERS

The villain pens an anonymous letter.

The vamp flops into the hero's arms and so compromises him before his fiancee.

A character dreams over incidents past that he knows nothing about.

Bill Furber of Boston writes that the muse hit him immediately after seeing on the screen the first three episodes of "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

"The wants of the public are hard to foresee,
Hit it just right and you win to a 'T.'
"Maurice Costello, the screen's Beau Brummel,
Stands forth with a 'rep.' that will mean more than;—well,

"So mark well my words, folks, mark well what I say,
The picture he plays in is dead sure to pay.
And mark well the next lines and what they purport,
In bright Ethel Grandin he'll have fine support.

"You'll find many others who shine in the cast,
Sixteen great chapters thrill, first to last,
Thirteen new autos are offered the wise,
Excel with ideas and an auto's your prize."

Would anyone else like to hit Bill?

About Rhea "Ginger" Mitchell.

"Where do you stand in your profession?"

"Not in the Rhea."

"You are enthusiastic?"

"Lots of Ginger."

"Fond of flying?"

"Flying, Eh? (Flying A) Sure!"

"You want to be leading woman to Richard Bennett?"

"I've Bennett."

The following blows in from the pen of Ferne Zear, dedicated to Alice Howell, though evidently Alice wasn't its inspiration.

Twinkle, twinkle, pompadour,
Tell me, please, what you are for—
Up on Alice Howell's head,
Like a fuzzy feather-bed!

It is not quite fair, I say,
For you so to "hog the play,"
For when you have caught our glance,
Alice doesn't have a chance.

When she comes upon the screen,
You're the first thing to be seen,
And we cannot look away—
Tell me, have you come to stay?

Tell me, please, oh pompadour—
Tell me quickly, I implore—
How you happen to be there,
Spoiling Alice Howell's hair!

The Longacre Lampoon

All the News That Fits, We Print Longacre Square, N. Y., December 16, 1916

Just another little thing that can take its place with the pistol-in-the-top-drawer. This time its Sound. Most producers don't consider Sound, because they're dealing with the silent drama, we suppose. But the other day we saw a scene where a burglar entered a parlor through a window, scampered from corner to corner and back to corner again and all the time the gentleman in the next room didn't hear him. There should have been an explanatory subtitle telling that the gentlemen was deaf or else that he had cotton in his ears or something.

A better instance can be cited from another picture. This time the gentle art of murder was being practised in a room fronting on the street. The window shades were down but one of the windows was open. The murdering weapon was the pistol, and it wasn't equipped with a silencer, yet after its discharge none of the passers by were at all troubled. A convenient subtitle might have been inserted here saying "The report is thought to be the blowing out of an automobile tire." Then show the people hunting the tire. The situation is saved. Hurrah for logic!

Westerner's Ad Plan Interests

J. E. Willis, Western representative of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, states that in his territory he has inaugurated a highly successful method to interest exhibitors in the "Jimmie Dale Alias the Grey Seal" series, which is being released by the Unicorn.

"My plan is in connection with extending a personal invitation to all the leading exhibitors," states Mr. Willis. "We have hired several yellow taxicabs with two eight-foot banners on each side of the cab reading: '$10,000.00 Reward for Jimmie Dale. Read the Chicago Herald and 1,100 other newspapers for full particulars.' We are employing a regular uniformed policeman to accompany Mr. Berg and the writer in the cab," which calls at each theatre where our service is being used. This assists the exhibitor and our salesmen equally well when done.

Long Leading Lady with Licensed Companies

Sally Crute will shortly be seen in two different feature screen productions on the Metro program. She will appear in Mabel Taliaferro's support in "Jerry of the Emerald Isle," a five-act production directed by John H. Collins, and with Frances Nelson in the screen version of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "A Reverie in a Station-House," directed by John W. Noble.

In the picturization of the Ella Wheeler Wilcox poem, made by June Mathis, Miss Crute plays Mary, the girl of the poem, who has an important influence on the character impersonated by the star. In "Jerry of the Emerald Isle" Miss Crute's character, Beatrice Gaden, joins in the plot to capture the millionaire of the play and keep him from marrying the sweet Irish lassie (Mabel Taliaferro).

Her first stage experience was in a stock company in Denver with Amelia Bingham, Frederick Perry, Bruce McRae, and Harry Woodruff. Later she starred in her own vaudeville company, and then was selected to follow Mary Nash in the Western "Within the Law" company. She played leading parts in "The Deep Purple," "The Divorce Question," "Officer 666," with Douglas Fairbanks, and the dual role in "The Rosary."

Going into motion picture work, she joined the Essanay company in Chicago, playing in many productions with Francis X. Bushman. After six months' work there, she joined the Solax company in New York, and then went to the Edison, remaining there for three years and a half. Among her appearances have been Mme. Margot in a picturization of Balzac's "The Wild Ass's Skin," called "The Magic Skin"; "The Colonel of the Red Hussars," "The Song of Solomon," "The Match Makers," "The Widow's Breezy Suit," a two-reel comedy written by herself; and "The Light of Dusk," a Lubin feature in which Miss Crute played opposite Orrin Johnson.

"I shall not solicit any bookings on this trip," remarked Mr. Haas before departure. "I shall have my hands full attending to the contracts which Clara Kimball Young in 'The Common Law' and Nazimova in 'War Brides' have closed."

E. M. Givney, formerly with the General Film and High Art companies, has been intrusted with the booking of the Selznick productions.

The service films which Mr. Lust is handling in this territory will come under the banner of the Lust Exclusive Service, which includes comedies, serials and features. In addition to these he holds the States rights for "Purity" for the several States composing this territory.

Ince at Work on Another Spectacle

THOMAS H. INCE is at work on another feature which will be greater in proportions and theme than "Civilization." He has been working on the new production for several weeks, but its name, character and the players who will take part in it will not be disclosed until it is released. The release date also is withheld.

The music for the new spectacle is partly written and some portions of the picture have been projected for private inspection. The New York Ince office states that the title, the theatre and the date of presentation are already known.

The motives which have caused Mr. Ince's production of a new two-dollar picture are given as follows:

"The era of big spectacles has only just begun. The lessons of the past season have not been lost on Mr. Ince. Big, human themes are and will ever remain his ambition. Many big spectacles fall down in New York simply because the themes are not human; they are big without being interesting.

"If his new spectacle were ready now, it could be booked and sold just as easily as 'Civilization' was. The demand is overwhelmingly great—the demand, that is, for big, clean, heart interest spectacles on universal appeal. Pictures of the vampire kind form no part of Mr. Ince's mental ambitions. There is a lot of notoriety in this sort of thing and only quick money," neither of which rewards is the sort we desire. Our product has been always sufficiently worthy for the best 'program' extant, so we do not see why our features should drop."

Bays Buys the Royal in Newton, Kansas

G. W. Bays, formerly of Pratt, has bought the Royal theatre, Newton, Kansas, and will transform it into a modern house in every respect.

Newton has a population of 10,000, and the theatre seats 600. Mr. Bays will offer varied entertainments to his patrons. As well as pictures, he will book road shows for one-night stands, touring stock and vaudeville.

Thinks Well of Kid Film

"Snow-White," a four-part picturization of Peter Grimm's fairy tale, is meeting with success. Many exhibitors are booking this picture because of the increasing demand for children's pictures. The Eskay-Hariss Feature Film Co., of New York, who control the state rights for New Jersey, are booking it with some of the theatres where they are getting 15 to 35 cents at the box office.

Mr. Hariss, in speaking of this picture, said: "It seems almost impossible to obtain pictures of the type of 'Snow-White,' which is the sort of feature that mothers will delight in taking their children to see. I have noticed with interest the exhibitors' demand for this style of picture and immediately took advantage of the announcement of the Educational Films Corporation that territories were open for states' rights and secured the rights for the State of New Jersey."

Mildred Manning Not a Character Actress

Mildred Manning, who plays ingenue leads for the Vitagraph company, was erroneously listed in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS Studio Directory as being a character woman. Anyone who has seen the dainty actress in Vitagraph pictures knows that this was a mistake, and most people have seen her. She has had an extensive career in musical comedy and played in various Broadway productions for eight years.

Miss Manning's picture debut was made with the Biograph company where she appeared in such productions as "The Charity Ball" and "Our Poor Relations." Her height is five feet, four inches, her weight one hundred and twenty. She has brown hair and eyes, an olive complexion and the rest the picture can tell.

Exclusive Features in New Offices

Exclusive Features, Inc., are now in their new offices at 126 West 46th street. J. M. Goldstein, president, when asked why he moved, remarked that owing to the large demand for the Sarah Bernhardt film La Tosca, and the many bookings coming in for War's Women from upstate exhibitors, he was compelled to get closer to Grand Central Station, so as to be ready to make shipments without delay. The new offices are elaborately fixed, and special invitations were sent out to exhibitors to come up and review the Exclusive's picture, which will be released within two weeks, entitled Pamelia's Past, featuring Maude Fealy, Irving Cummings, Mignon Anderson, Harold Benham, Marc Andrews and others.

Fritzi Brunette Returns from Vacation

After an absence from screen work for several months, Fritzi Brunette has returned to the Selig Company to enact a leading role in an eight-reel Selig Special now in course of production under the direction of Colin Campbell. Miss Brunette arrived refreshed from a well-earned rest, and with a wardrobe calculated to break all vampire records to date.

Promising Program from Mutual in December

THE coming of "Miss Jackie of the Navy" will be accepted with interest by the large number of exhibitors who have realized on the important box office value of "The Pearl of Paradise," the first of the Mutual Star productions, featuring Miss Margarita Fischer.

The story of "Miss Jackie of the Navy" tells of a wild daughter of the noveau riche, who in order to win the heart of the man she loves, dons sailor's clothes and ships on board a battleship with him. After ludicrous and thrilling happenings, she saves her captain's life, and when her identity is disclosed she has won his heart.

Kolb and Dill will be released in a five-reel Mutual Star production, entitled "Lonesome Town," directed by Thomas N. Heffron, and the scenario written by Al Santell. This production was also used successfully as a stage production.

Harvey Clark, Harry Edmonson, Charles F. Spencer, Eugenie Forde and May Cloy are appearing in "Lonesome Town."

The story is of a town founded by an aged man, who disappears. His heirs make no claim to the income from the estate, and it finally goes to Hazy Fogg, a child of the town mothered by the villagers.

Into Lonesome Town comes a trio of tramps, who mask as wealthy men, and immediately start making love to the town widow, played by Eugenie Forde. The town constable, who is chief of police, night watchman, lamp lighter, superintendent of streets and holder of numerous other offices, is also in love with the widow.

The story ends with the discovery that the tramps are impostors, and have come to the town to garner the town founder's estate.

On Friday, December 15, "Our Boys at the Border" will be shown. This is a one-reel subject. This reel shows the routine followed by the regular army boys on the Mexican border. It is said to be full of excellent artillery and target practice, and the machine gun squads are shown in action.

On Saturday, December 16, "Peter, the Comic Poet," a one-reel comedy, and the third of the one-reel Star comedies, "One Dollar, Please," will be released.

"Treed," a two-reel Vogue comedy, featuring Rube Miller and the famous Vogue comedians, together with "Reel Life," a one-reel magazine reel, will be shown on Sunday, December 17.

Don't Speak English

None of the twenty-four Cossacks who appear in the Edison feature, "The Cossack Whip," supporting Viola Dana, could speak English. Neither could Director John Collins speak Russian. Nevertheless, the scenes in which these sons of the Steppes appear are among the most intelligently handled bits involving wild-riding horsemen ever seen in any picture. Director Collins refuses to tell how he accomplished the miracle. Perhaps "Cossack" is spoken by John when he is excited!

Jury Justice for Scenarios at Greater Vitagraph

One more advance marks the new treatment of film production at the Greater Vitagraph headquarters. Hereafter all scenarios considered for acceptance will be disposed of by a board comprising the scenario department personnel. Material to pass this board will have to undergo the most rigid scrutiny and pass every ordeal. This in behalf of the highest type of photoplay production that the American public can be afforded.

The Scenario Board, as it is called, is headed by Col. Jasper Ewing Brady, chief of the scenario department, and the following six scenario experts: Garfield Thompson, A. Van Buren Powell, Edward Montagne, Eugene Mullin, Tom Bret and Graham Baker. This board meets daily at 3 P. M. with Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph's authority on production. At these daily meetings every story considered for the screen is discussed and weighed for plot, action, adaptability, novelty, suspense, appeal, artistic merit, etc., and a decision made. This does away with any chance of haphazard selection, and results in material entirely worth the exceptional facilities of Vitagraph.

At any rate, it insures the scrutiny of seven trained minds being given every Vitagraph production before it can be regarded as fit to be presented to the production department. Furthermore, instead of making it harder for a meritorial story to "get by" the company, it insures just such a story its dues.

Bonny Scotland Faithfully Reproduced in Massachusetts

Maurice Tourneur has just completed the exteriors of "The Lass of Killean," in which he is directing Mary Pickford. The story is one of a Scotch fishing village, which was reconstructed with extraordinary fidelity to detail, at Marblehead Neck, Mass. An enormous amount of interest was aroused by the arrival of Miss Pickford and her company of fifty people, and Marblehead Neck suddenly found itself turned into a early winter pleasure resort. Even the local ferry between the mainland and the Neck, which at this time of the year goes for a nice long sleep, suddenly woke up and started to run excursions for those desiring to see how motion pictures are made. Every Scotchmen in the State of Massachusetts came along to try to find fault with the reproduction of the village, but unsuccessfully.

Old Pals Meet Unexpectedly

Thomas H. Ince was agreeably surprised this week when he was paid a visit at the Triangle-Ince plant in Culver City by William Eagleshirt, the picturesque Indian actor, who was his first leading man when he arrived in California six years ago to take charge of the New York Motion Picture Corporation's studio. The veteran Redskin dropped in unexpectedly while Ince was supervising the making of some scenes, and the two clasped hands in a vigorous renewal of old acquaintance, and recounted some of their experiences of "the old days."

Stories of "Seven Deadly Sins" Announced

THE McClure Pictures announces the stories for the first six episodes of its series, "Seven Deadly Sins," which is shortly to be placed on the market. The seventh and last of the pictures that will conclude the romance of the two principals is still being kept a secret by the company.

"Envy," the first, introduces Eve Leslie (Shirley Mason), a young girl who becomes jealous of Betty Howard (Ann Murdock), who is a prominent actress. Her lover, Adam Moore (George Le Guere), tries to rid her of her foolish envy, but to no purpose, and she finally meets the actress through a wealthy middle-aged man whose motives are not at all to be trusted. Still her envy continues and the wealthy roue fosters it until she is placed in a perilous position from which she is extricated only by the combined efforts of the actress and Moore.

"Pride," the second, brings Eve into play again as bent on marrying either wealth or a title. A banker (Holbrook Blinn), who is possessed of a checkered past, looks with favor on her, but Moore realizes that this fellow is not the man for her and after several thrilling situations he banished both the thought of money and a title from the susceptible mind of Eve.

Pearl White Poster for "Pearl of the Army"

"Greed," the third, shows the lovers possessed of a desire to make a killing in Wall Street. Nance O'Neill has the star role. An element of mystery is introduced by a murder which is fastened on the innocent Moore. He is sentenced to die, but Miss O'Neill in her powerful part, saves him from the chair and restores him to Eve.

"Sloth" brings in the Mexican situation by way of the militia. Moore is a member of the Guard and when ordered to the border Eve rebels at being separated from him. Then there is revealed before them various incidents of American history in which women have been the central figures. Charlotte Walker has all these roles. Through with the vision Eve sees the light and urges Moore to answer his country's call, while she herself goes to the border as a nurse.

H. B. Warner appears in "Wrath," the fifth number. He doubles as a Russian Grand Duke and his son, who prefers marrying an American for love than a sister countrywoman for money and power. Eve, who controls some munition works, does battle with the Grand Duke, who places war orders with her. She refuses to fill them and the manner in which this number is completed is said to be replete with thrills.

"Passion," the sixth play, introduces Clifford Bruce as the perfect physical specimen and for a time Eve is completely enamoured by him. But the plot goes on to reveal the giant of strength a pigmy of moral purpose and so she goes back to Moore.

Fine Arts Figures on Flight from Fogs

Unseasonable fog and rain on the coast will have no more terrors for the producers of Triangle-Fine Arts plays.

Taking a lesson from recent experiences in filming scenes outdoors between showers, the management has been prompted to build a very large light-studio. The south stage, the largest on the "lot," is to be converted into an enclosed studio, and an elaborate battery of mercury lights and improved appliances will be installed.

Four extra large sets can be built in the new studio at one time, and, combined with the old quarters, there is every reason to believe that the accommodations will prove ample for all the work likely to be undertaken.

Known Stars Congregate

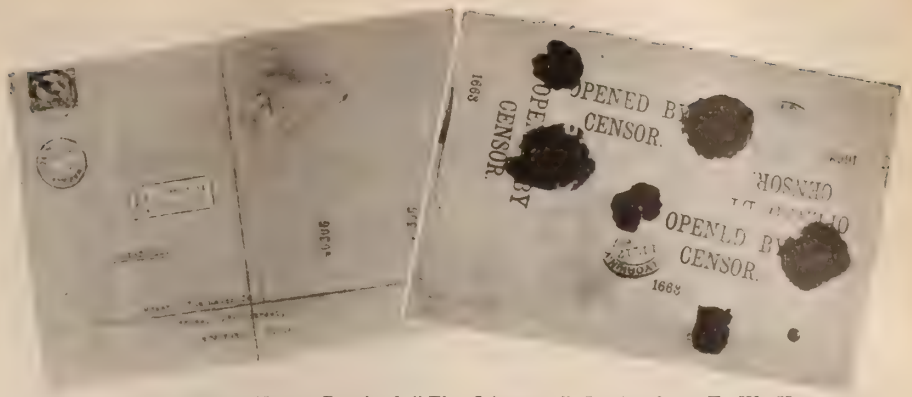
In the cast selected to support Jean Sothern, the star of the U. S. Amusement Corporation's contribution to the Art Dramas program, a picturization of "Whoso Findeth a Wife—," by J. Wesley Putnam, is Leo Delaney, who was a Vitagraph leading man for over eight years. He will play opposite Miss Sothern. Frank Crane will direct the production.

George Henry Trader will have important part in this Art Drama. Mr. Trader was for some time the leading supporting actor for Maud Adams, with whom he toured the country in such notable plays as "Chanticler," "Patou," and others of equal importance. He has also appeared in support of Mrs. Fiske, William Collier, and Katherine Grey.

The two other important parts in "Whoso Findeth a Wife—" will be entrusted to Ina Brooks, and W. J. O'Neil, both of whom have done notable work on the stage and screen. Miss Brooks played the last season with Julia Arthur in "The Eternal Magdalene," and the year before that was a member of the Little Theatre company, which did such fine work in Philadelphia.

W. J. O'Neil was one of Holbrook Blinn's company of players at the Princess theatre two seasons ago, when Mr. Blinn presented a series of one-act plays. He has supported Florence Lawrence in Universal productions, and played leading roles in several of them himself.

Racial Difference of Temperament Is Shown in Tastes of Americans and Latins



"The Italian producers and the French producers may put forth the legitimate pretention of being the leaders on the Latin markets, which are sufficiently important to satisfy their ambitions, but those who try to compete with the Anglo-Saxon productions, have sought adventure to satisfy the needs of the markets of the Anglo-Saxon countries," says Charles Pathe.

"There is such a difference between the mentality of the Latin people and that of the Anglo-Saxon people, that the negative which might be considered as a masterpiece by the former, will sometimes be judged, and with correct knowledge, by the latter as a puny and even ridiculous work, taking into consideration the American mentality.

"With a few rare exceptions, the Latin productions should be conceived and executed by the Latin and for the Latin; likewise, the American negatives should be made for Anglo-Saxons. Even when the latter are inspired, which is often the case, by the work of one of the French authors, the American motion picture adaptations will still be preferred to the French by the Americans."

Sherrill Engages Actress

Jean Stuart has been engaged by the William L. Sherrill Feature Corporation to play an important part in that company's forthcoming art drama, The Rainbow," in which Dorothy Bernard is being starred, and in which Robert Conness has the leading male part.

Paramount Exchange in Washington Issues Weekly Organ

THE Famous Players Exchange of Washington, D. C., distributors of Paramount pictures in that section, has begun the issuance of a house organ called Paramount News. J. Hesser Walraven, formerly connected with the main office in Paramount Pictures Corporation in New York City, and who is now the publicity manager of the exchange, is editing the new weekly, which is distributed to all Paramount exhibitors and their prospects in the exchange district.

The first issue is very attractively assembled, containing a large number of illustrations, showing the exhibitors what free publicity and advertising aids Paramount is distributing to their exhibitors throughout the country in their endeavor to have them present the Paramount Program in a more high class manner than before.

Articles on Picture Progress, Paramount Music, together with a large number of short stories, are contained in this publication.

A number of the contributions are by George M. Mann, manager of the Washington exchange.

Manager Edel of the Strand Pays Tribute to "Plow Girl"

SO impressed was Manager Edel of the Strand theatre in New York by the work of Mae Murray in "The Plow Girl," that he has written the following letter to the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in praise of both the star and the production which was recently released on the Paramount Program.

The letter is particularly significant as coming from the Strand theatre because of the fact that the uniform excellence of the program which is shown at that theatre requires a producion of exceptional worth to so impress the management.

The letter is as follows:

STRAND THEATRE
of New York

"Mr. Jesse L. Lasky,
"c/o Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co.,
"485 Fifth Avenue,
"New York, N. Y.

"My dear Mr. Lasky:

"Permit me to congratulate you upon your wonderful achievement in producing such a splendid picture as "The Plow Girl" with Mae Murray as the star, which we played here at "The Strand last week.

"The star's excellent interpretation of the character called forth unusual praise from our patrons, who, as you know, are among the most discerning photoplay followers in the country.

"Miss Murray's spirited delineation of the character role is among the best personal displays of ability I have witnessed in some time, and is a great tribute not only to her inherent talent, but to your capable management.

"With very best wishes, I beg to remain,
"Yours very truly,
"(Signed) H. Edel,
"Managing Director."

Tweedledum in Martial Comedy

In "Somewhere in Mexico," Tweedledum has humorously caught the military fever which is abroad in the land, enlists with the intention of removing Villa from the earth.

Tweedledum makes a very poor soldier, and the officers are utterly unable to keep him in line if a pretty girl happens to be anywhere near.

Asphalt Gathering Shown in Paramount Pictographs

A series of motion pictures have been secured by Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, taken on the Island of Trindad, one of the British West Indies, showing some of the most baffling problems known in nature, and which will be released in a forthcoming edition of this screen magazine. The first is that of the Asphalt Lake from which our principal supply is taken, and although the quantity amounts to thousands of tons annually, there is shown in this picture that there is no apparent evidence that the source will ever diminish.

These pictures show the enormous lake which ocupies a very considerable area of the island, and which is doubtless the crater of an extinct volcano which has partially cooled off, and this enormous mass of lava-like material, oozing up through the earth's crust, gives conclusive evidence of the valuable materials contained in the bowels of the earth.

Vitagraph "Saturday Evening Post" Advertising

Realizing the tremendous interest of the general public in the E. H. Sothern productions, Greater Vitagraph has appropriated a considerable sum for the exploitation of "The Chattel," "An Enemy to the King," and "The Man of Mystery," through the advertising columns of the Saturday Evening Post. The first copy, a full page, will appear in the issue dated December 16.

This full-page advertisement will be followed by three other advertisements of a half-page each, in the issues for the succeeding three weeks. Those half-pages will also dwell upon the screen triumphs of Mr. Sothern as exemplified by the three Vitagraph productions in which his marvelous art is to be preserved.

The copy for this far-reaching campaign —the sale of The Saturday Evening Post has reached the 2,000,000 mark—is being prepared by the home office advertising staff. The account is in the hands of the Van Patten Agency.

Novel Hits Expected to Go Well on Screen

ESSANAY has purchased the motion picture rights to "Skinner's Dress Suit," which made such a hit when it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post recently.

Bryant Washburn will appear in the leading role, and will be directed by Harry Beaumont.

On the screen the story will be a comedy-drama built upon the theme of an extremely ordinary citizen, who finds himself rising to wealth and power all because his wife compelled him to purchase a dress suit. The part of the timid cashier who feared to ask for a raise and feared more to tell his wife that he didn't get it, is a character that will make for amusing situations on the screen.

The purchase of this story is in keeping with Mr. Spoor's plan to produce as features only subjects which have made hits in novel form, as stage plays, or in magazines.

Paramount Demand for Short Comedies Exceeds Supply

CONTRACTS are complete by which Paramount will release exclusively, in connection with their other "little features," the productions of Klever Pictures, Inc., known as "Klever Komedies," in which Victor Moore will be the star. These comedies will be released bi-weekly, alternating with the single reel Black Diamond comedies which have been distributed by Paramount during the past two months.

Victor Moore, who has had a particularly enviable career both on the stage and the screen has been keenly interested in single reel comedies for the past two years. When he obtained his release a few months ago from the Lasky Feature Play Company, in whose productions he had appeared for Paramount, he immediately set out to organize a company to produce single reel comedies, and his affiliations were naturally with those concerns who were then negotiating to release through Paramount.

Mr. Moore was born in Hammonton, N. J., in 1876 and received his early education in his native town and later in Boston. His first public appearance was made as a "super" in Boston in 1895 and thereafter he appeared with a number of repertoire companies through the New England states. In 1897 he went with Arthur Sidman in "A Summer Shower" and the following year he played with John Drew in "Rosemary" on tour. Later he played in "A Romance of Coon Alley," "A Girl from Paris," in stock and vaudeville and "Change Your Act or Back to the Woods."

His first big hit was as Kid Burns, in "45 Minutes From Broadway" in 1906 and the following year in the same character in "The Talk of New York." This was followed by "The Happiest Night of His Life," after which he returned to vaudeville for a short period.

His first appearance on the screen was in "Snobs" and later as "Chimmie Fadden" and "Chimmie Fadden Out West." He was especially successful on the Paramount Program in delineating the type of comedy character as presented in the last two productions and was the means of extracting thousands of laughs from motion picture audiences weary of the slap stick style of comedy.

The first release, "The Best Man" will be given to the public on December 4, and will be followed every two weeks by a new subject. Mr. Moore has surrounded himself with an excellent cast of legitimate comedy players and will be assisted in the direction of these comedies by Harry Jackson.

"These comedies," said Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount Pictures Corporation, "are of the highest class and are not dependable upon burlesque characterization and the like or even upon that over indulgence of slap-stick work that is so prevalent in most comedies. The comedy in these pictures is directly due to the comedy situations which follow so rapidly after each other that there is nothing left for any audience to do but laugh, and laugh to their heart's content.

"Moreover, they are comedies of action which is the life germ of every comedy, backed by stimulating comedy suspense, which although rarely found in the comedies of to-day, but which is indeed the life stimulant of the new products. Every one of the productions contain these four fundamental requisites of good photoplay comedies, action, comedy, heart interest, comedy suspense and the ever necessary ultimate—comedy justification.

"I have always compared the comedies of the screen in the past with productions in vaudeville and burlesque, and was definitely decided in the minds of the Paramount officers that until that class could be gotten away with and someone would produce a class of high grade comedies, that until then, Paramount would not release comedies. Our waiting has been justified, for these pictures will fill the one single gap of the Paramount plan that has always remained open. No exhibitor who is building for permanency and with the quality pictures that Paramount is issuing can wish for anything more now, for besides the best four, five and six-reel subjects on the market we are offering him a magazine-on-the-screen, in our Pictographs, a weekly comedy in our Klassic and Black Diamond Comedies, a travel picture in our Burton Holmes weekly "around-the-world" journeys, and an animated cartoon in our weekly cartoons made by Bray."

Wise Anniversary Selection

Emmett Cornell, manager of the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., solved the problem of presenting attraction on the day of the theatre's third anniversary, which fell on Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Cornell had pictures screened for him by different exchanges with a view of selecting one that would worthily mark a big event in the history of his theatre and his selection fell to "The Prince of Graustark" after he had seen it at the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Exchange.

Activities at Metro

Considerable space in the Rolfe studios is being devoted to the erection of reproductions of "one-night stand" stages and auditoriums, used in Lionel Barrymore's new starring vehicle, "The End of the Tour," a romance of a barnstorming company. The entire touring company playing "Camille" is introduced, Mr. Barrymore is the Armand. Mary Taylor, Kate Blancke, Ethel Dayton, Frank Currier, J. Herbert Frank, and Charles Eldridge are in the excellent cast supporting Mr. Barrymore. George D. Baker is directing the production, with Charles Hunt assisting.

Frances Nelson has begun work on a picturization of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's poem, "A Reverie in a Station House," with John W. Noble directing. Fred Sittenham is his assistant. Miss Nelson has as her leading support Raymond McKee, who was seen in "The Wheel of the Law" with Emily Stevens, and with Mabel Taliaferro in "The Sunbeam," and Robert Whittier, an actor of sterling qualities.

Viola Dana is dividing her time between Wilkesbarre, Pa., and the Rolfe studios, making her production, "Threads of Fate," under the direction of Eugene Nowland, assisted by Harry Franklin.

S. Rankin Drew is directing the dainty little European star, Emmy Wehlen, in "The Belle of the Season," another picturization of an Ella Wheeler Wilcox poem. Alfred Raboch is Mr. Drew's assistant.

Ethel Barrymore, who recently completed the production of the screen version of Margaret Deland's novel, "The Awakening of Helena Richie," under the direction of John W. Noble, has begun work on a new production yet unnamed.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have returned from a vacation spent in Cuba, and have already resumed work in the production of Metro-Drew one-act comedies. The first two to be produced were written by Mrs. Drew on her vacation. John W. Evans, Jr. is assisting Mr. and Mrs. Drew.

Bennie Zeidman writes from the West, that in Hollywood, Cal., at the Metro-Yorke studios, Harold Lockwood and May Allison are playing the finishing scenes of "Pidgin Island," a screen adaptation of Harold MacGrath's famous novel of the same name. Fred J. Balshofer is directing the production. Lester Cuneo, Lillian Hayward, William Ephe and other favorites are included in the company surrounding the favorite players.

A one-reel photoplay, "Three Christmases," has been completed at the Popular Plays and Players studio under the direction of Burton L. King. Violet Heming and William Courtleigh have the leading parts in this little play, which deals with the advisability of putting aside money for Christmas. It will be released under the auspices of the Christmas Club. The bankers of the nation have chosen this means to inculcate in the minds of the people the need of thrift, and have chosen the Metro-Popular Plays and Players studio as the producing medium.

It is understood that five other productions, yet unnamed, bring the number of Metro plays up to eighteen, the largest any producing company has had in active preparation during the year just closing.

New England Managers' Association Elects Officers

The New England Film Managers' Association held their annual dinner at the Georgian, Boston, recently and elected these officers for one year: President, Harry Asher of Paramount; first vice-president, H. F. Campbell of Fox; second vice-president, R. D. Marson of Kleine-Edison; treasurer, Thomas Spry of Metro; secretary, Joseph McConville, Paramount. Trade conditions was the subject of the evening.

Sir Gilbert Parker Praises Story of War and the French People

IT has remained for an Irishman and a Welshman to write one of the most delightful and appreciative stories of the French people. The book is entitled "We are French!" and published by George Doran, New York City.

It has been picturized and was released Nov. 27th by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company under the title "The Bugler of Algiers." The authors are Perley Poore Sheehan and Robert H. Davis. Both are well known American writers. Mr. Sheehan was for a number of years editor of the Paris edition of the New York Herald. Mr. Davis is editor of the Munsey publications.

We like very much the tribute paid to the book by Sir Gilbert Parker and our opinion quite coincides with his. He says: "This is a rare, baffling, tender, eloquent book, with a joyous and yet wistful impertinence quite its own. The memory of a delightful hour and the charm of the treatment, the sentimentality, naked and unashamed, the flood of real human eloquence which pervade the little book, drown all else. After reading it I feel as if I had been sojourning in a wild orchard where small sweet fruit grow, plentiful and ruddy and good. I feel I ought to damn this book for certain things in it, but its naïve artistry, its reckless romance, bred in an intoxication of the spirit, compels me to say that I had a good time in reading it. Extravagant it is, but something in it makes it really true. Also there is a note of patriotism in it which sings on every page. Perhaps it is that which creates a response in the mind of the reader, at any rate in this reader's mind. But touching and eloquent and full of national spirit this little book is, and I am glad to have read it." The picture carries the atmosphere of the book.

Appealing Actress Meets with Romantic Role Again

WITH the first of Clara Kimball Young's Selznick-Picture productions, "The Common Law," playing throughout the United States and Canada, the second photodramatic achievement under her new management is now ready for early release. This is an adaptation of the Thomas Dixon novel, "The Foolish Virgin."

The heroine is a young public school teacher, who dreams of the romantic days when the world was peopled by knights. She is so imbued with the spirit of romance that when a strange young man rescues her from the advances of a ruffian she idealizes him as a regular Sir Gallahad. He is a mechanician with inventive talents. His invention is stolen and, embittered by the experience, he becomes a burglar. Knowing nothing of this, the girl falls in love with, and marries him.

Miss Young's superlative beauty and dramatic gifts have been aided by the work of the Director, Albert Capellani, and the splendid cast. Conway Tearle plays the leading male role and Paul Capellani, who has been seen in many of Miss Young's pictures, gives a strong and vivid impersonation.

Others in the cast include Catherine Proctor, Sheridan Tansey, the boy actor, William Welsh, Marie Lines, Agnes Mapes, Edward Elkas and little Jacqueline Morhange.

Beecroft Resigns from Mirror

Fred J. Beecroft has resigned as manager of the motion picture department of the Dramatic Mirror after five years of service. The resignation was prompted by differences of opinion as to the business policies in the department.

Isle of Man Duplicated in United States

Hall Caine has granted the Arrow Film Corporation exclusive picture rights on his book, "The Deemster." Great difficulty was experienced in making the arrangements because of the war and English censorship. It was impossible for Mr. Caine to come to America, and consequently negotiations had to be carried on by his son.

In order to have the production authentic it was necessary to take a great many photographs at the instigation of the author on the Isle of Man. When Hall Caine wrote "The Deemster" he had certain locations in mind, and the Arrow Film Company's representative made photos of these under Hall Caine's personal direction. The aid of the American Consul had to be enlisted to get the photographs through the censors as graphic plans and panoramic views accompanied them. When he finally succeeded in getting his material through, much time was spent searching for similar locations in the States. Finally it was decided that the only place on the American continent which faithfully portrayed the scenic requirements of the Isle of Man was Block Island.

A staff of carpenters and masons was sent to the island, and the replica of a Manx village was built. The houses used in "The Deemster" were constructed of stone and concrete throughout, and after the picture was finished they were sold to the inhabitants of Block Island.

Complete Change of "Reel Life" Releases

A complete re-arrangement of "Reel Life" subjects brings an almost entirely different set of subjects to the screen December 10th in "Reel Life" No. 32. First in interest perhaps is "Where Benedictine is Made." The pictures show the Abbey at Fecamp, France, where the monks have been making this distinctive cordial since 1510. The various processes are pictured, as well as an array of 600 bottles containing imitations that have been confiscated from time to time. The processes of manufacture is a secret.

"Radium, the Most Costly Element" is another interesting subject on this reel. The price of radium has not followed the cost of high living, having decreased 50 per cent. in recent years. It is now only worth $37,000 an ounce. The American method of manufacture from carnotite is shown.

"Working for Santa Claus" shows how America has prepared to handle the situation caused by the failure of toys owing to the war. There are pictures of toy factories both East and West, giving a good idea of the places which are exporting toys valued at two million dollars this year. There are also appealing pictures of children playing with toys.

"How to Dance the Two Two," a fashionable dance of the Winter, is demonstrated by G. Hepburn Wilson. This is the third and last of the popular dances shown on the screen, with the steps slowly illustrated, for the benefit of those who wish to have the latest terpsichorean evolutions from Broadway.

Variety in Metro Dramas and Comics for December

THE December releases of Metro Pictures Corporation consist of a quartette of photodramas and an equal number of one-act comedies. Leading the list of feature plays is "The Black Butterfly," to be released December 4, with Mme. Petrova as star. Life at the front during the present war is one of the themes of "The Black Butterfly." Mme. Petrova is supported by Mahlon Hamilton, Edward Brennan, Roy Pilcher, Evelyn Dumo, Anthony Merle and Violet Reed.

Next on the list is "The Stolen Triumph," which will be released on the Metro program December 11, and was written by Maxwell Karger and Julius Steger. David Thompson, assisted by P. Thad. Volkman, directed the production, which was made by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.

The story contrasts success and failure in the lives of Edwin Rowley and Stephen Hunt. Rowley, a poor playwright, submits his masterpiece to the great theatrical manager, Hunt, who produces it as his own. Penniless and heartbroken, Rowley wanders away, half-demented. Hunt's wife, when she learns what her husband has done, demands that he make reparation, and when Rowley returns after many years he finds himself heralded as a great playwright. The part of the struggling playwright is played by Steger. In the cast are: Clara Whipple, Clara Blandick, Harry Burkhardt, Marie Reichardt, Helen Badgley and Maury Steuart. The two last-named supply touches of child life.

Four comedies will be released in December, three of them starring Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the fourth being a Metro-Rolma one-act play, with Max Figman and Lolita Robertson in the stellar parts. "His Wife's Mother," a Metro-Drew comedy written by John W. Evans, Jr., is the first on the list, being released December 4. In this Mr. Drew is seen as a volunteer life guard at a seaside resort, and the complications are amusing in the extreme.

"Duplicity" is the Metro-Drew release of December 11. This is from the pen of Epes Winthrop Sargent. Unfounded jealousy is the basic idea of this comedy. The December 18 comedy release is, "He Wouldn't Wear Glasses," by Mark Swan. Max Figman is seen as Mr. Diky, of the glasses, and Miss Robertson as Madeline, the best girl.

The fourth one-act comedy of the month, completing the year's list, is "Her Perfect Husband," Jessie Saxton's playlet for the use of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew. The heroine thinks her husband too perfect, and his attentions begin to pall on her, as he seems too good to live, until she has a dream. Upon awaking and finding that the horrible things seen in her dream are not a reality, she resolves to accept the gifts the gods provide, and simply be thankful for "her perfect husband."

The popular Plays and Players studios were chosen in which to produce the propaganda play of the Christmas Club. This one-act play, called "Three Christmases," was directed by Burton L. King. It employs the talents of William Courtleigh and Violet Heming. Its idea is to develop the savings instinct and to teach frugality to people of moderate means. "Three Christmases" was written by Wallace C. Clifton.

Naval Board Sees "The Eagle's Wings"

Secretary William Rose, of the New York Association, representing the United States Naval Consulting Board, with members of the state organization, recently witnessed a special presentation of "The Eagle's Wings" in Bluebird's projection room. Mr. Rose and his associates have charge of the work in New York State being done by the national organization for industrial preparedness, working directly in co-operation with the Naval Consulting Board, of which Thomas A. Edison is chairman.

This is the organization now engaged in assembling reports from manufacturers wherever a spindle turns or a wheel revolves throughout the country; facts upon which Uncle Sam may base his calculations should war unexpectedly be declared in this country. Captains of industry are reporting on specially prepared blanks, telling the government the character and capacity of their plants now engaged in peaceful pursuits. In this way the Army and Navy Department will be able to calculate just how soon and in what quantities munitions and supplies may be provided in time of need.

"The Eagle's Wings" is a photoplay demonstration of what is now being done in munition plants actively engaged in filling European war orders. The Bluebird is indeed an illuminating and purely patriotic exposition of what "industrial preparedness" means—what this much discussed topic really represents in the welfare of the Union.

Twelve Short Features Every Saturday from Essanay

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, recently formed a new Essanay stock company, the members of which will play together continuously in a set of features planned by Essanay.

There will be twelve members, all chosen from among Essanay's best players.

It is Mr. Spoor's plan to form a definite company whose members are familiar with each other's work so that they will play more harmoniously together and form a unified organization. Marguerite Clayton and Edward Arnold have been chosen to play the two leading parts in the series.

This plan will also give the exhibitor, not only a definite idea of the subject being produced, but an opportunity to rely regularly on announcing certain players who will become known to the public as playing together. It is Mr. Spoor's aim to make these players, already well known individually, familiar to the public as an all-star stock company.

The first of the series in which this stock company will appear is a set of twelve stories bearing on the subject "Is Marriage Sacred?" These twelve stories are in no way connected except that they bear on this main topic. Each play will have its own title and be entirely distinct.

This is distinctively a series of stories and in no way a serial. Although it is believed that the spectator who sees one of these photoplays will wish to see all of them, yet the interest in one is in no way dependent on the other.

This first series has been written by Charles Mortimer Peck, and is being directed by E. H. Calvert.

This series is being announced as short features and will carry an approximate screen time of 33 minutes each. They will be released each Saturday beginning December 16 through the General Film Service. The first release is "The Burning Band," the second on December 23 is "Dancing with Folly," the third on December 30 is "Wife in Sunshine," the fourth on January 6 is "The Sinful Marriage," the fifth on January 13 is "When the Man Speaks."

While bearing on one of the deepest problems of the present day, the relation of husband and wife and children, the marriage and divorce situation, every one of these plays will be clean and wholesome and morally uplifting.

It is planned to continue the work of this stock company after the series is completed in still other features, holding the members as a unit continuously.

Verne's Story to Be Shown on Broadway

Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. has completed arrangements for the taking over the active management of the Broadway theatre at Broadway and 41st street ,on December 10 in order to present "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," a film version of Jules Verne's imaginative story of love and adventure beneath the depths of the sea.

Big Stage Successes by Popular American Authors Acquired for Screen

AN important acquisition of material for the motion picture screen was made recently when the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation purchased the rights to five stage successes, written by Augustus Thomas, A. E. W. Mason, Gene Stratton Porter, Frederic Arnold Kummer, Harvey O'Higgins and Harriet Ford. With the cry of the earth of material still ringing in our ears it is significant that these foremost producers on the Paramount Program should add to their list of purchases the works of such distinguished authors and playwrights.

"Freckles" which was adapted for the stage by Neil Twomey from the successful book of the same name by Gene Stratton Porter, was declared at the time of its presentation at the Grand Opera House in 1912, to have been distinctly a play of action. In view of the fact that the greater part of the action of the story takes place out of doors, it is considered to be exceptionally adaptable to screen presentation.

"The Dummy" will be remembered by thousands as one of the great Broadway successes of two seasons ago. It is the joint work of Harvey O'Higgins and Harriet Ford. It will be remembered that "The Dummy" is a youth who pretends to be a mute in order to rescue a little girl from a gang of kidnappers who have her concealed in a city house. The fearless chap gets into the house which the crooks have carefully guarded and pretends to be in league with them. The scene shifts to the country as the action becomes more dramatic and thrilling. As a stage production "The Dummy" ranked among the big successful thrillers, but at the same time it was relieved by many a laugh.

A. E. W. Mason's play "The Witness for the Defense," in which Ethel Barrymore starred at the Empire theatre in New York, in 1911, is another to be added to the list. The play was first produced in London in February of the same year, and made such a distinct hit that it was brought over to this country. A. E. Anson and Leslie Faber were in the cast in the New York production. The action of the play transpires in India and in England and is full of local color.

"Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," by Augustus Thomas, is the fourth play to be added to the list. It was a distinct success when first produced in 1905, and has been presented most successfully on many occasions since that time.

Frederic Arnold Kummer, author of many successful photoplays, is the writer of "The Painted Woman," which was produced at the Playhouse in 1913. The action of the play transpires in semi-tropical settings, a fact which again places the camera at an advantage over the stage as the production will be actually filmed in the South.

The purchasing of the photoplay rights to these five plays, coming so closely after the termination of the $100,000 offer by the Famous Players Film Company, indicates the fact that the producers are fully determined to leave no stone unturned in order to obtain as large a quantity as possible of the highest type of motion picture material.

Borgian Beauty Predominates

Herbert Brenon with players and assistants left New York this week for St. Augustine, to make the exterior scenes of his next Selznick-Picture, "Lucretia Borgia." The atmosphere of the quaint old Florida city is ideal for the period of the Borgias, and many striking effects are expected as a result of the trip. This will practically complete the photodrama, as only a few interiors remain, and the big sets will be constructed in the absence of the company, under the direction of George Fitch. Florence Reed's costumes in this production are the most beautiful this actress ever has worn.

New Poster Concern

Tom Quill, who for years has been in charge of the Poster Department of the Goes Lithographing Company, of Chicago, and is well known in film circles throughout the United States, is about to start in the lithographing business for himself. He has formed a company to be known as the Illinois Lithographing Company, of which he is vice-president. This concern will specialize in the production of motion picture posters. Their office and plant is to be located at 351 East Ohio street, and they will be ready to start business about the 5th of December.

Dickens' "Great Expectations"

JACK PICKFORD is very busy learning how to sweep floors, and Louise Huff is rapidly developing into a first class heart-breaker in preparation for their respective roles in the Famous Players adaptation of Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations" in which they are to co-star on the Paramount Program on January 8.

Miss Huff is to be Estella, the daughter of the escaped convict who has been reared by an insane woman for the sole purpose of breaking the heart of every man whom she meets, in revenge for the jilting which Miss Havisham received when a young girl. Jack Pickford is the illustrious Pip whose earliest memory is that of his brother-in-law's blacksmith shop in which he was boy-of-all-work except in those furious moments when his sister seized him by the ear and made him scrub the floor or perform some other menial task in payment for his keep.

Then came the terrible day in which he had fled to the cemetery in order to excape his sister's wrath, and had been suddenly confronted by the wicked looking escaped convict, Provis, who threatens him with instant death if he does not bring him food and a file with which to remove his chain and ball on the morrow. The arrest of Provis in the morning leads to a terrifying time for the boy when the prisoner is brought to the blacksmith shop by the soldiers, and poor Pip faces the double danger of being apprehended for aiding a convict to escape and of being beaten by his sister for stealing food. He escapes both of these predicaments through the good offices of the convict himself, and then there comes the fateful day when Jaggers, the London lawyer, arrives at the shop and the train of circumstances is set in motion which leads to the meeting with Estella and the demented Miss Havisham, her guardian. There follows the romance between the two young people and the remarkable revelation of Miss Havisham's having encouraged it for the sake of breaking Pip's heart.

The next important incident is the announcement of Pip's legacy and the fact that he is to be sent to London, "to be made a gentleman as befits his great expectations." Pip misconstrues the source of the legacy, because Estella is sent away to be educated at the same time, and he believes that Miss Havisham, having relented after banishing him from the house, has secretly decided to countenance the romance.

Later we find Pip in London, a thorough man-about-town, living in comparative ease and well supplied with money. He becomes definitely engaged to Estella after finding out where she has been sequestered in boarding school, and on that very day there comes the great blow of his life when he discovers that it is not Miss Havisham who is his sponsor, but Provis, the escaped convict.

"Great Expectations" is being produced under the direction of Robert G. Vignola, who made the phenomenally successful adaptation of Booth Tarkington's "Seventeen," in which Miss Huff and Jack Pickford won new laurels.

"Life of Our Savior" Heads Pathe's Holiday Offerings

NOW that the holiday season is at hand, Pathe has drawn up a list of its features that have proven of extra value during the past, and is offering them for special atractions. On all of them, Pathe exchanges have an extensive supply of advertising matter furnished at regular rates.

"The Life of Our Savior," in seven reels, Pathe-colored, is now ready for release, and this heads the long list of specials. This has proven so popular with exhibitors that the original prints were worn out and new ones have been made. A new supply of advertising matter is also on hand.

Good Lively Short Reel Program from General Coming

GENERAL FILM SERVICE announces a second series of stories from the Essanay studios under the general title of "Is Marriage Sacred?" by the Essanay Stock Company composed of Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold and Thomas Commerford.

General Film Company's releases for the week December 11-16 inclusive are topped by "Twisted Trails," a Selig three-part Western drama, featuring Tom Mix, Bessie Eyton and Eugenie Besserer. This drama is followed by a one-reel comedy from the Vitagraph studios entitled "Accident is the Best Policy" which precedes the educating Selig-Tribune. Vivian Prescott is seen in "Her Sacrifice," a one-reel drama reissued by Biograph which closes the program for Monday.

Alexander T. Frank

The second of the "Black Cat Series" from the Essanay studios under the caption of "In a Looking Glass," featuring Nell Craig and Richard Travers will usher in Tuesday's program, followed by a Kalem single-reel comedy "The Icemen and the Artist," with the comedy quartette, Ham, Bud, Ethel Teare and Henry Murdoch.

Essanay's Canimated Nooz Pictorial uncovering inside stuff on the election exposed by the Canimated Nooz staff, Max Linder wearing his fourteen trunks of clothes and other interesting laugh producing topics are shown. Scenes about Long Beach, California, make up the other half of this offering. Then will come a one-reel Vim comedy and the 19th episode of Kalem's "The Girl from 'Frisco," entitled "The Stain of Chuckawalla," featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, followed by "The Honor of the Law," a Biograph drama in two acts featuring Irene Howley, which completes the program for Wednesday.

"The Menace" the ninth adventure of "Grant, Police Reporter," featuring George Larkin and Ollie Kirkby will be the first picture screened the following day. Vitagraph offers a one-reel comedy "Bears and Bullets" and Vim "What's the Use," a comedy of the same length in which Pokes and Jabs are seen.

"Pep's Legacy," a Vitagraph drama in three parts featuring "Sunshine" Mary Anderson. Then will come "The Midnight Express, an episode of Kalem's "Hazards of Helen." "The Road to Fame," a one-reel drama in which Robyn Adair and Virginia Kirtley are featured will close the program for the day and week.

Altogether there is a variety of film subjects in single reels, which shows the trend toward either an all feature bill or the exact opposite.

Live Wire Exhibitors

Brainy Theatre-Window-Dressing for the Passer-by

By M. Kashin

NO. I have not made a mistake in referring to your lobby as a show window. You are a retail merchant, if you are operating a theatre. And if you realized how much in money and pains is expended by even the smallest merchant on his "store windows," you exhibitors would wonder indeed. The theatre and the merchant have the same reason for maintaining good "windows" provided, of course, they are in the high rent zone, as most theatres are.

The showman who is not a merchant will in these days of keen competition have to give way to one who is. All the signs of the times point to such a culmination of the race for "exhibitor helps" which is stirring the whole trade today.

What would you think of a merchant who changed his windows only when it was necessary to clean them, or who when he got in a new lot of goods, just dumped them in the window in their original boxes, with the cover removed so you could see what they were if you looked close and read the label? Is not this just the sort of "window display" that is considered good enough by the ordinary showman of today? Yes, and by some very good showmen, who have not yet realized that modern merchandising methods are invading this business and forcing them to meet a competition that is good for them, if they will wake up and take notice.

For the picture theatre has perishable merchandise to dispose of, goods of the highest class that won't keep and have no value whatever unless the retailer makes it. The picture show manager can learn many lessons from the modern up-to-date window dressing of the stores on the same street. Stop and look into the store windows today and think what a world of pains have been expended, and realize how your lobby occupies just the same valuable space that is used by the store for its business getting.

To illustrate our points we show you herewith a display on Charlie Chaplin, in "Behind the Screen." You may say that everybody knows Chaplin. That merely to dump him in the window in the original package with a label is attraction enough, surely. If we can't convince you with this illustration that even Chaplin can be "sold" to buyers who for various reasons might overlook a less prominent display, we are willing to leave you unconvinced.

The pictures herewith show the center of lobby with a stage set, the "scene" showing Charlie Chaplin burlesquing his own stage hands. We have a sure "stopper" of the passer-by. A real spotlight is shown in the foreground, with high candle power nitrogen filament lamp replacing the "carbons," throwing a bright light on the group of stage hands made from drawings pasted on cardboard and "cut-out" where they appear above the shoulder line. We are told Charlie is getting $6.75 for every minute he turns the crank. A few "rules" framed on the back stage "Anybody Using the Words Dam or Hell will not be tolerated." "Pies Can Only Be Used to Throw, Not to Eat," etc., furnish an added laugh, and as we look up and see Charlie with his comic face and big feet sticking through the painted picture screen from behind on each side (with lamp rays making the painted screen from a painted lamp) on the banner, we experience a desire to go in and see his latest effort to amuse us. The scene shown is a set "stage" occupying the whole center of the lobby, with banner above, and cut-out figures against the back of set.

Any boy with mechanical genius can connect a motor to the crank of the dummy camera which Charlie is actually turning with real motion. Charlie is merely a cut-out, jointed at the shoulder and elbow, home-made by my usual method of drawing the outline and character lines of the face and filling in with colors to suit, and the more vivid they are made—the more attention it'll attract.

This is a laugh-selling window display, with a sample of the laughs right on the outside. Surely if you are started on the laugh outside you will want to go in and finish it. The exhibitor who wants to feature occasional pictures, and not keep his lobby continually changing, will find his ordinary display more noticed from the fact that people will come to watch his "windows" for a touch of novelty. To be on his toes and ready to take advantage of the big punch in the pictures which have it, is the idea we want to impress. Then he will "get there" and be known as one of the "live ones," just as his fellow merchant down the street, who has the fine store and the beautiful windows got his start by painstaking and being ahead of the others. These displays don't cost a great deal, and that cost, it should be always remembered, comes from 100 per cent. profits. The added patrons drawn into a theatre by its lobby display add no more to overhead or film rental—unless you get so prosperous your picture rental is advanced because of it, then, like the income tax, it is a burden you will be willing to have imposed on you.

Lobby of Midway Theatre Showing Banner Special Stage Set in Centre of Lobby and Crowds Attracted by This Novel Display

The Right Kind of Cuts

George H. Dodds, display advertising man of the World-Herald, Omaha, Neb., who has charge of getting the motion picture advertising for that paper, and Manager Thomas of the Strand theatre, Omaha, recently held in their hand a copy of the afternoon edition of the World-Herald. Although separated by blocks of solid business buildings, they were looking at the same page and the same picture on that page. It was a picture of Mary Pickford, as she appears in "Less Than the Dust."

It is wrong to say they were looking at a "picture" of this beloved star. They were looking at an obscure dark blot where a picture ought to be.

"Darn the luck," continued Thomas, getting back his breath. "Darn the luck, I say. The newspapers never print this cut right. They never print any of the cuts right. Here alongside it is the picture of a politician and you can even see the mole on his cheek. From this picture you can't even tell Mary Pickford has a cheek. Darn the luck!"

"Darn the people who sends us such cuts!" said Dodds. "Darn 'em, I say. Why is it they don't use a little brains, and have the engravers make cuts that will print on a modern, up-to-the-minute cylinder press. These print all right on the flat bed press of a country weekly, but on our high-powered cylinders, never! Darn 'em, I say."

All of which suggests that the theatre insist on getting a coarse screen cut for newspaper use, and don't mix your "program" cuts with those you intend using for newspaper "ads."

Philadelphia Manager a Diplomat

A stunt so novel that it gained several inches of live news space, top of page, in the Philadelphia Ledger, is worth quoting. Manager Stanley, of the Majestic Palace theatre, bought two tons of coal from a local dealer, who secured it from a non-union yard where a strike was in progress. Did he go to the mat with his union operators and argue that as he didn't know anything about it he should burn non-union coal in his house? He did not. He turned this black elephant into good-will and more patrons by a strategic move worthy a great general. This is how he did it.

The following sign displayed in front did the business:

"We bought from M. Weis, 1915 North Seventh street, two tons of coal.
When the coal arrived at the theatre we discovered it was Newton coal.
"We don't want it. Friday, November 10, we will give this Newton coal away. Bring your baskets and buckets and carry it home."

There were plenty of baskets and buckets, and it is certain the coal did not cost as much as was gained by that manager in local popularity.

A Variation of a Good Idea

Mr. and Mrs. Carl A. Mueller, the progressive managers of the Elite theatre in Waukegan, Illinois, have hit upon a clever way of combining philanthropy and good advertising.

Counterfeit Thanksgiving Poster Which Inspires Brady Salesmen

Last week they advertised the fact that they would admit any child to their daily matinees who would bring two potatoes. The result was that several barrels were filled to overflowing with potatoes. This week any child who brings two carrots or two onions will be admitted free, and next week one orange will be the admission price.

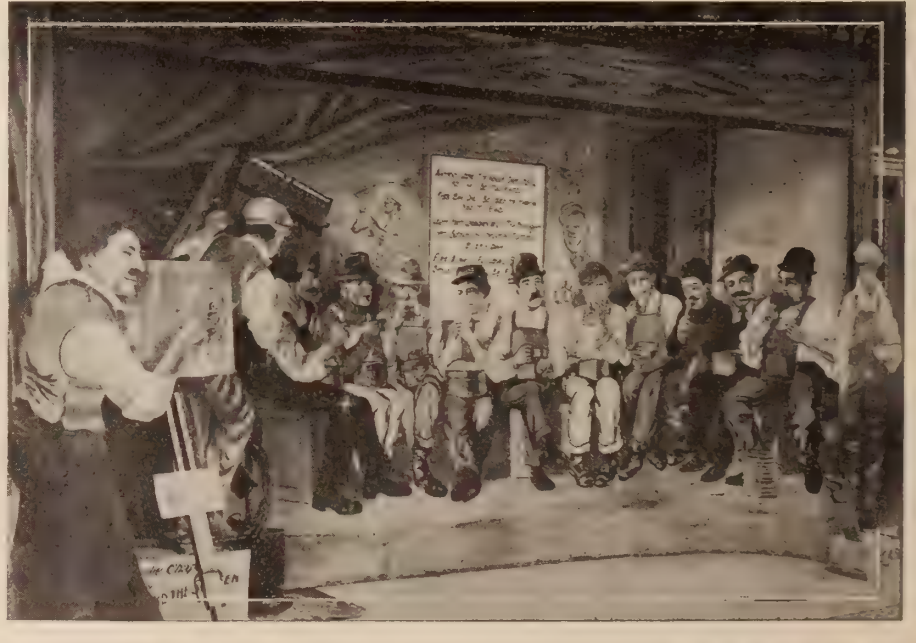
They have arranged with the grocers, the butchers and bakers of Waukegan to donate enough food for a big public dinner on Thanksgiving Day for the poor, at which dinner the vegetables they are collecting as an admission price will be served.

Salt Lake Theatres Use Dailies

All four of the Salt Lake dailies are now running photoplay pages and sections and the motion picture theatres are planting anything from three inches to quarter and half-page display advertisements with due aplomb and regularity.

Five-Cent House Reserves Seats for Features

Dr. Fred Demko, proprietor and manager of the Shenandoah theatre, on the corner of Shenandoah and Broadway, St. Louis, is giving his audiences the advantage of seeing big productions of more than ordinary length by resorting to the scheme of reserving his seats for these special performances.



His house is small and he must have two shows a night to allow all his patrons to see the feature, and this is the way he goes about it. He advertises the production heavily in plenty of time to get his patrons in the notion of seeing it; then he sells reserved seats for each performance, selling only enough to fill the house comfortably. In the case of "The Spoilers," which was booked for two days recently, he had all the seats for the first two performances sold out three days before the picture was to be shown, and more than half the seats for the later shows were gone also.

The first show, in a case of this kind, begins at about 6:30 and the second at 9:20. Besides avoiding the crowding and unpleasantness incidental to a rush, his theatre is comfortably filled, all the patrons are pleased to be able to see the beginning of the picture first instead of seeing the last two or three reels first—as often happens on ordinary occasions—and Dr. Demko makes a profit by increasing the price of admission for his feature.

Startling Publicity

Milwaukee business men were put upon their honor and, incidentally, had their curiosity aroused again recently by George Fisher, manager of the Alhambra theatre.

Mr. Fisher spread broadcast throughout the town a small sealed envelope, upon which was printed in bold, black letters:

Close-up of Novel Scene Set Up in Lobby of Midway Theatre, Montreal, With Moving Figure Representing Charlie Chaplin Taking Moving Pictures of His Stageheads "Behind the Screens"

"DARE YOU
To Give This
To Your Wife
UNOPENED."

Quite a few of the braver benedicts took the envelope home to their wives and waited in fear and trembling while she opened it, while others, not quite so brave, secured two of the envelopes and slyly opened one of them to find out what was its contents before going home to friend wifey.

When opened the envelope was found to contain a neat little card, on which was imprinted in script the following:

"Dear Wifey: I am going to take you to see Mary Pickford, the highest salaried star in the world, in her first production, "Less Than the Dust," in 8 acts, by her own company. Special music and an orchestra of 25. To be shown at Alhambra one week, starting Sun., Nov. 12th.

"YOUR HUBBY."

The result of this was no end of publicity for the Pickford picture, and the results in actual attendance will be keenly watched by the local photoplay managers.

"Summons" That Attracts Attention

Jay Emanuel, who manages the Ridge Avenue Theatre in Philadelphia, is one of the live ones who keep things constantly stirring. The use of an imitation legal summons, with big official red seal ,is always effective. Like spurious money, if the imitation is good none is going to pass it up. And that is the principle of sure money getting advertising. It must be seen and noticed.

The fill in is all printed, but at a glance looks to be actually handwritten, and therefore has a personal appeal, for people like to be singled out and receive something they know took pains and trouble to get up. If you will take the pains to reach the people they will respond. At any rate, the Ridge Avenue "packs 'em in" every day, matinee included, and the reason is their live wire manager, who "keeps everlastingly at it."

"The Secret Kingdom" Screened for Exhibitions in Baltimore

BY virtue of a special permit obtained from the Mayor's office, Branch Manager George T. Lenahan, of the Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchange in Baltimore, Md., was able to show the first three episodes of the new Vitagraph romantic adventure serial, "The Secret Kingdom," to Baltimore exhibitors on Sunday, November 26.

It was due largely to the efforts of Manager Wonders of the Wilson theatre, where the picture was run off, that the showing was permitted. Batimore usually is shut as tight as a drum on Sundays, and city officials not only do not look kindly, but actually frown, upon Sunday amusements. The combination of Manager Wonders working wonders, Mr. Lenahan's persistence, and the nature of "The Secret Kingdom" did the trick.

Charles Richman, who is starred with Dorothy Kelly in "The Secret Kingdom," was present. So was Arline Pretty, the dainty little Vitagraph lady who plays the role of Princess Julia opposite Mr. Richman's virile Prince Philip. At the urgent request of many of the exhibitors Mr. Richman related a number of thrilling instances that occurred in the filming of the serial. Miss Pretty added to this feature of the evening's entertainment by telling about several of her hairbreadth escapes.

All the Baltimore daily newspapers had reporters present and the news-gatherers interviewed Mr. Richman and Miss Pretty when the exhibitors finally let them go.

Manager Lenahan reports that, owing to the unusual conditions under which "The Secret Kingdom" will be released, he believes his office will pass all serial booking records.

All the fifteen episodes of "The Secret Kingdom" have already been made and shipped to the various Vitagraph V-L-S-E exchanges, so that exhibitors may see any or all of the chapters prior to booking them. In addition, the first two episodes are each three reels long and can be booked as a six-reel feature, followed weekly by the other thirteen two-reel episodes.

Manager Lenahan, an extremely conservative business man, wrote W. W. Irwin, general manager of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, as follows, "regarding the special 'Secret Kingdom' is more than good and most of the exhibitors present termed it excellent."

While by no means a Christmas story, "The Secret Kingdom" is to be released on December 25.

Wardes Thrill Thanhouserites with Shakespeare

IF you visit the Thanhouser studios at New Rochelle these days, all you hear about is "Frederick Warde in 'King Lear.'" The production of Shakespeare's play is to be released on December 17 through the Pathe exchanges.

Exhibitors are showing great eagerness to book the production, because of the wide publicity given, and because of Mr. Warde's reputation.

Ernest Warde, son of the star, directed the feature and father and son, both Shakespearian authorities, were careful to see that the story of Shakespeare's famous monarch was told in the finest possible manner. Edwin Thanhouser, himself a Shakespeare scholar, spared no expense in order to produce "King Lear" in all the regal splendor that the great play deserves.

The director also plays the King's Fool. Lorraine Huling is Cordelia, Lear's faithful daughter. Ina Hammer and Edith Diestal are the other daughters. J. H. Gilmour is the Earl of Kent. Others in the cast are: Wayne Arey, Body Marshall, Hector Dion, Edwin Stanley, Robert Whittier and Charles Brooks.

Ernest Warde has staged a gripping battle between the armies of France and England, a hand-to-hand struggle with swords and stones.

Several thousand persons were used in the production, and the scenic effects are unusually fine.

Weeks Takes Directorship of Drury Lane, Detroit

George W. Weeks, well-known exchange man in Detroit, Mich., has taken over the general directorship of the Drury Lane theatre, Detroit, Mich., and has appointed H. W. Smith as house manager. Mr. Weeks is district manager in the middle west of the Universal and Bluebird exchanges.

The Drury Lane is one of Detroit's newest theatres, located on Woodward avenue, near Grand Circus Park. Mr. Smith is a former theatre manager, having had charge of the Empire and Garden theatres in Detroit.

Cowboy Star Now Doing Heart Throb Stuff

Tom Mix, the cowboy star, has completed a three-reel Western picture, "Twisted Trails," and is now well under way with another entitled, "The Golden Thought," a drama carrying suspense and heart throbs. Eugenie Besserer, Roy Clark, and Baby Lillian Wade appear in the cast.

Moving Picture Films for South America

Arrangements are being made by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to exhibit in South America a number of selected films showing typical American manufacturing processes, welfare work in industrial institutions, and other details of economic life in this country. In recent years South Americans have become better and better acquainted with the facilities of the United States for furnishing them manufactured products, but it is felt that many of them are yet only slightly acquainted with the industrial development of this country. It is to further education along these lines that the Bureau proposes to make use of these motion picture films.

The commercial attachés in South America will have charge of the exhibition of these pictures, making arrangements to have them shown in the motion picture houses of their respective localities. The films will be obtained from the Bureau of Commercial Economics, an unofficial organization with headquarters in Washington, which has on hand a large number of films showing various phases of American industry. According to present arrangements between this Bureau and the Bureau of Commercial Economics, the latter is to supply the films which it thinks will be most educative and most interesting, and this Bureau will inspect them and perhaps make a further selection and send the films which it thinks most desirable to the commercial attachés.

It is hoped that the exhibition of these pictures will be introductory to a much more extended campaign by which American manufacturers may have their films displayed for advertising purposes. Plans for an arrangement by which this can be effected are being formed, but no definite announcement can be made until further advices are received from the commercial attachés.

Anti-Picketing Measure for San Francisco

At the recent general election the voters of San Francisco, decided in favor of an amendment to the existing municipal ordinances which is designed to put an end to picketing in the event of labor troubles. While moving picture exhibitors have not had any trouble of this kind for some time several have had experience in the past with pickets and lent their support to the measure. A strike of restaurant workers is now on here, and in several instances cafes near prominent theatres have been boycotted, with the result that the theatres have suffered as many do not wish to come near places that are being picketed.

Ten-Story Film Structure for Detroit

Plans are completed and it is now definitely assured that Detroit will soon have an exclusive building for film exchanges. The architect's plans call for a ten-story structure, absolutely fireproof. It will be in every way up to the requirements of the law and practically 80 per cent. of the exchange managers have agreed to take space.

Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay Adopts Striking Trade-Mark

KLEINE - EDISON - SELIG - ESSANAY make the announcement that they have decided to use a fac simile of a modern key as their trade-mark and the service will be known as the K.-E.-S.-E. (Keys) Service. The many valid reasons advanced for utilizing this particular form of trade-mark emphasize the value they place upon it. Already they are proving to exhibitors that the K.-S.-S.-E. Service unlocks the doors of opportunity leading to success. They also call attention that it "fits" the progressive program of the company.

This selling organization is made up of twenty-four branches, each supervised by experts, known and recognized as among the best in the field.

"George Kleine spent many years perfecting this organization, and it stands today a monument to unflagging industry, unswerving fidelity to its patrons and an index to all that implies quality in motion pictures," said an official of the company. "Mr. Kleine is credited with some of the huge successes in motion pictures that have attracted world-wide attention.

"Success repeated is the best evidence of merit, and the K.-E.-S.-E. can refer to a long record of victory as a forecast of what it will accomplish in the future. The new trade ensign will take its place amongst the leaders immediately."

Minneapolis Paramount Office Rushed

Since the inception of the Famous Players Star Feature Film Service of Minneapolis, Bert Barnett in association with his father has been the managing head of this exchange. Under his guidance its business has increased to such proportions that the company has been compelled to seek larger quarters several times. This exchange is the Northwest branch, handling Paramount Pictures for Minneapolis, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, with a branch office in Milwaukee.

Elizabeth Rejects Twilight Sleep

Special to Motion Picture News.

Elizabeth, N. J., Dec. 1.

THE city of Elizabeth had its touch of censorship of motion pictures during the early part of last week when Mayor Victor Mravlag had the production of "Twilight Sleep" reviewed before it was shown at the Hippodrome theatre.

Following a private exhibition, the censors reported to Mayor Mravlag that the picture was objectionable. The Mayor sought the manager of the Hippodrome and accepted the latter's voluntary offer to cancel showing "Twilight Sleep" in Elizabeth.

The Hippodrome manager, however, requested a detailed report of the reasons why the picture was found objectionable by the censors.

The report, in part, says: "We don't object to the picture because of any immorality connected with it. We find nothing in it that is lewd, vicious or suggestive. We do, however, object to its being shown because it misrepresents. Its representation of child birth by Twilight Sleep is not real or practical. It appealed to us more as an advertisement for corsets or fine lingerie. Those who paid their money to see "Twilight Sleep" here would go expecting to see something that was not altogether proper and modest. They would expect to find that about the picture which is indecent, and they would be disappointed."

The chairman of the committee was a young unmarried woman, while others among the censors were as equally authoritative on the merits and demerits of "Twilight Sleep."

Stanley Has Own Booking Office

Since the break came between the independent exhibitors and those of the Stanley Booking Company whereby two exhibitors' leagues are organized in Philadelphia, the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League has established a booking office of its own at 1235 Vine street. C. H. Goodwin, secretary of the League, is the booker for the new concern, which is on the co-operative plan. The League has now a membership of 140.

J. O'Donnell is the new president. Pathe's "New York" has been secured by the League for 100 days' bookings in Philadelphia. A new copy of the Electric Film Company's "Les Miserables" is also guaranteed 100 days in the Quaker City.

National Association of Motion Picture Industry Issues Emblem

The new emblem of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, adopted at the last meeting of the Executive Committee, is about to get into active circulation.

Three sizes of cuts have been made of it, and are to be furnished free to members of the National Association, and at the luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held last week, a resolution was passed unanimously approving the use of the emblem wherever possible.

Association Emblem Adopted by the N. A. M. P. J.

The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers includes in its membership the advertising and publicity men of most of the big companies, and these men plan to use the emblem wherever possible in advertising, on letter-heads and especially on posters. They will also take up for discussion with the heads of their companies the use of the emblem as part of the leaders on the films produced by their companies, where in advertising, the use of the emblem tends to become confused with the trade-marks of the companies, they will use, instead, a line reading, "Member of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry."

Providence Learns of Censorship Matters

The chairman of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, Cranston Brenton, at the request of the Mayor, the Chamber of Commerce and the Federated Women's clubs, addressed a meeting in Providence, on Saturday, November 25, at Sayles Hall, Brown University, on the subject of "Motion Pictures and Legal Regulation." On the following Monday evening he spoke to eight hundred men at the Forum of the Boston City Club.

At each place he emphasized the National Board's opposition to all forms of legalized, pre-publicity censorship, and was able to convince his audiences that such censorship is contrary to our American principles of freedom of speech and freedom of expression. At the City Club, Mr. Brenton answered for an hour, questions from the floor in regard to every phase of motion picture regulation, and defended the proposition that the public should be the only ultimate court of appeals.

On Tuesday, November 28, at the request of the Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Brenton addressed a board in Worcester, Mass., newly formed for the purpose of censoring the motion picture exhibitions of that city. As a result the proposed plan to censor all films has been abandoned.

The City of Worcester will now receive, through its Chief of Police, the bulletins of the National Board, and will exclude from the city all films not passed by the board; will insist that its eliminations are carried out, and will call on the Worcester Board of Censors to view only such pictures as may possibly be objected to because of special local conditions.

"Regular Theatres and Pictures Help Each Other"—Brady

WILLIAM A. BRADY recently returned from a brief tour through the Middle West. These tours, which are undertaken whenever Mr. Brady can absent himself for a short space from his two New York theatres, and the World Film Corporation, are designed to provide him with first-hand information regarding general conditions and their bearing upon the public at playtime.

"The prosperity which is everywhere," says Mr. Brady, "has become so well known that we may pass it over as fully established for a considerable time to come. Of course, it has helped both the moving pictures and the theatres, but the matter that attracted my attention more than any other during my recent trip was the unmistakable fact that the theatres are helping the pictures and the pictures are helping the theatres.

"Formerly we thought the movies were injuring the spoken play, and they probably were. But this condition has been reversed, and the motion pictures are making playgoers. Take foreigners, for illustrations. In Detroit, Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Chicago, and other cities, whose great industrial development has attracted hosts of workmen unfamiliar with our language, the pictures naturally were first to secure great patronage. In due course a large percentage of these seekers for recreation were drawn into the regular theatres.

"Ask any of the 'regular' house managers who watch their business, in any of the cities I have named, and they will tell you the foreign born element of their patronage is very much larger than it was formerly. This was a readily perceptible condition to me as a spectator, and I took the pains to go into it to some extent—sufficiently to convince me that the pictures were primarily responsible for it.

"On the other hand, we know that practically all of the patrons of the speaking stage are at least occasional visitors to the picture houses. Here and there you will find an individual who scorns this form of entertainment, but not often.

"For the small places the pictures are a special boon. As an example, neither 'The Whip' nor 'Life,' the two biggest spectacular dramas ever staged, could be played excepting in the very largest theatres, of which there are not many. In the case of the former the country could not be half covered, while with the latter the stages large enough to hold it were so far apart that a week must be lost between time.

"At the present time the Paragon studio is just completing 'The Whip,' which, in fact, is finished excepting for the railroad collision, which I believe is about to be 'pulled off,' with real trains on a real railroad. This, however, is not the main point. Both 'The Whip' and 'Life,' on a far bigger scale than they could have been built for any regular stage in the world, will now be open to showing not alone in the cities, but every tank town on earth.

"All this makes a sure thing of a prediction I made months ago—that the one-nighters in the near future will derive their amusements almost exclusively from the pictures.

"The screen drama will soon pass through another phase—the educational phase—and the sooner the better. Modern plays and stories of genuine worth are beginning to run low, and if we cannot at some time before long interest the public in the great stories of Sir Walter Scott, Wilkie Collins, Charles Reade, Thomas Hardy, Victor Hugo, Alexander Dumas, Charles Dickens, William Makepeace Thackeray, and the other old masters, I do not know what we are going to do."

Film Salesmen's Association Elects Officers

At the first meeting of the Film Salesmen's Association of Greater New York on Saturday, Nov. 25, the following officers were elected: Jack McNevins, President; Austin Interrante, Vice-President; Horace Fuld, Secretary; M. Weisman, Sergeant-at-arms. The meeting was adjourned after the newly appointed officers had been instructed to draw up a set of by-laws, all of which will be submitted to the members at the next meeting.

The charter members of the organization are: A. Interrante, B. Frank, R. S. Clark, H. Fuld, F. A. Lappen, E. F. Johnston, J. Goldstein, H. M. Johnston, J. G. Hallett, A. H. Corn, H. Danto, H. Ginsburg, E. C. Bullwinkle, J. McNevins, W. C. Carter, J. B. Zimmerman, W. Lamb, H. G. Segal, J. Feibush, R. Perry, P. Smith, M. Weisman, M. J. Kronacher, W. J. Weisfeld, S. Rubenstein, M. Westebbe, J. Weinberg, H. Erickson, C. Saunder, C. Johnston, C. Rosengarten, J. Schwartz, B. Schwartz, H. H. Thomas, I. Goetz, M. Felder, F. Goldfarb, W. Roosevelt, J. Conlin, C. H. Zerner, E. J. Drucker, H. Stern, I. Stremer, J. Knoepfle, J. Bellman, and W. G. Schmidt.

The Independent Opens in St. Louis

The Independent Film Company has established headquarters in St. Louis, at 401 Princess theatre building, under the management of I. Seaman, who says that his company will handle only states rights productions and other big features.

Essanay Gets Blondes for French Star

Max Linder has started work on his first picture, which will deal with his trip to America. The star experienced many amusing episodes crossing the Atlantic, not the least of which was the loss of his pink pajamas appropriated—perhaps by some souvenir hunter.

All the actresses gathered together to support him are blondes, as Max has determined that the contrast to his own dark hair and mustache is needed.

Not only will the mirth-maker have his own players, who appear in no other productions, but his technical staff, even to carpenters and property men, will be apart from other Essanay productions.

Max works with two interpreters, one his secretary, and the other acting as assistant director. An American will direct him.

Fortnightly Magazine on Screens

The program of the Universal now includes a very decided innovation, as far as that company is concerned. On Friday, the 24th, the first number of the Universal Screen Magazine was issued, and will appear hereafter every other week on the same day. This feature comes under no existing brand head, but has a brand name all its own, just as the Universal Animated Weekly has.

In fact, the Screen Magazine is a sort of "Animated Fortnightly," and bears the same relation to the Weekly, that a Sunday newspaper, with its special feature sections, its illustrated supplements, and its magazines, bears to the daily newspaper which prints the news. The Weekly is topical, and the Magazine is general, in its interest.

It is arranged and edited by the same staff which prepared the Animated Weekly, and no two issues will be in the least alike. The subjects which will be dealt with pictorially are such as are discussed in any up-to-date magazine. New inventions will be shown in operation, nature and animal studies will be presented, the work of our government in its various phases will be illustrated. The manufacture of various articles, and the picturesque side of industries will form a part of its contents. There will be beauty hints for the women "readers," and a humorous chapter for everybody.

The Screen Magazine is made up like a real magazine. It has a cover designed specially for it, a table of contents, and then come the articles, each preceded by a title page. It is as if some giant publication were being exhibited, while an unseen giant hand turns the pages for you. The cut shows Catherine Calvert, one of the prettiest women of the American stage, posing for the "Beauty Hints" of the first edition. She is the widow of Paul Armstrong, well-known author and playwright, and in addition to her other attractions is a decidedly popular actress.

The first issue is varied in subject matter, and the others as they appear will be as interesting as this one. It is quite safe to predict that the Universal Screen Magazine will be one of the most popular features of "The Mightiest Program on Earth."

V-L-S-E Salesman Differs from Figures Given by "News"

ALAN J. BACHRACH, who travels for V-L-S-E in Virginia and the Eastern part of North Carolina, sends MOTION PICTURE NEWS the following communication regarding an article appearing recently in the publication:

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 1.

Mr. Wm. A. Johnston,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City.

Dear Sir: I was interested in your article on the admission prices charged by motion picture theatres that was published in your magazine recently.

I am a traveling representative of Vitagraph V-L-S-E, Inc., and cover Virginia and the eastern part of North Carolina and conditions must certainly vary a lot in the different parts of this country or else practically all your answers to inquiries must have been from the very largest cities where there are a great many five cent houses.

I have been covering the above mentioned territory for eighteen months and I have two hundred and thirty theatres in same, of which exactly twenty-nine are five-cent houses. This is so far different from your reports that it is worthy of notice. My figures are not compiled from probabilities but from actual personal visits to every theatre in this territory and are accurate as to all theatres actually running. Of the twenty-nine five cent houses six are exclusively for colored persons and these all occasionally charge higher prices for special pictures.

Of course, I have no very large cities in my section, Richmond with a hundred and fifty thousand and Norfolk with about a hundred thousand, being the largest with about a dozen towns ranging from forty to twenty thousand, all the rest being smaller towns.

However, in spite of this, I am sure your figures are not correct as to the average as probably the exhibitors in the smaller cities and towns were careless about answering your inquiries and there are today very few five cent houses in such towns.

I have only a half dozen theatres charging fifteen cents all the time and none at all charging twenty-five all the time, but over three-quarters of these houses charge fifteen or twenty-five cents for special pictures and a large number of them have a special fifteen cent night (or more) each week and some few a twenty-five cent night.

Thought the above would interest you as it is so at variance with your figures and is an actual condition and not an approximation or guess.

Yours very truly,
ALAN J. BACHRACH.

"Island of Desire" Has Unusual Thrills

"THE ISLAND OF DESIRE," William Fox's new George Walsh play, is considered by those who have seen it the greatest sensational picture produced by the company. It will be released on December 18, on the regular Fox program. Opposite Mr. Walsh appears Margaret Gibson, an actress of considerable reputation.

Incorporated in the feature are four thrillers of unusual strength. In one the two leads are beseiged in a hut on a tropical island. Those attacking set fire to the hut and the pair are only saved by a furious hurricane which accompanies a downpour of rain. Later the couple is entrapped in a cave on the island, when an earthquake causes a mass of rock to cover the entrance.

Afterwards they barely have time to escape to the open sea when a terrific volcanic explosion breaks the island into bits. It sinks beneath the water's surface, while a downpour of steam and white-hot rocks threaten the lives of the refugees. Finally when they are aboard a boat they are again attacked by the villains of the first thriller from within and from without by a horde of cannibals.

Night Photography on Seacoast

Harold Lockwood and May Allison have completed Harold MacGrath's "Pidgin Island," a combined seacoast and underworld drama.

The making of this picture was begun in the Yorke studios at Hollywood, Cal., and finished at Monterey, where a series of sea coast scenes was obtained. During the picturization Producer Fred J. Balshofer used scores of persons in the "underworld" scenes and near Hollywood built a reproduction of Frisco's famous "Chinatown." In these scenes outdoor night photography was tried with remarkable results.

Mr. Balshofer believes that the public prefers seeing adaptations of books and plays in preference to original scenarios. Negotiations were recently completed with James B. Hendryx for the motion picture rights to his novel, "The Promise."

"Daily Shift of Program Will Soon Be Thing of the Past"

Observant Producer of Feature Pictures Prophesies Film Entertainment Everywhere Worthy of Solid Week or More in Each Theatre

"IT is a highly encouraging sign of the times," said William A. Brady, director general of the World Film Corporation, "that the list of theatres which run pictures for more than a single day is being constantly and steadily added to. For example, in several of these 'Bought and Paid For' has been shown recently for a week at a time, with results so satisfactory that the full week policy has been permanently adopted.

"Previously several of our plays, like 'La Vie De Boheme,' 'Husband and Wife,' 'The Velvet Paw,' 'Friday the 13th,' 'The Gilded Cage' and others, had been put on for two and three days in theatres where one had been the inviolable rule, always with the most gratifying outcome. There is every indication that the day is coming when full week engagements will be the rule in the best theatres of the large cities, and there will be at least an extension of time for good pictures, in the smaller places.

"This will be of distinct advantage to the manufacturer and exhibitor alike. It will relieve the latter of the helter skelter rush of changing his bill daily, and enable him to discriminate in his choice of pictures to an extent entirely impossible hitherto. Incidentally it will help to eliminate second and third rate productions for which the necessity for keeping theatres open under the present plan creates a market.

Means Encouraged Manufacturers

"The manufacturer of really good plays will benefit by the knowledge that his productions have a chance to reap the reward of merit. That is, if he produces a picture drama that the audiences appreciate, everybody will be able to see it in the knowledge that it is not going to be whisked into the theatres and out again before the public has time to find out what it is like.

"The objection that only very exceptional circumstances make it possible to run a meritorious picture more than one day will not hold water. In West Philadelphia, where no extraordinary conditions exist, the Belmont theatre, operated by the Felt Brothers, is conducted at present on the full week principle. Going back to 'Bought and Paid For,' the play did a fine business there, and I understand that such is the rule, not the exception.

"The managers told our representative that their patrons were delighted with the system. They used to complain that before they could learn whether a picture was good, bad or indifferent, it was gone. At present the thing works out precisely the same as with a stage play—if the pictures make a hit the house is crowded all week. A failure goes the other way, of course, but the exhibitor can avoid failures with reasonable certainty by the exercise of deliberation and care in the selection of his material, not being in the eternal rush of changing his attraction every morning.

Philadelphia Theatre Cited

"It does seem to be no more than reasonable to suppose that if the Felt Brothers can make a week stand of West Philadelphia, it can be done in all the cities of large size. At this moment, 'Bought and Paid For' (which is particularized because it happened to supply a current illustration) has been booked for all of next week at the Alhambra, Cincinnati, and a similar state of things is developing in a number of other places.

"Naturally it is very gratifying to have one of our photoplays in such demand, but far over and above this phase of the situation is the satisfaction of knowing that the production is doing powerful all-around missionary service in the cause of longer engagements for motion pictures."

"Jaffery" Runs a Week in Boston

An unusual honor has been accorded "Jaffery," the International's Golden Eagle Feature, in which C. Aubrey Smith and Eleanor Woodruff are the stars. "Jaffery" recently played a week's engagement at Gordon's Olympia theatre in Boston. Because of the insistent demand of the patrons of the house, the management has just engaged "Jaffery" for a second run which will also be of one week's duration. This is believed to be the first time that a feature has had a second run of a week in any theatre in Boston.

Boston gave a very cordial welcome to Grace Darling and Evelyn Fariss, who appear in the International's production of "Beatrice Fairfax," and who attended the movie ball and afterwards made personal appearances at the Beacon, the Modern and the Shawmut theatres. J. Lourie, general manager of the Beacon, has written a letter to the International thanking them on behalf of his patrons for the appearance of the stars in his theatre.

Springfield, Ill., Theatres Threatened by Free School Shows and Local Censorship

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., is divided on the question of the local censorship of motion pictures in the theatres. The city council has been asked by the School Club Council, a society of women, to pass an ordinance for the appointment of a board to review films and inspect the theatres of the city. The women who compose the membership of the council have been conducting Saturday motion picture shows for the school children in one of the parish houses. The theatre proprietors are up in arms and have the backing of a big majority of their patrons and the leading newspaper of the city, the News-Record.

The views of the motion picture men are well summed up in a statement of William W. Watts, one of the proprietors of the Gaiety and Vaudette theatres, and a leader among the motion picture men in Central Illinois. When asked for a statement, Mr. Watts said:

"The appointment of such a board, as provided for in the ordinance before the commissioners, would work a great hardship on the motion picture houses of Springfield. The women who ask its passage have been conductiong a show for the school children and they have paid no license either to the government or locally. They have at all times refused to work with us in giving Springfield the very best that is to be had in moving pictures. If the ordinance is passed it means that besides the national board of reviews and the Chicago censors passing on our pictures they will be looked over by the local board. It not only would be a hardship to the proprietors of the house but also to the patrons."

Denver Film Men Being Throttled by Legislation

DENVER is just now in the throes of a motion picture censorship struggle. Under the city's new charter its Commissioner of Safety and Excise, according to a ruling of the city attorney, has the right to issue, revoke and suspend theatre licenses at his discretion. If this ruling is upheld in the courts, any film that does not please the commissioner or his ideas of what should be, because of its subject matter, viewpoint or for any other reason, he can stop it.

Elliott & Sherman, who fought out a similar issue with Mayor Wallace G. Nye in Minneapolis and lost last winter, filed suit for an injunction at about the same time to prevent Commissioner Alexander Nesbitt, of Denver, from stopping the "Birth of a Nation." The case has dragged on without a decision, and now the city atorney, acting for the commissioner, asks to have the suit dismissed, in order that the new charter giving the commissioner new powers may be tested.

Elliott & Sherman have opposed the dismissal, and the city has filed a supplemental answer based on the new charter, and now the case is to be sued on its merits. The film business is booming in Denver, and Elliott & Sherman will have the backing of the trade. It is the biggest question that has been yet before the Denver film men.

Beaudine Writes Xmas Story

W. W. Beaudine has written and is producing "'Twas Christmas at Callahan's," a Joker slapstick with the usual cast, which includes William Franey, Gail Henry, Lillian Peacock, Milburn Moranti and others. It all pertains to Callahan going out to buy a Christmas turkey, and losing all the money where birds are being raffled off. He steels one from a more fortunate man.

Monmouth in Receipt of Serial Demands by Wire

WITH the announcement of the early release of Monmouth's sixteen episode serial, "Jimmie Dale, Alias The Gray Seal," the Unicorn exchanges throughout the United States have wired orders for additional prints to meet the heavy demand from the exhibitors.

In addition to that, there is a prospect of the necessity of establishing several sub-offices in the more thickly populated parts of the country to avoid delay in transit.

The number of exhibitors who booked "Jimmie Dale, Alias The Gray Seal" is particularly gratifying to Harry McRae Webster, president of the Monmouth Film Corporation, and Jules Burnstein, vice-president and general manager.

"Jimmie Dale, Alias The Gray Seal" is an adaptation of the stories of the same name by Frank L. Packard, appearing in People's Magazine, and about to be published in book form by the George H. Doran Company. It is portrayed on the screen by E. K. Lincoln, Paul Panzer, Edna Hunter and Doris Mitchell.

A newspaper campaign is now in progress, and a guessing contest for the public is included in this campaign. This guessing contest provides for the giving away of many thousands of copies of the "Professional Adventures of Jimmie Dale" autographed by the author.

How Will "Civilization" Be Received in Europe?

CONSIDERABLE interest is evinced as to just how the European countries and England will receive the spectacle "Civilization," now that it is about to be exploited on the other side of the seas by the Harper Film Corporation. It has been suggested that if "Civilization" be presented in the British Isles, the public there will object. But on the other hand its sponsors believe that the lesson of brotherly love taught will be eagerly greeted by even the peoples that are in the very grip of war.

As to the possibility of an order to prevent its exhibition being passed, the Harper Film promoters have little fear of that, except in Central Europe where the strict military rule of Germany, Austria and Bulgaria maintains a rigid censorship on all peace propaganda.

It is worthy to note that the film is now being edited for every foreign country in which it will appear. In respect to the subtitles this is only natural, but the scenes are being rearranged in accordance with the suggestions offered by foreign film experts.

"Civilization" is also within the reach of the many South American republics at the present time. Those who are well acquainted with the picture tastes of the Latin American peoples, believe that in these Southern Republics the spectacle will meet with instant success. This because its theme is of such world wide importance and for the fact that none of these republics is under any moral strain through participation in the war.

Ince a Successful Duck Hunter—Other West Coast Scenes

Unicorn Officials Report Results After Tours of Inquiry

IKE SCHLANK, president of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation which is distributing "Jimmie Dale alias the Grey Seal," by Frank L. Packard, takes sharp issue with motion picture producers who have declared that the day of the serial is passing. Reports received from Fred B. Murphy, vice-president and general manager of Unicorn, and from Treasurer P. A. Chase, who are now touring the country visiting the Unicorn exchanges, indicate that the demand for serials is increasing.

During the past week, Mr. Chase has visited the Unicorn exchanges in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and Buffalo. In each of these cities, special showings of the Jimmie Dale series were given for the benefit of exhibitors.

The Unicorn's twenty-one reels a week program includes one, two and three reel dramas, comedies and Western. It is the aim of Unicorn to make this program strictly a hand-picked one. That is to say that Mr. Schlank and a committee of screen experts examine every feature submitted, and reject anything that does not come up to the standard.

Aided by the extensive advertising campaign which has been waged on their behalf, the Billy West series of comedies are reported to be going over big. These comedies consist of two reels each. In the first, which is entitled "His Married Life," the agile Billy is seen as the acrobatic spouse of a suffrage-minded wife. Billy is literally a "hewer of wood and a drawer of water" until fate comes to his rescue, and he elopes with an heiress—almost. The second Billy West screen, "Boarders and Bombs" sets forth William's adventures when he becomes the paying guest of a fashionable boarding house. He pays now and then, chiefly then. In the third of the series, "His Waiting Career," Billy still finds himself immersed in seas of troubles.

Child Starts for California with Baby Buggy

"THE RIGHT DIRECTION," in which Vivian Martin sets out to "motor" from New York to California with a baby carriage, has been completed by the Pallas Pictures Company and will be released on the Paramount Program, Dec. 21. The supporting cast is an exceptionally strong one which includes the ever-popular Herbert Standing, Colin Chase, Alfred Hollingsworth and Billy Mason.

When Polly Eccles, the little girl who is impersonated by Miss Martin, finally reaches California—she does not have to push the baby carriage all the way—she finds employment in a mine. For the scenes which transpire at this mine, Director E. Mason Hopper took the entire company to one of the largest gold mines in California.

When Polly is left alone in the world with her baby brother, she is informed that the only chance of saving the ailing child from death is by taking it to California. Having no money, Polly sells that portion of the household effects which her father has not already sold for booze, and purchases a baby carriage with which she proposes to convey her brother to "California." The word means nothing to the child, and when she accosts a passer-by on a New York street and asks him the way to California, she fails utterly to understand his perplexity. Finally launched in the proper direction, Polly reaches the outskirts of the city when the front axle of the baby carriage gives way and she is stranded until Kirk Drummond, the son of a wealthy California gold miner, gives her a lift in his machine with which he is touring the country.

The adventures which befall Polly on her journey are both humorous, dramatic and thrilling, embracing encounters with hoboes, a race between Kirk's machine and a train, and a number of incidents that make the transcontinental journey a memorable one. Arrived at her destination, Polly becomes a waitress in the cook-house at the Drummond mine—until news of an affair between his son and a slum girl reaches the ears of old man Drummond and he has her discharged. There is a heated scene between the elder Drummond and his son, but matters are not adjusted until the old gentleman makes a startling discovery concerning the identity of this little waif which leads to a complete change of attitude on his part.

Much interest in Miss Martin and her motor buggy, has already been aroused in cities through which she passed.

SCREEN EXAMINATIONS

"My Official Wife"

(Vitagraph De Luxe Edition—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY GEORGE N. SHOREY

THE wisdom of re-issuing such a box-office attraction as this combination of stars and play represent can not be questioned. Miss Young has not had a greater opportunity to show all her charms than in this very play which was so largely responsible for her rise to fame. In the impersonation of a Russian nihilist, so clever that she would have accomplished the assassination of the czar himself had she not overplayed her hand, Miss Young carries her audience with her in full sympathy even to the glorification of murder itself. How she thrills at her sinister task! How she scorns the accommodating American gentleman who is like putty in her facile hands! How instantly she changes her expression from fear, aversion, horror, and contempt to the brilliant smile of the alluring woman who fascinates all men and makes them do her bidding.

Earle Williams and Clara K. Young in Vitagraph's "My Official Wife"

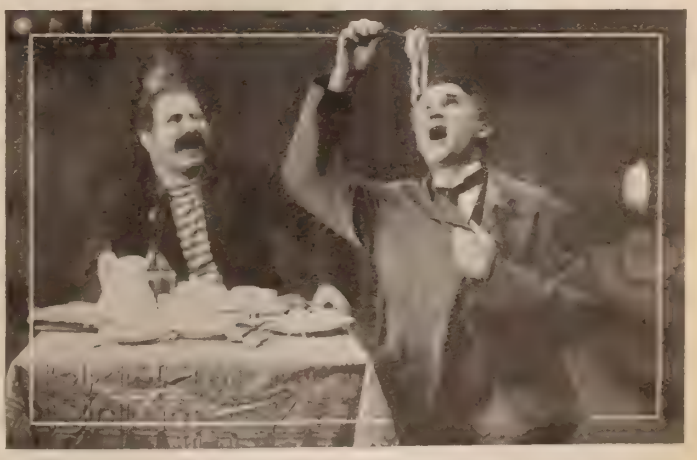
Without Clara Kimball Young, the story might not be so impressive—and without so good a story Miss Young might not show such fascinating character. Be that as it may, the happy combination, in its new "de luxe" edition, will be seen in every first class city, and most of the smaller towns of our country once again, and will draw more business wherever shown than on its first appearance. This is bound to be the case. And the important thing is, the audience will not be disappointed, judging the play by the best present-day standards.

The story concerns the visit to Russia of the Nihilist Helene Marie (Miss Young), who succeeds in inveigling an easy dispositioned American, Arthur Lenox, to pass her by the Russian sentries as his "official wife." Lenox (Harry T. Morey) has a real wife, but he thinks the fascinating woman who pleads that he save her from great inconvenience is the wife of a college chum, and presumes of course that once across the border he will receive the thanks of his old friend for his kindness. Helene Marie, however, without disclosing her identity, frightens Lenox with the threat of Siberia if his act be known; forces him to continue the deception and even finally accompanies him to the Grand Ball where she plans to assassinate the Czar. Lenox's American manhood here asserts itself, and he drugs his "official wife" and carries her back to the hotel.

Sacha Weletsky (Earle Williams), who is fascinated by Helene, follows and the final climax is attained by the elopement of these two, and the confession of Lenox to the chief of the secret service that he saved the honor of the secret service by preventing the Czar's assassination, proves his salvation from Siberia.

L. Rogers Lytton as Baron Friederich, Rose E. Tapley as Mrs. Lenox and Mary Anderson as Marguerite Lenox are included in the cast of well known favorites in support of Miss Young. Without these stars this would be an exceptional production. With them, it has a box-office and artistic value both.

"The Breaker"



(Essanay-K-E-S-E—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

TOUCHES of excellent humor and an excellent production put this picture, adapted and directed by Fred E. Wright from Arthur Stringer's story into the class of A-1 features. Although dramatic ultimately the humorous scenes greatly outnumber those of a serious nature, yet withal there is a high vein of suspense running throughout, so you are at liberty to smile or laugh at the humor, but still the action doesn't drag. "The Breaker" should and will no doubt suit any audience because of its composition.

We have yet to see a better characterization than that given by Ernest Maupain in the role of Piazzia, the Italian counterfeiter. Whether he be indulging in the elegant pastime of absorbing spaghetti or whether he be having his measurements taken at headquarters he reigns superbly humorous. An impossible mustache modeled on the fashion of the slapstick comedian gives him even a laughable introduction which he follows up immediately with a peculiar squint. Mr. Maupain is worthy to be featured.

The story tells of Widder, a down-and-outer who peddles filters for a living. He becomes acquainted with Piazzia on one trip just before the Italian's residence is to be raided by the police and Widder goes away carrying a suitcase full of spurious coins and notes. The rest of the picture is taken up with Widder's love affair with Alice Treadwell, an unsuccessful stenographer who is employed by the police after a while to find Widder's suitcase. After quite a bit of excitement everything comes out all right. Widder gets rid of the suitcase, the girl wins the reward and a romance ends.

The leads are taken by Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig and there are a good many quietly humorous scenes between them. There is also the actress who makes the conventional figure of the landlady unusually comical. And Piazzia's henchman does some fine work.

Practice Makes Perfect

"The Price of Silence"

(Bluebird—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

AGAIN do we borrow that comprehensive and neat little caption from the National Board of Review, "Family Groups." "The Price of Silence" is not for that sort of an audience. Which, of course, doesn't mean that the picture is void of value. Quite the opposite, it is full of value for the exhibitor who caters to a group of people inclined to look for peppers and spices in its entertainment.

Produced by Joseph De Grasse from a scenario by Ida May Parke founded on W. Carey Wonderly's story, "The Price of Silence" deals with the dangerous romance of a young girl and her half-brother, or at least you are led to believe that that is the relationship. But after all it isn't. And therein the picture weakens. The story builds up so strongly to a certain point and gets you worked up to a high pitch of excitement that you feel rather disappointed when it is discovered that the real half-brother died and another fellow was substituted. That point, however, is the least to consider, for on the whole the picture is strength and suspense personified.

The first reel deals with another ticklish situation. A young man and woman, who you shortly discover are not married, are forced to stop at a country hotel during a terrific storm. Before the night is over the man is struck by lightning and is killed. The village doctor is the only one to hold the girl's secret and he holds it until years afterwards he meets her married and happy in the love of a husband and daughter. The doctor wants to marry the daughter and the wife reluctantly urges his suit to protect herself. But daughter has a mind of her own and goes off to marry Billy—the Billy you believe is her half brother. Then comes the discovery and all ends well for the wife because the doctor meets death in a hair-raising automobile accident.

The rainstorm effect in the first reel is without a doubt superbly done, specially as to lighting. Combined with the events pictured in its duration it thrills every instant. And the automobile accident is another bang-up feature. Then too, Miss Parke's scenario is constructed excellently. The scenes are so arranged as to bring every atom of suspense to the high lights of the story. It grips throughout and weakens only in the one spot—and that had to be because the happy ending had to be.

Dorothy Phillips gives a well tuned emotional performance as the wife. Lon Chaney is a polished villain—obviously villainous. Vola Smith gives the best performance of her career as the daughter and Frank Whitson is good as the father. Jay Belasco, Jack Mulhall, Edward Brown and Evelyn Selbie comprise a good supporting cast.

"The Poisoned Dart"

(Kalem—Two Reels)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

THIS is the eighteenth episode of the serial, "The Girl From Frisco" and the scene is laid on the Los Alamos Ranch, and Colonel Ripley (Ronald Bradbury) arrives on the S. S. Equinox from the Malay Peninsula. He brings along the sacred cat of Perek, which he presents to Barbara Brent—he incidentally is tracked by a Malay (Barney Furey), and for some reason or another the Colonel's Japanese valet Tatso (Y. Aonami) is killed by the poisoned dart projected from the Dyak blowgun—the sheriff arrives to solve the mystery and then follows a wild chase after the Malay and his confederates, Helen being in the thick of the melee at all times.

The photography is clearcut and this episode ranks well with the high tone of its predecessors, the idea of which is to regain the Kaderan ruby.

The personnel of the cast includes also True Boardman, Frank Jonassen, Edward Clisbee and Jack Rahm. Marian Sais as Barbara Brent is sustaining the story's interest remarkably well. Released Wednesday, December 6.

"The Trunk Mystery"

(Kalem—One Reel)
REVIEWED BY F. G. SPENCER

HAZARDOUS indeed are the exploits which George Larkin as Tommy Grant the Police Reporter is forced to go through, but he "gets there" and in this his latest endeavor he reveals a murder of half a decade ago.

The story, as graphically told through the medium of the lens opens with the opening of a trunk in the attic of a house leased by a Mrs. Montt (Mary Taylor Ross) and the discovery of a skull therein. This same skull has a hole which the reporter decides is a bullet hole and figuring back five years he unearths the details of a mysterious disappearance about that time.

He therefore causes to be inserted in his paper an advertisement to the effect that Monsieur Darnac (T. Justin Dow)—whose skull it was —would meet Babette (Ollie Kirkby) at an appointed hour and an appointed spot. Babette's father Henri Theophile (William McKey) saw the notice and though horrified determines to appear at the rendezvous and there is disclosed the fact that he shot and killed M. Darnac, for whose artistic efforts Babette was posing.

The picturization is good, the acting is better and the general ensemble is best.

"The Matrimaniac"

(Triangle-Fine-Arts—Five Reels)
REVIEWED BY PETER MILNE

"THE Matrimaniac," another Douglas Fairbanks vehicle should prove welcome to his followers, although it can hardly be expected to win him new admirers. We don't get quite enough of Fairbanks the athlete and Fairbanks the comedian in this to satisfy our desires awakened by the remembrance of other Fairbanks pictures. Its humor springs from the many entanglements in which an eloping couple find themselves and the story was spread over five reels only after careful stretching.
